FULTON'S NEW SERVICE

With this issue of The Evening Times a beginning is made in the campaign of "Community Building," which will continue for one year, at the rate of one edition each week. While the campaign is an expensive one to maintain, because of the cartoons which accompany the service, it is to be done with at least one great object in view—that of bidding farewell at the end of the year to the habit of buying from the mail order houses and from the merchants of Syracuse who pay big rates for advertising in the papers of that city in order to reach the people of this and any other community within trading distance.

We believe that in conducting the campaign we shall derive much pleasure—and, we hope, some profit. We believe we have a moral and legal right to the latter. On that score we are making no pretenses, and will not deceive our readers; but yet the thing of paramount importance is the service we hope to render the merchants of Fulton by making it easy and profitable for the people to do business with them. It will be observed as each cartoon and editorial appears that they are hard hitting—straight-from-the-shoulder. The cartoons will be like sticks in the hands of someone who knows how to use a stick. Abraham Lincoln is responsible for our belief in sticks. He says "There's a mighty amount of character in sticks. . . . . . Have you ever noticed how a stick in one's hand will change his appearance?"

In almost every community in the land one finds the need of a stick, which need not be more than a symbol; but as long as Fulton is no exception to the rule, we are not going to spare the use of the hickory, believing that when the campaig shall have ended the people—our hundreds of readers —will be benefited by the appearance of things to the fullest extent; that then they will see the folly of out of town buying, and will cease to offend.

Out of town buying is worse than belief in a contagious disease. Some people plead ignorance to the charge, but the habit is inexcusable just the same. It may appear as a small thing, but the smallest are often the most difficult things to deal with. And that is one reason why The Evening Times intends to take up the cudgel, in cartoon and editorial. The time is ripe for the work, and aside from the hope of receiving some financi. ward, it will do us good if we succeed in saying something that has added a mite to relieving the burdens of the merchants of Fulton; in starting some mind to thinking along lines that will lead to greater results in this the "Trade-at-Home" era. If the new service to Fulton's real merchants happens to hit hard, it will be your fault. Remember at all times, that what we do is for the good of the community.

DUN'S REPORT

Dun's Review of last week says:

The best previous records of production and distribution, of earnings and wages, are steadily surpassed. Even after great expansion, legitimate enterprise shows continued augmentation, though various influences combine to hinder its growth. Consumptive requirements, however, are sustained in unprecedented volume, and industrial facilities, while constantly improved and increased, are inadequate to handle all the work there is to be done. A widening discrepancy between the contracts offered and those actually closed is noted in about every leading line, many manufacturers, either through inability or disinclination to further extent commitments, having turned considerable business away. That such facts appear, in spite of the pronounced rise in prices, is one of the most remarkable features of the times. Only in relatively few instances have the extremely high costs restricted new demands, and reports of premiums for prompt shipments are by no means uncommon. Delivery problems, however, still bulk large; at a period when unchecked operations are essential producers are handicapped by the shortage of raw materials and of skilled labor, by strikes at numerous points and by the transportation congestion, which, though less serious than previously, continues a source of annoyance. Practically all the industries are running far behind on orders and while in certain lines part of the output for next year is already sold; in many cases business is not now being booked that far ahead. In some branches, notably steel and leather, difficulties in obtaining urgently needed supplies increase rather than diminish, but in textiles the outlook is improved by the negotiations for the importation of a large quantity of dyes from Germany. It is significant, as illustrating the greater ability and disposition of the people to purchase, that retail dealings are maintained in extensive volume, notwithstanding adverse weather. The backward spring has naturally retarded distribution somewhat, but the movement continues very full and general merchandise buying indicates an unusual advance selection of fall and winter goods, with more dealers taking advantage of available discounts. Local banking resources have undergone further depletion and money rates are working slightly higher, but funds are ample for all legitimate purposes and nothing resembling stringency is to be expected. That investors are sharing in the present prosperity is shown by the increased and extra dividend declarations, and the May disbursements will be $5,000,000 larger than last year. Prices of securities recovered substantially from the recent sharp break—gaining $1.39 in the average for sixty rails, and $2.05 for ten industrials—and both cotton and wheat also advanced, the latter on continuance of bullish crop advices.

BILLY SUNDAY'S LATEST CAMPAIGN

Billy Sunday has just completed an eight weeks' evangelistic campaign at Baltimore. Over a million and a half have attended Billy's revival services and of these 23,000 have "hit the trail."

And incidentally Evangelist Sunday has received as an offering from those attending the tabernacle $50,000. That is a lot of money for eight weeks' work. But undoubtedly the twenty-three thousand souls who "hit the trail" will consider it little enough. Two dollars a soul is a good investment for Baltimore.

Billy Sunday's final meeting at Baltimore was marked by an incident that will be read with interest by thousands of men who are not exactly Billy Sunday admirers. And they will pause, perhaps a moment, and consider. The incident was the "trail hitting" of "Home Run" Baker.

J. Franklin Baker, the home run king and third sacker for the Yankees, stepped from the ranks and along with four other Yankee ball players and the trainer, hit the saw-dust trail.

Opinions

WHEN "BOLTING" REPRESENTS AMERICANISM

Is there no place for the honest, hard working, peace loving Filipino behind the aegis of humanity? Must this ward of the nation stand alone and apart, a sacrifice upon the altar of American politics?

Democratic leadership at Washington has decreed that this is to be the Filipino fate, but not all democrats of the House of Representatives will respond to the party lash. Some—apparently enough to prevent the writing of such a disgraceful chapter in American history as the democratic party under Cleveland attempted to write in regard to Hawaii—stand squarely against "scuttle."

No American possessing even primary knowledge of the Philippines believes it possible for the people of the islands to maintain and protect independence in the period of "from two to four years" provided by the Jones bill, nor does any Filipino of even primary intelligence believe this possible. Withdrawal of the wholly beneficent American protectorate at this time or within the period contemplated would be abandonment of the Filipino people to become prey of more militant Orientals. Incidentally, this would mean placing the only Christian people of the Orient at the mercy of a puissant paganism.

Democratic Representatives who refuse to support the independence provision of the Jones bill are playing the better part by this nation by the Filipino people, by true humanity and by the political party of their allegiance.

Nothing could be less wise than the effort of democratic leadership to make the Philippine question an issue of politics. It is an American question to be eventually solved according to the dictates of the American conscience, and has no place in any party caucus. "Bolting" such a caucus in a credit to the bolters.—N. Y. Herald.

THE BAROMETER SIZZLES

The United States Steel Corporation alone doesn't constitute the barometer of business, but it is a large share of it. If the steel trade is a fair index to business conditions in the country, as business men often say, then we have in the first quarterly report of the big steel corporation a little straw which shows which way the tide is flowing.

The big corporation hit the top notch of earnings. In three months it earned $60,713,000. The last quarter was a record breaker, but the total stood at only $51,232,000. The next quarter points to over $70,000,000. If the corporation should maintain its March earnings throughout the year, the total would be about $272,600,000—and that is going some for just a single company in a country with several other steel corporations.

Business seems to be going along fairly well. The index points to activity in industries other than steel, and when the reports of earnings, increase in wages, etc., etc., are looked over, the barometer is found to be telling the truth.

What an awful calamity will happen, though, after the war when all of these mills and factories will have to close up because of the inflowing flood of cheap goods made by crippled Europe! And how Europe will have to work to produce the flood since the amount of American business is many times more than Europe ever did, even counting what Europe herself consumes!— Utica Observer.

What the Engineers are Doing

THIRTY thousand American engineers are making a card index survey of American industry so that it may be prepared for its vital part in defending the Country, if need comes. The past eighteen months have taught us here in America what lack of industrial preparedness has meant to some of the countries now at war. These nations had the ships and they had the men; but when the hour struck, their factories were not able to furnish the colors with arms and shells and powder. Their factories were not prepared. And our factories are not prepared.

But it is not enough to draw a moral. In the United States five great Engineering Societies — Civil, Mining, Mechanical, Electrical and Chemical — have pledged their services to the Government of the United States, and are already working hand in hand with the Government to prepare industry for the national defense. They receive no pay and will accept no pay. All they seek is opportunity to serve their country, that she may have her industries mobilized for defense.

All elements of the nation's life — the manufacturers, the business men, and the workingmen — should support this patriotic and democratic work of the engineers, and assist them cheerfully when asked. There can be no better national insurance against war.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, representing all advertising interests have offered their free and hearty service to the President of the United States, in close co-operation with these five Engineering Societies; to the end that the Country may know what the Engineers are doing. The President has accepted the offer. The Engineers have welcomed the co-operation.

This advertisement, published without cost to the United States, is the first in a nation-wide series to call the country to the duty of co-operating promptly and fully with the Engineers.

NAVAL CONSULTING BOARD OF THE UNITED STATES

HELD IN COAL SIX HOURS.

Victim Was Released When Hole Was Sawed In Elevator.

Elkhart, Ind.—Clarence Eddy, aged sixty-six, yard manager for Godfrey & Son, coal dealers, was held in a perilous position in the vortex of a big coal bin for six hours.

He was freed when a hole twelve feet square was sawed in the siding of the elevator, permitting the coal to drop out and relieve the pressure on one of his legs, which had been held knee deep in the constantly shifting coal.

Eddy then climbed up a ladder to safety. He complained only of cold. The temperature was 20 above zero. During his "imprisonment" Eddy had been supplied with hot coffee from time to time.

Eddy and Walter Lehman had been working at the gate at the bottom of the sixteen foot bin which contained 209 tons of finely crushed coal. Because a crust of ice had formed on the top the coal did not drop as fast as desired, and Eddy went to the top and struck the crust with an iron bar. The "roof" collapsed, and he went down with the mass ten feet and within six feet of the gate.

BOY HAS 14 GRANDPARENTS.

Unusual Wealth of Relatives Claimed For Indiana Youth.

Delphi, Ind.—Dean Overholser, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Overholser, who live in the eastern part of Carroll county, has fourteen grandparents, ten of them blood relatives and four grandparents by marriage.

Following is the list: Grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Overholser, George McManama and Mrs. James Bridge; great-grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Overholser, Mr. and Mrs. William McManama, Isaac Wagoner and Mrs. Rachel Richardson. George McManama and his first wife, who is now Mrs. James Bridge, separated, and each married again. Thus the little Overholser is entitled to four more grandparents because of the fact that one's grandfather's wife is his grandmother and one grandmother's husband is his grandfather. The second Mrs. George McManama, who was Orpha Johnson, and the second husband of Mrs. Bridge are also grandparents. Mrs. Bridge's mother, Mrs. Margaret Bridge, is living as well as the mother of Orpha Johnson, which gives Dean Overholser fourteen grandparents.

FIND 20 INDIAN SKELETONS.

Supposition That They Were Buried Near Where They Fell In Battle.

Oregon City, Ore.—While excavating for a basement near the river bank workmen employed by Frank Busch uncovered twenty skeletons of Indians in one hole.

The bodies are supposed to be the remains of Indians killed in battle, for in one or two cases arrowheads have been found caught between the bones.

The first trace of the bones was found early in the week, when the workmen uncovered a skull. It was buried by itself, and Mr. Busch, who had studied the find carefully, believes that it belonged to a chief or leader.

To prevent disturbing the bones the workmen began excavating in another place, and they found a hole with a radius of about six feet which Mr. Busch estimates contains the bones of at least twenty Indians. The skeletons are lying like the spokes of a wheel with the skulls in the center. Over the top of the grave was a thick, hard layer of baked clay that was hardened like stone.

SPAIN'S KING BUSY

Acts as Medium in Sending News to Soldiers and Families.

RECEIVES 1,000 NOTES DAILY.

Alfonso and Secretary Have Been Instrumental in Bringing About Communication Between 120,000 Families and Their Relatives Among Soldiers.

Madrid.—The king and queen of Spain and their family have spent the past few months here, although the king has been on various shooting excursions, making visits to his friends in the country. Among his hosts have been the Duke of Tarifa, who has a great estate near Cadiz, and Count Gavea, who entertained his majesty at Santa Cruz de Mudela. Returning to Madrid from one of these excursions to open a workmen's club, the king was saved from running over one of his subjects by the quick wit of the chauffeur. As the royal car was entering the Puerta Del Sol a man attempting suicide threw himself before the car. The same person, who had been declared a maniac, tried to enter the royal palace last November, telling the attendants that the king owed him a small sum of money, and he wanted to get it.

The queen has been entertaining her brother, Prince Leopold of Battenburg, now returned to London after a visit to

KING ALFONSO.

Paris. He has been recuperating his health and was allowed to leave the army through the influence of his mother, Princess Beatrice, who has been inconsolable over the loss of her youngest son, Prince Maurice, who was killed on the battlefield in October, 1914. Prince Leopold is now staying with his mother at Kensington palace, London.

Queen Victoria has not taken an active interest in social affairs during the winter and spring, having had some weeks of ill health and preferring to spend most of her time with her children. The youngest, Prince Gonzalo, eighteen months old, is a splendid big baby and the pet of the family. It is amusing to see the solicitude manifested for him by his eldest brother, Alfonso, Prince of the Asturias, who will succeed his father upon the throne. Prince Alfonso is nearing his ninth year, and while he formerly resembled his mother, there is now a striking likeness to King Alfonso. The prince spends about half of the day out of doors. He has been trained in various sports and is divided in his love for his pony and for his little motorcar, which he is sometimes allowed to run by himself around the avenues of the palace park.

King Alfonso and his private secretary, Don Emilio Torres, have been instrumental in bringing about communication between 120,000 families in France and their relatives among the soldiers who are prisoners of war. The king receives from 800 to 1,000 letters every day in connection with this work, which he has voluntarily assumed, of getting news back and forth between the prisoners of war and their families. His offices are at the service of the humblest servant girl as well as the princess.

CHAMPION HAND FISHERMAN.

Penn Yan (N. Y.) Woman Catches Big Whitefish After Struggle.

Penn Yan, N. Y.—Mrs. Jennie Pratt is probably the champion hand fisherman. Mrs. Pratt, who lives at the foot of Keuka lake, caught a big palatable whitefish with her hands after a considerable struggle, during which she struck her face on a cake of ice.

She saw what looked like a piece of ice floating on the water. Investigation showed it was a whitefish swimming on the water surface. She caught it with her hands, but he wriggled away. Mrs. Pratt dropped to her knees, thrust her arm to her shoulder in the water, struck her cheek on a cake of ice, but caught that fish.

Robs Prisoner In Jail.

EDITING SHAKESPEARE.

Nicholas Rowe, Poet Laureate, Was the First to Attempt It.

The first folio was printed partly from the earlier quartos and partly from manuscript copies in the hands of players. It did not have the careful editing that so important a work should have had, but it preserved from destruction a number of the plays that had not appeared in quarto form.

Nicholas Rowe, poet laureate and dramatist, in his edition of 1709 made the first attempt to edit Shakespeare in the modern sense. He modernized spelling, punctuation and grammar, added lists of dramatis personae and divided the acts and scenes properly. Since his time editors have been busily engaged in corrections and emendations.

Alexander Pope, the second editor, issued his Shakespeare in 1723, and this was followed in 1733 by Lewis Theobald's edition, whose bitter attack upon Pope in "Shakespeare Restored" led to the latter's making Theobald the dull and pedantic hero of his "Dunciad." The handsome edition by Sir Thomas Hanmer appeared in 1744 and William Warburton's in 1747. Dr. Samuel Johnson's edition was published in 1765. Then came Edward Capell's in 1767-68, George Steevens' in 1773, Joseph Rann's in 1786-94 and Edward Malone's in 1790.—New York Times.

SECRET OF A FLOWER.

How Did the Trumpet Vine Discover the Bared Stump?

If some one advanced the theory that this plant had some unknown power of reasoning you would probably reply that "plants can't reason because they have no mind." You may change your opinion after you hear this story, related by Royal Dixon, who writes entertainingly about how near like human beings in their actions plants are.

The story is about a trumpet vine, the favorite of many an old fashioned garden. About twenty feet from where it grew was an old pine stump with the bark on. One day a fire was built about the foot of the stump, and the bark was burned off.

Immediately the trumpet vine sent forth a long trailer across the garden to the stump. It raised the tendrils, felt the smooth surface of the stump and started to climb. Before long the whole blackened surface was hidden beneath the leaves and blossoms of the new vine.

With the rough bark on the stump provided no surface for the clinging tendrils of the vine. After the fire destroyed the bark the vine found a place to climb.

How did the plant know that the fire had prepared the stump? We don't know. Ask the flower.—Philadelphia North American.

Cellini's Quick Cure.

Benvenuto Cellini when about to cast his famous statue of Perseus, now in the Loggia dei Lanzi at Florence, was taken with a sudden fever. In the midst of his suffering one of his workmen rushed into his sick chamber and exclaimed, "Oh, Benvenuto, your statue is spoiled, and there is no hope whatever of saving it!" Cellini said that when he heard this he gave a howl and leaped from his bed. Dressing hastily, he rushed to his furnace and found his metal "caked." He ordered dry oak wood and fired the furnace fiercely, working in a rain that was falling, stirred the channels and saved his metal. He continues the story thus: "After all was over I turned to a plate of salad on a bench there and ate with a hearty appetite and drank together with the whole crew. Afterward I retired to my bed, healthy and happy, for it was two hours before morning, and slept as sweetly as if I had never felt a touch of illness."

The Exclusive X. Club.

One of the most exclusive of clubs was the X, whose last surviving member was Lord Avebury. It was founded by a little coterie of literary scientists, including Sir Joseph Hooker and Herbert Spencer, and, though intended to comprise ten members, never got beyond nine, because no tenth was found who came up to the two requirements of mental caliber and intimacy with the other nine. Many names for the club were suggested and rejected before a member's wife proposed terming it after the unknown quantity X.—London Opinion.

DOG HAS LUXURY.

Lives in a Fifteen Room House in Boston and Has Valet.

DAILY FOOD ALLOWANCE $1.50

Jap Sees That Large Bed Is Made Smoothly, That He Gets His Bath and Medicine and Awakes Him For a Tramp in the Woods.

Boston.—Few persons in Greater Boston know that Cohasset is the abode of royalty.

Yet down in Cohasset, off beautiful Jerusalem road, high up on a great estate, in a fifteen room house, with a splendid big bed for himself, with an allowance of $1.50 a day for meals and with a Japanese valet to attend him night and day, lives his imperial highness Prince, a monster Great Dane dog.

The palace of Prince is situated on an eminence. Far above it towers the residence of Ernest G. Howes, who lives in winter on Commonwealth avenue and who is a wealthy Boston man. He is gracefully permitted by H. I. M. to occupy one of the finest homes in Cohasset, just above Prince's palace.

This is in return for a favor done Prince by Mr. Howes. Mr. Howes, while still in his early days of youth, purchased him. Though the base mercantile transaction must have hurt Prince's dog heart, he never winced and swallowed the humiliation with royal fortitude and regal philosophy. Mr. Howes installed him in the palace just below, and Prince, out of gratitude, has permitted Mr. Howes' residence near him ever since. This was about a year and a half ago.

Should you desire an audience with his majesty an interview first with one Toku Kobe, valet, is desirable. In fact, the prince's valet is quite talkative in regard to his majesty's tastes and customs.

"It is pleasant to know that Prince likes one," said the reporter. "What does he usually desire for a repast?" he asked, with some apprehension.

"Ah, the expense is great, sometimes $10 in the month for meat alone and only the best."

"You provide"—

"Yes; each day I travel to the town to purchase provisions. I buy the best of meat. Cost it 22 cents or 25 cents, it does not matter if it is only good. He eats sometimes more, sometimes less, than two and one-half pounds each day."

"And besides?"

"He is very fond of bone—just bone. Few people care for bone, but he likes it. I expend, it may be, 10 cents, 15 cents, 20 cents, daily for bone. But that is not all. Speaking of the table, he requires some fifty to sixty pounds of dog biscuit each month, for he is also very fond of dog biscuit. That is most expensive. I have paid 10 cents, even more, for each pound of dog biscuit that goes upon the table.

"He will now go to the supper. Following that he goes to the bath, for he is most carefully groomed," said the Hon. Kobe, while the reporter thought of what they say about some folks' aversion to bathing.

"After the bath," continued the Hon. Kobe, leading H. I. M. into the antechamber, then into the interior of the palace, "he wanders about the house—there are actually more than fifteen apartments in it—and then when he desires he retires. It is my duty to see that the bath water is not too hot nor too cold; that he receives the medicines prescribed by the physician; that the bed is made properly and smoothly, the linen changed and the lights extinguished. I awake him in the morning, bathe him and give breakfast, after which he goes for a tramp in the woods, usually attended by me. Thus the day passes and keeps me very preoccupied. As Mr. Howes had no other place at Prince's disposal, he has kept this house open through the winter season especially for Prince."

JOURNEY OF AN EGG.

Consumer Paid 20 Cents a Dozen More Than Producer Got.

Russell, Kan.—A. J. Olson, a Russell county farmer, who sells hundreds of dozens of eggs annually, recently wrote on an egg a request for the consumer to write him and inform him where the egg was purchased at retail and what the cost was.

Olson sold his product to a Russell dealer for 25 cents a dozen. The eggs were then shipped to Ellsworth, from where they were shipped to Pendleton, Ore., by express.

The Oregon retail merchant paid 34½ cents a dozen, and they were retailed at 45 cents, that being the price paid by the woman in Oregon who broke the egg bearing Olson's letter. Olson received a letter from her this week, and she gave the details of the egg's career and end in the far northwest.

Trolling, Caught Baby Seal.

Portland, Ore.—A baby white seal, said to be a rare specimen, was presented to the city park zoo here recently, the gift of United States Deputy Marshal Frank T. Berry. The seal was caught with a spoon hook in the Siuslaw river, near Florence, Ore., while Berry was trolling for trout.

Dog Swallows Hatpin.

Pittsburgh.—A hatpin seven inches long has been removed from the stomach of Kink, a Boston terrier belonging to Miss Alice Stewart of Williamsburg, by a surgeon. The dog had been ill for several days, and an operation was decided upon. The pin lay lengthwise in the dog's stomach.

COST A DIAMOND FOR EACH TIME JILTED

Youth Has Only Three Remaining of Original Seven in Locket—Hopes to Find a True Lover.

Kansas City, Mo.—A well dressed young man walked into a loan office here. He brought forth his pocketbook and paid the interest on money he had borrowed on a locket.

Then he asked Frank Nevin, appraiser, to be allowed to see the trinket. Nevin produced it. The young man examined it and grew confidential.

"That locket," he said, "represents four love affairs gone astray. You will notice four of the seven diamonds with which it was originally set are missing. It was four years ago that I became engaged the first time. The girl suggested I take a diamond from the locket for our engagement ring. I have been engaged three times since, and every time I have used one of the diamonds. The girls have broken their engagements and then kept the ring.

"You see these three remaining stones? I hope to be able to find a girl that will keep her promise before they are all gone."

Mr. Nevin said the diamonds in the locket were worth about $75 each.

WEDS LOSER OF PHOTO.

Planter Traveled Throughout Middle West Six Months Seeking Ideal.

Hudsonville, Mich.—George N. Howard, a planter of Birmingham, Ala., found a handbag on the Panama-Pacific exposition grounds at San Francisco last September. The bag contained the photograph of a young woman. On the picture was written the name "Wisconsin."

Howard fell in love and for six months traveled throughout the middle west seeking his ideal. He found her here.

The bride was Miss Nettie Telsma of Oshkosh, Wis.

Flying Hen Drops Egg.

Bluefield, W. Va.—What is believed to be the first time on record of a hen laying an egg in midair was the unusual accomplishment of a brown leghorn in the express office at Graham. The hen was in a coop of chickens. After the coop had been placed on a truck the brown leghorn escaped, and while flying dropped a snow white egg into space. John Jones, a colored roustabout, who was pursuing the hen, caught the egg as it dropped.

HONEST GIRL RETURNS $200 AND GETS $75,000

Story of New Brunswick (N. J.) Teacher's Act Reaches Coast, Where Cousin Made Her Heir.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Once more pointed morals which adorn the tales on the shelves of Sabbath school libraries have been upheld. Honesty is at times the best policy, and Miss Ethel Adele Wood can prove it. People called her overscrupulous when she returned to the board of education $200 which she felt she didn't earn. Now they're calling her lucky since she realized $75,000 by her investment.

The board of education was paying Miss Wood's expenses in a training school for teachers of defective children. She left to take another position and returned to the board the price of her instruction. Such unusual honesty was featured in the New Brunswick papers. One of these, no one knows how, reached the Pacific coast. Recently a letter from Los Angeles informed the upright girl that she was heir to $75,000 through the death of her cousin, William B. French. Thus was virtue rewarded.

WAR EMANCIPATES THE TURKISH WOMEN

Veils Being Discarded or Modified, and Theaters Will Soon See Native Actresses Is Belief.

Constantinople.—Since the allies abandoned the Dardanelles attack Constantinople has become normal and is now as far removed from the theater of war as any big city in neutral countries. The cafes and motion picture houses are well attended, and the theaters are crowded. Recently there was a big first night in the Petit Champs, the occasion being the performance of a French comedy. The actors were Turks, but the actresses were all Armenians, as Turkish women are not yet permitted to appear on the stage, but the general opinion is expressed by all thinking Turks that before long their women will make their first appearance as actresses.

The emancipation of women in Turkey has made remarkable progress since the beginning of the war. In the best society in Constantinople the women no longer wear their veils when receiving their guests. Though veils continue to be worn by the Turkish women in the street, still the fashion has made them so flimsy and transparent that they might just as well be dispensed with.

Consequently all the fascination and mystery that heretofore has surrounded the harem has suddenly disappeared. There is no longer any such thing, and in its place there is simply the usual family life. The Turkish woman is as much a housewife as her European sister, and in this war her resources have been taxed to the utmost. Despite the fact that the rich agricultural country of Anatolia is not far distant, the prices of all necessaries of life have increased enormously.

Turkey has awakened from its long lethargy, and the war has brought a new life in the empire. Progress is now the keynote, and the indications are that within a few years Constantinople will be one of the most advanced cities in the world.

WOMEN NOT REAL ANGLERS.

New York Commissioner Pratt, Therefore, Would Let 'Em Fish Free.

Albany, N. Y.—"Women," says Conservation Commissioner Pratt, "do not constitute a factor of importance in the fishing situation."

Therefore Mr. Pratt recommends that the fair sex, as are children under sixteen years of age, be exempt from the provisions of his bill to compel fishermen to take out an annual license costing $1.10.

"It is not desired," he adds, "to put any burden upon these young fishermen."

Under the bill a license is not required to catch suckers, bullheads, carp or other plebeian fish, but to catch fish propagated by the state the $1.10 fee must be paid.

The Baby's Room.

For the wee baby a nursery room separate from the living apartments of the family is especially important. Quiet, sunshine and good air are first requisites for the child's well being, and these are not easily secured when he is moved hither and thither to different parts of the dwelling as suits the convenience of his elders. The din and clatter and bustle of work and the confusion of movements, sights and noises are bewildering and harmful to the little one's sensitive nerves and brain.—Good Health.

"Behold I Stand at the Door and Knock," the Theme Last Night

"Trail Hitting" was the order of the day at all of yesterday's Peacock services. In the morning 628 persons responded to the Evangelist's appeal, 81 at the afternoon service; and 177 in the evening. The Evangelist said that never in the history of his party had the number been reached upon making the first appeal.

The attendance at the tabernacle, Saturday and Sunday reached 7500 persons, divided as follows:

Saturday evening	2100
Sunday morning	2000
Sunday afternoon	1100
Sunday evening	2300

A most pleasing feature of the Saturday evening meeting was furnished by the children's chorus, under the leadership of Mr. Warth and Mr. Davidson, pianist.

This will be a busy week in the big shed, beginning with tomorrow evening, when the Congregationalists will march there in a body. The Billy Sunday Business Men's League of Syracuse and East Syracuse will come tomorrow night as well.

Immediately after the regular Wednesday afternoon services Mr. Warth will conduct Bible study classes, and the evening service will be attended by the membership of the Free Methodist church. Delegations from Bowens Corners, Lysander, North Volney, Mt. Pleasant and Hawks will also be present. Thursday afternoon Miss Speer will meet the high school girls in the Tabernacle immediately after school.

A large attendance is expected Thursday night when the Salvation Army corps, together with a Syracuse corps, will march to the tabernacle headed by a band of music. Friday night will be Odd Fellows' night, and a special service for children will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:30 by Evangelist Peacock. Thursday night a delegation of business women who will first enjoy supper and a rally at the Presbyterian church, marching from there to the tabernacle in a body.

Last night's sermon was in part as follows:

The second and third chapters of the book of Revelation are taken up with letters addressed to the different churches. Seven epistles have been written to seven different churches. Each church has its own prevailing sins. Each in turn is rebuked, and warned, and hope if offered if the church will do better in the future. The prevailing sin of the church of Laodicea was worldiness. The spirit of wordliness was so strong it was carrying everything before.

Laodicea was a very wealthy and beautiful city. There was a great stream of traffic continually flowing through it, and its inhabitants became very rich. At the time this letter was sent them they were building for themselves one of those large amphitheatres which the Greeks and Romans of the day were wont to build in all their chief cities, and where those too often barbarous degrading sports were carried on. The church in this place was one of considerable importance. At one time it was in a very flourishing condition. It exerted a mighty influence among the people for God. It had been doing a great work. But a sad change has come over them. They have lost interest in spiritual things. The spirit of the world has crept in and crushed the spirit of Jesus out. And the description we have of this church is this: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot, I would thou were cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth. This reveals to us that the church in this place had lost the spirit of self-sacrificing love which springs from a vigorous faith, and which makes a church glow with holy fervor and sacred heat. The church was nothing at all in the service of God. It was neither one thing nor the other.

Living, Yet Dead

We find this same condition existing among the churches today. How many churches, and how many church going people can see them-selves portrayed in this letter to the church of Laodecia. A great many churches and church people are neither hot nor cold in the service of God. Of course the churches are just what the people make them. A great many churches and church people have a name to live, but are dead. They have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof.

The church is supposed to be filled with the spirit of Jesus. It is supposed to be a place where the people worship God. Where the people honor God; where the people are filled with the spirit of God. A place where the people are filled with the Holy Spirit and have been baptized with the Spirit and with fire. There should be a Pentecost in the church all the time. This is what distinguishes the church from the world. And where this spirit of devotion is lacking the Holy Spirit has no chance to do His work. This was the trouble with the church of Laodicea, and it is the trouble with a great many churches in the world today.

And a great many people in the church like to have things just this way. God makes them shiver; and heat scorches them—they like neither; but to be moderately warm, they seem to think this the best and safest way to keep the church. They congratulate themselves upon being moderate, sober-minded people, and they pity the poor deluded enthusiasts, to whom it is a dreadful thing that sin and sorrow should prevail as thye do, and who are in the very forefront of the battle against them. They have a very good opinion of the people who want to do something in the service of God. They are enthusiastic in the things of the world, but very cold in the service of God. The seen and the temporal have usurped in their minds the place of the unseen and eternal. No doubt many of them regarded their worldly prosperity as a token of Divine favor, and were soothing themselves with the reflection that they have made the best of both worlds, when they have really sacrificed everything to one world, and that the lower of the two. Jesus saw this pitiable condition of the church, and revealed the true condition to them. And by revealing the true condition. He rebukes and chastens them, but He does not leave them without hope. He says, "As many as I love, I reprove and chasten, be zealous therefore, and repent."

Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will some into him, and will sup with him and he with me. He encouraes the people to a change and repent. He asks for permission to come in. To my mind this is a sad state of affairs. It is the saddest picture of all. The church, the people, and the Lord locked out.

This is what this text means. Many times sermons have been preached to the unconverted and the people on the outside from this passage of Scripture but the words were spoken to the church of Laodicea. Now to my mind there is a message here to the people in the church and to the people in the world. There is great danger of Jesus being put out of our churches. It may seem strange, but it is true, we sometimes lost Jesus in the house of God. Sometimes Jesus is not permitted to take part in the service.

Christ is Barred

And where style and worldly pleasures rule in the church Jesus has been put out. Probably we would be surprised if we really knew how many churches have closed the door against Jesus. No doubt we would be astounded if we knew just how often Jesus has to knock to get inside some of the places called the church of Christ. The trouble with many churches is this: We have too much worldliness and not enough Christlikeness. We want to be in the church, but at the same time serve the devil. We congratulate ourselves, because we have been successful in gathering about us the things of this world, and we think this is an indication that we are all right in the service of the Master. This was the idea entertained by the people of Lodicea.

How are we going to open the door and let Him in? Are we going to permit Him to rule in the church? Are we going to permit Him to rule our lives? When all the Christian people permit Jesus to rule in their lives then Jesus will rule in the church. But if we are not willing to permit Him to have full control in our lives, He will never have full control in the church. Now are we going to keep the door shut against Him? God forbid. We can do this. We have the power to do it. But we can open the door. Let us open it.

In the silent midnight watches, list! thy bosom door! How it knocketh, knocketh, knocketh. Knocketh evermore! Say not 'tis thy pulse is beating; 'Tis thy heart of sin; 'Tis thy Savior knocks and cometh; "Rise and let me in." Death comes on with reckless footsteps. To the hall and hut; Think you, death will tarry knocking. Where the door is shut? Jesus waiteth, waiteth, waiteth, But the door is fast. Grieved away thy Savior goeth. Death breaks in at last. Then 'tis time to stand entreating Christ to let thee in. At the gate of heaven beating, waiting for thy sin — Nay, alas, thou guilty creature, hast thou then forgot? Jesus waiting long to know thee, now He knows thee not.

LAW DESCRIBES CASUAL WORKERS

Amendments to Compensation Act in Effect June 1 —Based on Massaro Company's Case.

The Oswego Times contained recently the following:

"All employes on a hazardous employment, including casual employes such as carpenters, painters and other tradesmen working by the hour, will be covered by workmen's compensation insurance in the State insurance fund, beginning June 1. An amendment of the definition of employment, which goes into effect at that time, brings such employes squarely under the law and relieves employes of all liability for their injuries.

"This and other amendments to the workmen's compensation act passed by the Legislature which has just adjourned are designed to settle questions as to common law liability and coverance under the State fund policy.

"One of the first questions as to liability for a casual employe was raised when the Appellate Division, Fourth department, set aside an award to Mrs. Louise Bargey of Fulton for the death of her husband, a carpenter, while doing repair work in the Massaro Macaroni company's plant in Fulton in December, 1914. The case received considerable publicity here because the decision was said to govern liability for such employes.

"At the time of the Bargey decision, it was reported that the award was set aside no the ground that the insurance did not protect the company because Bargey was only a casual employe. It was also reported that the company was insured in the State Fund.

Coverage Not Complete

"F. Spencer Baldwin, manager of the State fund, has written the New York State Road Builders' association informing it that his attention has been called to a circular issued by the Contractors' Service bureau containing a statement of the Bargey decision headed by the charge that "State fund coverage is not complete."

"Mr. Baldwin insists that the insurance of the Messaro Macaroni company was carried by a stock insurance company and not by the State fund. If the State fund had been the insurance carrier, the commission's award to Mrs. Bargey would have been paid promptly, says Mr. Baldwin, and the case would never have been appealed to the courts.

"In this connection, Mr. Baldwin also points out another recent amendment which permits an employer to elect compensation for all his employes irrespective of whether they are specifically included within the provision of the act.

"The new amendment will enable the State fund to issue a policy covering completely, beyond the possibility of challenge or question, all existing liability on the part of an employer on account of injuries or death by his employes," concludes Mr. Baldwin.

SUPREME COURT TERM OPENS IN PULASKI

The May term of Supreme Court opened at Pulaski this morning, Justive Irving G. Hubbs presiding. The first case on the first day's calendar is that of Louis Garno vs. Henry P. Burgard. This is the second trial of the action. In the first trial two years ago a verdict of $4,000 was returned for the plaintiff, but this was set aside on appeal. It is claimed that the plaintiff was seriously injured while at work on Barge canal operations here several years ago.

The calendar contains seventy-five cases, a large number of which are negligence actions against the New York Central Railroad company, the New York, Antarion & Western Railroad company and others. It probably will be a long term.

Among the negligence actions are two brought by Edward J. Guirey of Phoenix, one of which has twice been tried, against the Seneca River Power company and the Seneca Improvement company. Guirey sued the power company, alleging damages for injuries received while creosoting lumber for the company. He was awarded a verdict, which was set aside, the claim being made that another company should have been made the defendant.

At the January term in Oswego the two actions were put over to the present term. It was claimed at the time by the plaintiff's attorney, Owen M. Reilley of Phoenix, that Guirey had disappeared last November and he did not know whether his client was dead or alive.

The Grand Jury will sit in connection with the term. District-Attorney Francis D. Culkin of Oswego will have a number of matters to investigate, and among those of local interest in the case of the people against Lyman Lyon and Earl Scott, who were arrested in Rochester, charged with entering the clothing store of Herbert W. Damon and the jewelry establishment of John C. Pouth, in Pulaski.

Children Cry
FOR FLETCHER'S
CASTORIA

"He that Dwelleth in the Secret Place of the Most High Shall Abide Under the Shadow of the Almighty."

Evangelist Peacock's subject yesterday morning was:

Psalm 91:1. He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

This passage of scripture is one of the most wonderful expressions in the word of God. Beautiful because it is poetic, but more than that for the reason that it holds up before us one of the greatest privileges that can come to the children of God. The writer of this Psalm and the occasion on which it was composed are alike. There is no title or internal mark by which we can ascertain, when or by whom, it was written. It may have been composed by the sweet singer of Israel and it may not. It does not matter so very much when or by whom this psalm was composed. One thing is certain and that is that the author of this psalm knew what it meant to dwell in the secret place of the most high and to abide under the shadow of the Almighty. He had experienced in his own soul the power of God to care for and to protect those who have implicit faith in Him for he says in the second verse: "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress, my God, in Him will I trust. Surely He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler and from the noisome pestilence. He shall cover thee with His feathers, and under His wings shall thou trust. His truth shall be thy shield and buckler." Thew riter of this poem knew that God was able to protect His people under all circumstanees and in every position in this life and in the life to come. But in order to have God's protecting care at all times we must fulfill certain conditions. We must do certain things and it is necessary for us to abstain from doing certain things. In order to have the protecting care or God, the individual or individuals must dwel in the secret places of the most High.

The Real Leaders

Now it is true that all Christians do not occupy the same position in this life. Some are richer than others. Some are more intelligent than others, some have more of the love and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ in them than others. Some have more of the spirit of God than others. But all are saved by the same precious blood of Christ. But there is a great deal more in the Christian life than simply being saved. It is all well enough for us to enlist in the army of God in order that we may enjoy the blessing of His Kingdom and do everything in our power to lead others into the secret places of the most High.

Now in order to be able to lead others, to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ we must fulfill the condition set forth in this passage of scripture. God is no respector of persons. His blessings are for all those willing to comply with His requests. Any one who will fulfill the conditions may have the blessing and the condition is that we dwell in the secret place of the most High, and the promise is if we dwell in the secret place of them ost High, we shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. Those who realize that they have been redeemed into the atoning blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, realize that they no longer belong to themselves but to God.

Every true follower of God has a longing desire to dwell in the secret place of the most High. But all the professed followers of God who at certain times and seasons look toward the sanctuary and mercy seat and enjoy occasional glimpses of God but they do not continually abide in His mysterious presence and therefore miss His blessings upon those who dwell in the secret place of the most High all the time. It is possible for every follower of God to dwell in the secret place of the most High all the time. We can have God's presence and blessings with us in our business callings and professions if we will only permit the spirit of God to have full course in us, and keep in close fellowship with God. The Christian is not compelled to be on the mountain top today, and lower down in the valley tomorrow. If he or she does what they ought to do, they can be on the mountain top all the time. And this is where the Christian ought to be in spirit, on the mountain top in the very thickest of the fight for God.

God's spirit does not lift a man up to the most sublime height and then let him fall back into the valley of sin and wickedness, but when we dwell in the secret place of the most High and are under the shadow of the Almighty, then we are interested in the work of God.

Complete Surrender

The reason so many people are careless and indifferent and cold in the work of God in the world is because they have never dwelt with God in the secret place. They have been standing on the outside looking in, and have been afraid to enter for fear God might ask them to do something they did not want to do or to give up some sin they enjoy committing. Such persons are not abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, and are not enjoying the blessings of God. In order to dwell in the secret place of the most High, there must be wholehearted surrender to God of the entire beinfi. A renouncing of sin, a turning from it, a longing desire with the heart to be nearer to God, and enjoy more of His blessings. This is what the Psalmist meant in the 42nd psalm: My soul, O, God, for Thee, for Thee, it thirsts. To Thee it looks and longs the living God, to see, O, why art thou cast down, my soul? And what should so disquiet thee. Still hope in God and Him extol, whose face brings saving help to me." And when we make this wholehearted surrender to God, and turn from the ways of sin and come near to God, and dwell in His secret place and under His shadow, we can say with the Psalmist in the 46th psalm: "God is our strength and refuge High, a sure and present help is He, when dark and troublous days are nigh, hence free from fear our hearts shall be." And when we have met God in his secret place and have been dwelling with Him there, we can repeat in spirit the words of the 103rd psalm: "O my soul, bless thou Jehovah and forget not, all his mercies to proclaim, who forgives all thy transgressions, thy diseases all who heals, who redeems thee from destruction, who with tender mercies crowns thee who with good things fills thy mouth so that even like the eagle, thou hast been restored to youth. Bless Jehovah, all His creatures, ever under His control, all throughout His vast dominion, bless Jehovah, O, my soul.

Now we are all strangers to God until we have dwelt in His secret place. We may be known by God as we all are, for God is everywhere, but we are strangers to Him spiritually until we have come into His secret place and are abiding under His shadow.

The typical reference in this verse is no doubt to the holy place of the tabernacle, which the priests were privileged to enter, but Peter assures us that we have become in this new dispensation, a holy priest-hood, so that it is possible for every follower of Jesus to enter into the secret place. And when we enter into the secret place of the place where God dwells, then we have the assurance of God's presence and blessings. There is a certain insect which has the power to surround itself with a film of air encompassed in which it drops into the midst of muddy, stagnant pools, and remains unhurt. So the believer surrounded with the atmosphere of Christ, can dwell in a world of sin, in the midst of troubles and be filled to overflowing with the peace of God, because God is with him. This is true whatever our occupations may be.

Rev. F. B. Meyer tells us of Lawrence the simple minded cook, who said that for more than sixty years he had not lost the sense of the presence of God, but was as conscious of it while performing the duties of his humble office, as when partaking of the Lord's supper. And what is true to this individual is true of every follower of Jesus. In the secret place of God there is purity. If our surroundings in this world were better our lives would be purer. It is easy to be good in the company of some people, their very presence creates within us a desire to be good, while others have just the opposite influence. To be surrounded by certain kinds of scenery is to be lifted nearer heaven. To touch a little child pure as the angels is to receive a benediction. To dwell in the secret place of the most High and be conscious of God's presence all the time, is to fill the soul with purity, honesty, uprightness and a desire to be more like God and His Son while we are in this world. And the reason more people are not like God and His Son is, because they never dwell in His secret place and are not interested in spiritual things. When men and women do what they ought to do and be what they ought to be, then they have the presence and blessings of God. Now the only way to enter the secret place of the most High is to do what God has commanded us to do. Be faithful and sincere in attending the services in the house of God. Set apart periods when we can be alone, with God. Read His precious word in the right spirit. We cannot meet God if we do not give God an opportunity to meet us. We must do what God wants us to do and if we do, we have the assurance that we are dwelling in the secret place of the most High and we are abiding under the shadow of the Almighty.

KEELER PLACED ON DEAN'S TEAM

James Keeler, son of James E. Keeler, 229 Oneida st., has been assigned to a regular berth on the Dean Academy baseball team, according to a letter received from the young man last week.

Friends of "Jimmie" are not surprised at the news as he has earned a reputation on local diamonds as an A-1 ball player. Two years ago he captained the local high school nine He has also made a name for himself on the basketball court and can be said to be one of the best players who ever represented the high school in basketball.

The young man participated in the series of three basketball games between the Maccabees and High school quintets which were played on the court at Church's Hall last month. Owing to an operation which had been performed on him in the early part of the winter, "Jimmie" did not appear in his usual form.

He left this city in the middle of April to enter Dean Academy, which is one of the best college preparatory schools in the east.

WAR TEACHES MEN LESSON OF THRIFT

Insurance Man Sees One Blessing in European Struggle.

MILLIONS GOING TO WASTE

Those Who Conserve Their Own Resources Must Aid the Helpless, He Asserts—Points Out Vast Riches of the United States and the Number of Dependents.

The present war will be a benefit to the entire world in that it will increase the total efficiency and saving power of the people in the various nations, both those at war and those on this continent, according to a recent statement made by Edward A. Woods, president of the National Life Underwriters' association.

Mr. Woods declared that the United States, with national wealth three times that of France and nearly double that of either Great Britain or Germany, was a shame to the world in the prodigality with which it wasted its substance. Lack of thrift, he asserted, was a menace to the continued prosperity of the country just as surely as the same characteristics displayed in Rome destroyed her world empire.

"We have a wealth of $150,000,000,000 as compared with $85,000,000,000 for England and $80,000,000,000 for Germany," said Mr. Woods. "Moreover, our income of $35,000,000,000 a year is larger in proportion to this wealth than that of any other nation. Not only have we therefore the greatest amount of wealth and the greatest income, but the greatest proportionate income, 23 1-3 per cent, comparing with 14 per cent of Great Britain, 12¼ per cent of Germany and 12 per cent of France. We are increasing our wealth $20,000,000 a day, or $7,000,000,000 a year, our annual increase equaling the entire combined wealth of Holland and Portugal.

Too Many Dependents Here.

"And yet in this great, wealthy country Robert Hunter says that there are 10,000,000 and probably 15,000,000 in poverty. One-third of the population of New York apply for charity in seven years. One person in ten who dies in our large cities is buried in a pauper's grave. There are 1,250,000 dependent wage earners, costing this country $220,000,000 a year for their support who should have laid by enough to support themselves.

"There are 1,990,225 children, ten to fifteen years of age, making a living who ought to be in school. We are supporting about 1,000,000 dependents and delinquents in institutions. There are 18,000,000 wage earners in this country.

"Out of a commerce of the astounding total of nearly $500,000,000,000 we are probably losing $800,000,000 a year by bad credit and paying $2,000,000,000 in interest, this total alone nearly equaling the wealth of thrifty Switzerland.

"What is true of America as a nation is true of many Americans as individuals. We have large incomes, we have great wealth, but we are forgetting that thrift and progress mean the saving of money, and that saving is largely regardless of wealth. It is by no means those of large incomes who comprise the thrifty, frugal, saving portion of our population. It is often the large numbers of persons of moderate means who by their saving and the character building resulting from the saving compose the real bone and sinew of a nation. Why is it that, with all our income, America should rank fifteenth in the proportion of our population carrying savings bank accounts?

"The so called 'American plan' hotel is an illustration of American thriftlessness and waste. We are probably wasting from American tables today enough to feed the entire population of Belgium. It is the thrifty of the country who support its institutions, who give its benefactions, who are supporting not only their own families, but the hospitals, the churches, the colleges or the institutions of the state, who are paying its taxes, who are the citizens upon whom the state, society and the church must rely.

"It is a curious fact that such a destructive process as war is something a benefit to nations. The entire world at the beginning of the present struggle in Europe started to save money. You see war increases the total efficiency and it increases the total saving.

"Let America be not too free to cast criticism upon our foreign warring sister nations. It may be that the increased thrift and the increased efficiency and the increased strength of character brought about by this great crisis so affecting the nations of Europe will do for them as they did for us in our civil war—produce characteristics and produce men and women that in the years following the war may offset the enormous waste and destruction brought about by it.

"Also there are millions of saving Americans. We are not all thriftless. Of the 20,255,555 homes occupied in the United States 9,083,711 are owned, 45.8 per cent of the total, and of these 5,984,284 are unencumbered. There are more Pennsylvanians who own their own homes than citizens of any other state in the Union, New York ranking second, and there are more unencumbered homes in Pennsylvania than in any other state in the Union, Ohio ranking second, Illinois third and New York fourth."

HOMESTEAD COLONIES ARE FOUNDED IN GEORGIA

Families From Crowded Cities Sent to Small Fertile Farms.

During the last half dozen years there have been many forms of encouragement to people from other sections to go to the south and settle, where large tracts of fertile but undeveloped territory are available, but it appears that the work of the Southern Settlement and Development organization of Baltimore, which has branches in other southern points, is meeting with more success than any movement to this end which has yet been attempted.

This organization has already brought a large number of homesteaders to Dixie and in each instance has been successful in getting the newcomers well located and satisfied.

A good example of this work is that recently done near Albany, Ga., in the southern portion of that state. The establishment of the colony of homesteaders at Albany has proved a decidedly greater success than was at first anticipated, and plans are now on foot to send an additional lot of colonists to Georgia from the middle west.

The purpose of the organization is to settle and develop southern farm areas by sending homesteaders from the crowded western and eastern cities. The 3,000 acre plantation of H. W. Johnson, one of the community's biggest planters, was subdivided into forty acre lots. Nineteen families were transported from Chicago and as many homes provided for them on nineteen of the forty subdivisions. Each house and forty acre farm was provided with mules, cows, seeds and a model country residence. The terms are long time deferred payments.

The farm land is fertile. Even some of the most inexperienced farmers among the settlers have found the soil surprisingly productive. Most of these are Russian born American citizens, progressive, ambitious and energetic. They have been in Georgia since November, 1915, and there has not been a note of dissension or dissatisfaction in the entire colony.

The educational features of the settlement promise to set a new epoch in Georgia's agricultural progress. The settlers are being interested in stock growing and diversified farming. The leaders of the colony are looking forward to the time when they can purchase live stock and make their newly acquired interests productive of cattle, as well as general crops.

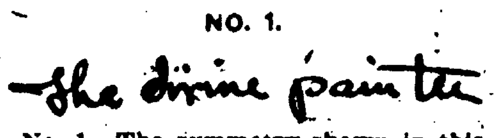
Your Handwriting Shows What You Are

By WILLIAM LESLIE FRENCH

6.—Special Aptitudes—Artistic Taste.

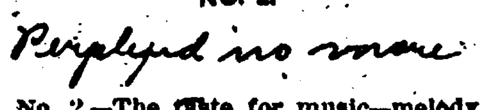
SENSUOUSNESS is the quality which every one possesses who has artistic taste and appreciation. Still, one may not show this trait and yet be a lover of beauty. Curves, simple or original, and the shading of cross and down strokes are the signs that give one the clew to aptitudes for one line of art or another.

NO. 1.



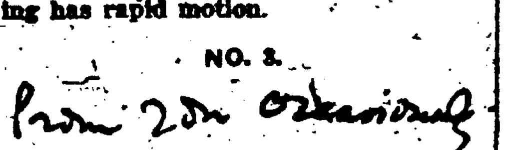
No. 1.—The symmetry shown in this specimen both as regards capitals and small letters, the grace in form of the capitals and the shading throughout reveal talent for color, art in illustrating and design. In many types the shading varies, while the letters are formed like print. Originality in creative work is here found in the capital "T."

NO. 2.



No. 2.—The taste for music—melody—is shown by a swinging pen movement, the bottom strokes being rounded at the bottom. This hand is a very good example of musical appreciation. Similar signs reveal the love of motion—dancing—especially if the writing has rapid motion.

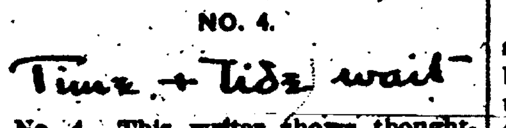
NO. 3.



No. 3.—Where the script exhibits the swinging motion, the rounding of letters, originality of connections, with cross and even down strokes shaded, the writer, as is shown here, has marked talent for creative work and a keen ear to interpret as well.

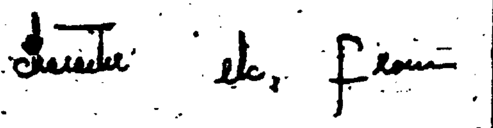
The peculiar and unexpected form of capitals appears in the script of all great musical artists.

NO. 4.



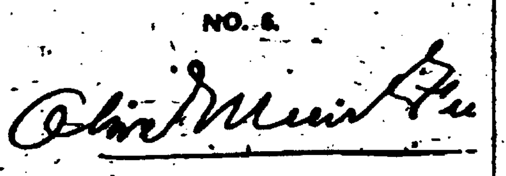
No. 4.—This writer shows thoughtfulness and mental poise, revealed by the vertical hand. But the print-like capitals, graceful and shaded both as to down and cross strokes, endow the writer with a keen eye for color and form, which in this case relates to the fine use of words, coupled with an excellent imaginative faculty. Add the significance of these signs together and you get the short story writer, while the sign of a critical faculty also appears. Small "m" and "n" sharp at the top would indicate a good critic.

NO. 5.



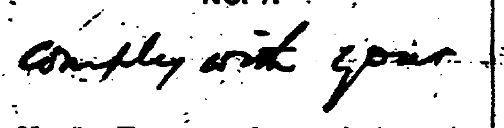
No. 5.—The original formations of this specimen, especially in "f" in "from," joined by the steady rhythm, the even swing and delicate shading, endow the writer with talent for original design. Note the high loopings above the line—imagination.

NO. 6.



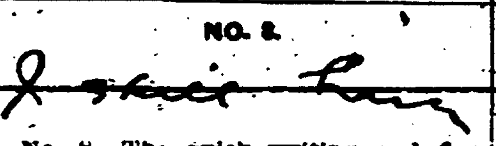
No. 6.—Although there are many styles of writing found among those who are connected with dramatic work, these specimens are good examples of the general indications pointing to this form of art. You observe the flowing script, rather large, with curves and flourishes appearing in the high and wide capitals. Almost invariably there is a wavy movement of the base lines; also here the shading is strongly marked.

NO. 7.



No. 7.—The rapid flow and virile connecting strokes with the shading, taken with the alert thinking capacity shown in the well made words and letters, signify a like talent, with the ability for skillful interpretation along dramatic lines. The general type indicates temperament and versatility.

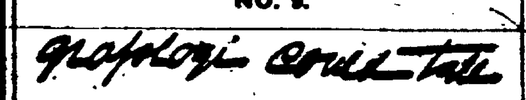
NO. 8.



No. 8.—The quick writing and fine joining together of letters, coupled with the looped extensions of the long letters above the line, show ability for public speaking. The writing may be at another angle, but the significance is similar. Open "a's" and "o's" increase the flow of words.

These few suggestions, if followed, will help the reader to arrive at a decision quickly if put into practice.

NO. 9.



No. 9.—Give an individual force, determination, courage, the power of resistance and an active mind, with balance, and you will see why this writer shows the hallmarks of those who are fitted for warfare. Observe the firmness, positive strokes, uniform pressure, sharp formations, bluntness of "t" crossings.

ANALYZING A HAIR.

Science Reads It as Expert Woodsman Read the Trees.

To the German analyst hair is packed with information. The approximate age and physical condition can be constructed by an examination of a single hair.

The hair of every animal has certain distinguishing characteristics. It is not to be mistaken by a competent investigator. Some animals, as for example the cow, have three types of hair. These will be known by their structure. Under a proper microscopical examination hairs will be as easily distinguished by an expert as varieties of trees in a grove will be distinguished by a forester.

There was a case in which a dagger found on the prisoner had a few short hairs caught entangled in a nick of the blade. He explained this by saying that he had used the dagger to kill a rabbit that he had found trapped in a hedge. The authorities reported to the police, after an examination of the dagger, that the hairs were not of human origin, but they also added they were not rabbit hairs; they were squirrel hairs.

The police were extremely puzzled until they finally discovered that on the night of the homicide the prisoner had worn a great coat trimmed with squirrel fur. He had, in fact, carefully washed the knife after the assassination and thereby removed every evidence of his act; but, unfortunately for him, he made the mistake of attempting to dry the dagger by wiping it on the fur lining of his great coat.—Melville Davisson Post in Saturday Evening Post.

INSECT MARVELS.

These Tireless Creatures Are Built For the Strenuous Life.

Many interesting facts, the result of long study, are given by Mr. Harold Bastin, an eminent entomologist, in his book, "Insects, Their Life Histories and Habits."

"Contrary to popular belief, spiders are not insects. Insects have six legs, neither more nor less, and another peculiarity of the insect is that it has wings—sometimes two, more often four. Spiders have eight legs and no wings; therefore spiders are not insects.

"Insects have no backbones and no skeletons, but skins with a hard, durable surface called chitin, which makes up a light shell of armor that forms the outside of the body, to the inside of which the muscles are attached. Insects do not breathe through their mouths, but through holes in the bodies called spiracles. Insects have neither veins nor arteries; the blood is pumped directly from the chambered heart into the body cavity, where it bathes and nourishes the organs. Insects have wonderful and enviable digestive organs and feed upon and digest almost any substance from which nourishment may be extracted.

"Because of the way they are built, insects are particularly fitted for the strenuous life, and a tired insect is a thing unknown. They are always busy traveling, buzzing, biting or seeking some work to do."

Blossoms That Bees Love.

A person who has had no experience with bees commonly makes the mistake of supposing that the roses, peonies, sweet peas, dahlias or other gaudy blossoms of his garden will furnish a quantity of honey. Their value is almost negligible, except that some of them yield a little pollen. It is to the modest white clover in the orchard or on the roadside or the weeds of pasture or woodlot or the blossoms of trees like the basswood that the bees go for the bulk of their honey. It does not pay to cultivate any plant for its value as a honey producer. The orchard is a splendid place for the apiary, where the bees can build up on the first nectar in the spring, and the blossoms have the benefit of the bees' visits.—John W. Love in Countryside Magazine.

A Cent.

A cent is a little thing, but in the aggregate it is mighty. We speak of the "copper cent," but it is not entirely copper. Its composition is 95 per cent copper, 3 per cent tin and 2 per cent zinc. That alloy is in reality bronze, and the official name of the cent is "bronze." There used to be a copper cent, but an act discontinuing its coinage was passed in 1857. For seven years (1857-64) we had a nickel cent and up to 1857 a copper half cent.

Not Qualified Yet.

"I saw you out in your new car yesterday."

"Did I look like a motorist?"

"Well, no. You had an air of responsibility that gave you away, but then that will disappear in time."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Light Year.

The term "light year" is one used by astronomers. It helps the astronomers to enable the layman to get some sort of idea of the distances from us of the celestial bodies, the light year standing for the distance that light travels in twelve months' time.

The Sickly Golf Players.

A golf player who had been badly beaten by his opponent explained to him that he had been suffering all day from neuritis. "It's a curious thing," replied his opponent, "but I've never beaten a man in perfect health in my life."

It is a great misfortune not to have enough wit to speak well or not enough judgment to keep silent.—La Bruyere.

After Half A Century

By F. A. MITCHEL

Two old ladies were sitting in the ballroom of a chateau in France watching a multitude of dancers whirling by them. A figure appeared at the doorway, a gentleman in the costume of a Prussian dragoon of half a century before (1800), who at once arrested the attention of one of the women mentioned.

"Shades of my ancestors!" she exclaimed. "Can that be Gaston de Veaux come back from the dead?"

There was a singular movement in the limbs of the figure as it advanced into the room, the stiffness of old age mingled with the elasticity of youth, if such a mixture can be imagined. As he passed certain groups they turned to look at him. No one seemed to know him unless it was the old lady who had wondered if he were Gaston de Veaux. As he made his way among the dancers he endeavored to avoid them, but either his eyesight was defective or his joints were stiff, or both, for his efforts resembled those of a boy whose muscles had been overtrained or whose joints had been stiffened by disease.

He seemed to be familiar with the chateau, for he made for a certain door, through which he passed into a room where there were refreshments—it had always been used for this purpose—poured out a tumblerful of brandy and drank it off. This seemed to limber him, and he emerged again into the ballroom, walking more steadily.

At the opening of the nineteenth century France was in the throes of revolution. The De Veaux family occupied the chateau where now, at the time of the second empire, the ball was in progress. Gaston de Veaux during the former period, twenty years of age, an aristocrat, was obliged to leave France. He went to Prussia, where he entered the military service of the king. He was captured by the French under Napoleon I. and condemned to be shot for bearing arms against his countrymen.

It was generally supposed by his family that he had been executed. There was, however, a rumor that he had been given over to a commission of scientists for the purpose of experimentation in the suspension of human life, but if such was the case no report of the commission was ever found. At the restoration of the Bourbons a member of the De Veaux family went to Berlin to obtain De Veaux's body and bring it to France for interment in the family cemetery. It could not be found.

The lady who had made the exclamation at the ball, "Can that be Gaston de Veaux?" Mme. Garnier, had known him—indeed, had danced with him in that very ballroom when they were both in their teens. She was the only person present who had ever seen him.

And now this figure or this apparition of a man of twenty-one or twenty-two, who seemed to combine youthful and septuagenarian attributes, filled her with what she could only describe as a crawly sensation. The year 1799 had entered the room to stalk about in one of the 1850's. The stranger's antiquated uniform gave the impression that he had supposed he had been invited to a fancy dress ball and had come as a Prussian soldier of half a century before. In whatever part of the ballroom he appeared the guests turned to look at him, and the face of every person doing so filled with wonder mingled with horror. A few, on first catching sight of him, were disposed to laugh, but their features soon turned to the same shocked expression as the others.

As the apparition—it seemed more an apparition than a man—passed Mme. Garnier she saw in his strange eyes the look of one who had returned to his home after fifty years' absence to find all changed.

"Gaston de Veaux!" she called.

The figure stopped and looked at the speaker.

"Is there one person here who knows me?" he asked in a voice as singular as his appearance, the voice of one suffering from hoarseness.

"Are you Gaston de Veaux?" asked the lady.

"I am. And whom may I have the honor to address?"

"Alas, half a century has passed over me also," was the melancholy reply. "Do you remember Louise Garnier?"

"Louise Garnier," repeated the stranger more to himself than to her. "No, no; not Louise Garnier, but her grandmother perhaps."

He passed on with that same mechanical walk, muttering to himself. After having made the circuit of the room, reaching the door at which he had entered, he turned and looked at the assembly. Every one of the assembly was looking at him. With a moan he turned again and disappeared, descending a massive staircase.

Why no one followed him was not explained. That age was more superstitious than this, and it may be that some took him for a ghost and naturally drew back. But later their failure to discover what had become of him was regretted, for from the time he disappeared, going down the staircase, no one reported having seen or at least especially noticed him except a coachman, who claimed that while driving in at the chateau gate he met a strange looking man in a queer uniform passing out. A good while after the singular appearance what was described as a leathery skeleton was found in a wood near the chateau. It was clad in clothes so rotted as to be scarcely distinguishable.

HER GOLF RIG.

Noisy Plaids Are More Popular Than Ever For Sport Clothes.

THE ATHLETE.

YOUR SHOES.

How to Take Care of Your Nether Garb and Keep Neat.

If it were possible to lay in a spring and fall supply of, say, three or four pairs of shoes we would give our feet a good chance of always looking neat. However, it is possible on a mere limited number to accomplish the same end if we are careful with those we do buy.

In the first place, it is much more advisable to pay a good price for one pair than to buy two pairs of cheap shoes. Cheap shoes get out of shape so quickly they are never an economy. Cheap shoe leather is dear at any price. To preserve the shape of a shoe you must have a pair of trees, and immediately you take off your shoes put them on the trees. Never allow your shoes to run down at the heel. As soon as they show the least signs of wear send them to be fixed. If you wear them until they are right down at the heel it is not only bad for your foot and looks most slovenly and untidy, but you get them so out of shape that no amount of subsequent repairing will put them right again.

If you happen to get your shoes wet don't put them near the radiator to dry. This cracks the leather and makes them hard. Put them on the trees and let them stand somewhere warm and dry. Wait until they are quite dry before having them cleaned.

You can keep patent leather shoes from cracking by rubbing vaseline into them before wearing them for the first time.

Mock Tatting In Clover Leaf Crochet.

There are many uses for this mock tatting in crochet of clover leaf design:

Begin with ch 27, catch back into the 15th st from beginning of chain, forming a loop. Into this 1 cr 5 s p of 3 ch, (3 s p) four times, 5 s, catching with first p into 5th st from beginning of chain; join. Ch 12, catch back at base of first leaflet. Fill in this 1 the same as the first, joining first p of 2d leaflet to last p of first leaflet. Third leaflet the same as second. Slipstitch along 5 of remaining 15 ch for stem. Ch 5, catch into last p of 3d leaflet. Repeat, joining second clover leaf to first by 3d p of opposite leaflets. Crochet a heading of trebles with 2 ch between each.

Home Suggestions.

Many laundresses waste time and labor pursuing clothespins when a clothespin bag made to slide along the line would save both.

Give the average girl a pretty shirt waist or dress bag and see if the best things are not more carefully put away.

Give the average boy a good looking shoe bag for his closet wall and see how quickly he will display pride in keeping his shoes clean so that the bag will not be soiled.

Eat Ripe Olives.

Eat ripe olives and take four tablespoonfuls of olive oil every day, says one who knows. Why ripe olives? Because they are picked and packed just at that stage of their development when they are richly nutritious and edible. Each olive contains a large percentage of olive oil. Do try them if you have not as yet. Purplish black in color, the more one eats of them the better one likes them.

SPRING HOUSECLEANING.

How It Can Be Made Easy by Adopting a System.

Housecleaning is no longer a thing to be dreaded. If done systematically it becomes as easy as any other household task. To clean a house systematically one must do it one room at a time, co-eds in the Kansas State Agricultural college are taught. This destroys the old custom of having the entire house upset at once, and the cleaning is more thorough than when done by the old method. The same general rules will apply to the cleaning of every room from cellar to garret.

First all small articles, including pictures, should be dusted and taken from the room or put under cover. The lighter pieces of furniture should then be removed to another room and those remaining covered. The walls and ceilings should be dusted with a special brush provided for the purpose, or with a broom covered with a soft cloth. The rugs should be taken outside and beaten or swept with wet bits of paper.

If the floor is hard wood it should be brushed with soft brush or string mop. This should be done with long, steady strokes from the corners to the center of the room. The dust should be carried out immediately. A cedar mop or string mop wet with kerosene is then used, still working from the corners to the center of the room.

After the dust settles, dust all exposed surfaces. The woodwork may be cleaned with a soft cloth, tepid water and a small amount of soap solution. The covers may then be removed from the furniture and the polished surfaces cleaned with a velvet sponge wet in tepid water and dried with a chamois skin. The rugs and small articles may then be replaced, and the room is in order with practically no disturbance to the remainder of the house.

HOW TO GROW VIOLETS IN YOUR BACK YARD.

Select a somewhat shady, well drained spot for the violet bed. Take away the top three or four inches of soil, unless it is well enriched loam, and replace it with equal parts of well rotted manure, leaf mold and thoroughly decomposed sod.

Late in April the plants may be set out. Usually plants can be obtained at a small cost from growers who are glad to thin out their beds. Put them six to eight inches apart each way. They must have plenty of water all summer. In the early fall put a cold frame over the bed. Cover the plants with straw or leaves after the first hard freeze and do not let them thaw. Then put the wooden shutters over the top of the frame. When thawing commences, in February or March, the wooden shutters should be replaced with glass ones. In the warm part of the day keep the shutters raised a little to let in the air. Never allow the plants to freeze again after they have started to grow.

HOW

To Make Shabby or Old Furniture Look New

OLD furniture looks shabby in the spring, when almost everything else is fresh and clean, but it can be made like new with the expenditure of a little time and money.

First the old finish must be taken off the furniture. This may be done with a varnish remover, which may be purchased at a hardware store. Two quarts will remove the varnish from all the furniture in the average living room. This remover should be applied with a brush or a cloth and allowed to stand for a few minutes. It must then be rubbed or scraped off. After this the scraper should be used until the wood is reached, because a varnish will not take a stain.

If the wood is an open grain piece, such as chestnut, walnut or oak, a filler must be used to make a smooth surface. This may be bought or prepared at home. The formula for the preparation is as follows: One pound of cornstarch and three-fourths pint of boiled linseed oil or turpentine colored with burned umber or lampblack. After the stain and the filler have been applied the wood may be covered with a floor or furniture varnish or a wax. If a wax finish is desired the stain should be put on and allowed to stand until the next day, when the wax or varnish may be applied. Wax is the preferable finish since it does not gather up the dust particles so readily as the varnish and is more easily applied.

How to Select a Desirable Fishing Line For Reels.

For a line one of the many splendid braided silk casting lines is the most desirable, but the hard braided brand must also be given some consideration, since the softer silk has a tendency to swell and stick to the rod when wet. Enameled lines, which are indispensable to the fly caster, are not suited for free reel casting, where the requirements demand a line that will run freely and smoothly.

How to Remove the Stain of Mildew From Cottons.

Mildew may be removed with salts of lemon solution, using either the crystals or powdered salts. Chloride of lime will also take it out, but care must be exercised not to burn the material. Directions for using on can.

SUMMER STORAGE

How to Care For Your Pet Furs and Woolens.

MOTH BALLS TO THE FORE.

Although We Can't See Our White Winged Enemies Flying About, Their Larvae May Even Now Be Boring Into Our Ermine Stoles and Sables.

Now is the time to lay away all woolens, furs and similar articles which must be stored during the summer.

The time when the moth does most damage is not when we see him flying around. The mischief has been done by the biting of the little larva or worm from which he came.

The first thing to do in laying clothes away is to see that they are perfectly clean. Everything woolen, like bath robes, blankets and underwear, should be brushed with a whisk broom, if it cannot be washed first, and exposed to the sun and air.

If the garment cannot be washed in water and we do not care to send it to the cleaner it should never be laid away dirty with spots of grease and food, because these are just the things that will attract the moth worm first.

The little spot on the lapel of the overcoat, the slight dirt on the shield of a child's flannel suit, these are the places that Mr. Moth Worm goes for first. Materials which are not thoroughly washable in water should be given a bath in gasoline and thoroughly aired.

Dresses trimmed with fur should never be laid away with the fur on them, but have the fur ripped off, cleaned in gasoline, brushed and placed in separate packages. In fact, all fur must be thoroughly cleaned, brushed and aired before being laid away.

Moth balls and camphor paper have been used for a long time and are still used, but we have modifications of these now in the tar paper bag and camphor bag, which are more efficient in many ways.

These bags come in various sizes, some very small for children's coats and sweaters, others half length and others even full length for evening dresses or for overcoats.

Another cheap way of putting clothes away is to put them into the paper boxes, such as come with underwear and other articles and seal the covers firmly with strips of gum paper.

There are many other articles which we perhaps cannot lay away, such as tufted furniture, cushions, etc. The best plan is to spray them with gasoline or benzine, using a small atomizer or hand spray, or they can be very carefully sponged with a diluted solution of corrosive sublimate in alcohol made just strong enough to leave a white stain.

Light, air, low temperature and frequent inspection are the things necessary for perfect storage.

Fish Bisque.

A fish bisque is made from one cupful of cold fish minced very fine, one cupful of hot milk and a cupful of any white stock. The carcass of a chicken cooked slowly will yield an excellent stock for this purpose. The seasoning consists of a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, salt, a dash of cayenne and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley.

Put fish, seasoning and stock together in a pan. Mix one tablespoonful of flour and the same quantity of butter together and stir into the fish mixture. Cook and then stir in the boiling milk, adding a tablespoonful of cracker crumbs.

For Easter Wear.

In the Easter parade this year silk waists will be prominent. Taffeta will probably predominate, but there will be suits of faille, silk poplin and gros de Londres. The checked and striped silks are popular. The silk suit is freely trimmed and is usually in demitailored or dressy effects. The skirt may be in tiers or have cascade draperies. Bandings of velvet give a rich finish, and the ruchings are especially adaptable to silks.

SCANDAL FASTEST TRAVELER.

Wisconsin Professor Finds Flattery Second, Truth the Slowest.

Madison, Wis.—Scandal travels 1,000 yards per second, according to Professor Benjamin Snow, head of the University of Wisconsin's physics department. Professor Snow bases his calculations upon observations made at the university.

Flattery has the second greatest speed, the professor finds, traveling from 400 to 500 yards in the same time. Truth, however, he declares, is slowest of all, moving only about two and a half yards per second. The computations, he said, were based on the speed of the sound of an alarm clock, which is zero.

SAVE HISTORIC TREE.

Old Elm Used by British and Indian Sharpshooters.

Maumee, O.—The famous Indian elm tree here, ravaged by time and the elements, is to be saved. Toledo tree experts are now nursing it.

The old tree stands directly opposite Fort Meigs, which was under siege by the British and Indians in 1812-13. From branches of the tree Indians had an excellent view of the fort. Stories handed down from the generation of that day say that many a bullet was fired from the tree by expert marksmen among the Indians and the British.

The Judge's White Gloves.

In the olden days judges were forbidden to wear gloves on the bench for fear of bribes being dropped into them. If there were no cases to be tried, however, there was no opportunity for bribing, and the sheriffs might give the judge a pair of gloves; hence the custom of presenting a judge with a pair of white gloves when he has no cases to try at an assizes.

"I want a lowly position," Mrs. Aldrich said. "I want to mingle with the people and to get first hand from them their ideas of how the city of Sawtelle should be managed and what they want. The position of 'mayoress' is too high and too dignified to allow any one to do this. I prefer to serve Sawtelle as a simple trustee."

How to Grow Strawberries For a Family of Eight.

A patch of strawberries two or three rods square will produce more fruit than a family of eight or ten can use. The work is just as easy and just as simple as growing tomatoes, cabbage or any other crop, says a specialist in the Farm and Home. Strawberry plants are set just the same as a tomato or cabbage plant, and after strawberry plants are set there is little to do but cultivate and give them an occasional hoeing, just the same as for vegetables.

Strawberry plants are the hardiest of all plants and succeed in all soils and under all climatic conditions. The chief essentials are strong, fruitful plants, good drainage and plenty of manure.

Ceiba Tree of Honduras.

The tree known as la ceiba is one of the dominating features of the landscape in Honduras. It rises to a height of seventy or eighty feet before branching, and then a broad top spreads out like a huge umbrella. The trunks are commonly six feet or more in diameter, but the wood is soft and not considered valuable for lumber. It is white, and many persons think it would be valuable for paper pulp. The tree bears a silky cotton, which is used to some extent for stuffing cushions.—Commerce Reports.

MAYOR LEWIS EXPLAINS ALDERMANIC POSITION

My attention has been called to an editorial appearing in The Evening Times of the issue of April 28, 1916, in which a protest was made by a citizen regarding a permit given by the Council of the City of Fulton, for the erection of a billboard at the intersection of Rochester and South First street in the City of Fulton.

It would appear that the protest is untimely and utterly worthless, by reason of the absence of any ordinance of the city prohibiting such erection.

It is apparent that the Common Council are within their legal rights to consider an application of that character, and naturally deemed it within their power to grant such permit. It would, therefore, be entirely proper for any citizen to protest and complain about the erection, providing such protest were made in time, when the Council is in session, and I might add, that from my contact and experience with this Council since coming into office, I can safely say that no protest or complaints, however trivial, in reference to the affairs of the city have been or will be unheeded.

I am pleased to acknowledge that the present body of men constituting the Common Council, are well informed and are possessed for unusual ability, and I would earnestly advise that any citizens acting in good faith can appear before them, register his protest and the same will receive proper consideration.

I realize the duties of the members of the Common Council of the city are laborious and exacting, in their efforts to adjust with satisfaction the various problems with which they are constantly confronted, and I am convinced by their earnest effort and unremitting reward of the position so held, that as a body they individually and collectively, exceed all expectations.

I desire to call to the attention of the citizens of Fulton that should there be a suggestion offered by anyone regarding intended municipal legislation in the enactment of ordinance affecting the interests of the city, that it is the duty of every citizen to appear before the Common Council and state their suggestion and grievances.

The erection of a billboard, as stated, was delayed by the absence of an ordinance regulating its erection.

If the citizen knew in advance that this billboard was to be erected, and that the erection to be legal should have been sanctioned by the Common Council, then it is certain that he failed to do his full duty as a citizen, and should not complain about the legality of its erection.

The Common Council of the city should be advised, and not obstructed by the questionable tactics of any citizen reputable or otherwise.

The administration seeks the friendship of the citizens of Fulton in expressing their views, with the realization of a business administration.

VICTOR C. LEWIS, Mayor.

ODD FELLOWS' CELEBRATION

It Was In Keeping With the Traditions of Neahtawanta Lodge and Will Not Soon Be Forgotten.

The 97th anniversary of the introduction of the Odd Fellows in the United States, was fittingly observed by Neahtawanta Lodge, No. 245, at their home in Oneida street, yesterday afternoon. Rebekah Lodge, No. 269, was out in full force as guests of Neahtawanta, as well as many invited guests.

Music was furnished by members of the Peacock party, augmented by the newly organized tabernacle quartet, composed of Messrs Knapp, Paddock, Goodjon, Howe, Ferris, Furniss and Farley. The quartet was organized by Prof. Warth since the beginning of the tabernacle campaign and their singing on this occasion was evidence of the wisdom used by Prof. Warth in selecting the several voices.

The services were presided over by R. E. Crandall, Noble Grand of Neahtawanta Lodge, who pleasingly outlined the occasion for the anniversary celebration. He introduced the Rev. J. W. Barrett of the First M. E. church, who gave one of the finest adresses heard within the walls of the temple in many a day. He chose for his theme the "Three Golden Links" and closed with the following beautiful poem, so dear to Odd Fellows.

I saw in a distant city, far off in the pathless sea,
A scene of the days of my childhood that will ever seem grand to me;
I saw a vast column approaching, with their banners half clouded with dust,
And I saw in their folds when righted, our motto, "in God we trust."

I saw as the column moved forward, in the ranks both the young and the old;
They marched in their garments of splendor, their regalia of crimson and gold;
They marched, the prince and the peasant, methinks I can see them now,
As they marched to the soul-thrilling music with the knight of the anvil and plow.

They wore on their breasts, strange devices, cross guards, crossed axes and keys,
The pen, the sword and the hour glass, and the fresh budded rod from the trees;
One had a bow and a quiver, another a serpent-twined rod,
And one in the purest regalia, carried proudly the volume of God

I saw an old man bearing hard on his staff; he must have three score and ten,
His trembling limbs and wrinkled brow, how I wish I could see him again;
He bowed to the throng, on the right and the left, hew as pleased with his chosen lot.
And he seemed to say as he passed them, "forget it not, forget it not."

Then a beautiful banner borne high in the ranks, decked with emblems brilliant and bright,
At the top I remember were the three golden links, with the heart and the hand at the right;
Near the top of the flag staff three arrows were twined, right above them a young turtle dove
And beneath within letters of gold were the words, "Truth, Friendship and Love."

And now the column has paused that other the ranks may swell,
They linger to welcome those sisters who adorn our order so well;
By Rebeka our honored sister, this branch of the Order is led,
And a halo of love seems to linger around each honored sister's head.

God bless our Order, an old man said as he tried to keep up with the ranks,
They cared for me and they buried my dead, who have passed over Jordan's banks;
When death laid his hand on my only son, unaided they came to attend,
They came they said at the law's command, the widow and orphans' friend.

With fraternal care they carried him out, down where the willows wave;
With brotherly hands they laid him away close by his mother's grave;
Don't think it strange that I honor these men, of the triple link, the heart and hand,
May the order extend, may it flourish and grow, till the gavel be be heard in every land.

Stand firm by your banners so firm and so bright
May no stain mar its beautiful folds, the lesson we learn from the ritual each night;
Are precious far more than silver or gold.
We all have our cares and troubles in life; ah, who has not by tempest been tos't,
If true to the motto in God we trust, we'll get nearer and nearer the cross.

DUBLIN REBELS SURRENDERING

London—The seven-day rebellion in Ireland has failed. Very little resistance is left, either in Dublin or anywhere else. The leaders are surrending to the loyal troops in large numbers, and their chief has telegraphed orders to the Sinn Fein adherents in other parts of Ireland to yield.

Prisoners taken by the authorities number 707, including Countess Markievicz, who is reported to have shot dead a guard at theg ates of Dublin Castle in the abortive attempt to capture the Viceregal residence on Monday last.

Two German officers are reported to have been found among the dead rebels in Sackville street. The damage to property thus far is estimated at $10,000,000. Nelson's Tower has been destroyed and fires are still burning.

Such are the principal items of news official and unofficial, which have reached London, but complete details are lacking as the censorship is not yet fully relaxed and estimates of the total rebel casualties are merely guesswork,

An official list of casualties among the army officers at Dublin given out last night contains twenty-seven names. Of this total five were killed, twentyone wounded and one missing. This list is additional to the one announced on Friday, giving the names of two officers killed and five wounded.

The bullett which struck James Connolly, one of the rebel leaders, passed through a thigh bone and broke it, says a telegram from Dublin Connolly was in the General Post Office when wounded.

Nobody is allowed to enter Dublin withoutw ritten permission from the highest authority, and then only at his own risk. Moreover, the people are warned that this risk is considerable, as stray bullets are likely to meet the person entering in some unexpected quarters.

The food situation in Dublin is precarious. Thirty-four free food depots were opened Sunday, stocked for the most part with food, commandeered fro mvarious places by the military The food is being doled out in tiny portions after a rigid examination into then ecessities of the applicant

Food also is very short in Kingstown, and many of the necessaries of life cannot be obtained at any price.

DERNBERG BACKS U. S. CLAIM

Berlin — "Germany's course must not be dictated by temporary tactical advantages, but rather by the exigencies of the entire situation, military and naval," declares Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, former Secretary for the Colonies, in a lengthy leader in the Tageblatt.

Dr. Dernburg declares that in making the decision Germany must take into consideration her relations with all neutrals, the effect of the entrance of a new and powerful enemy, the conditions respecting food and raw material in Germany, and the possibility of attaining peace He contines:

"It must be determined what concessions will ward off the threatening American danger, and in how far our prospects of defeating our enemies might be lessened thereby. Briefly,our entire situation must be weighed in the balance. We must let neither national sensitiveness nor a super-feeling of honor govern us, and if we feel strong enough to achieve victory even if we make certain concessions, then we may make them without forfeiting our self-respect."

Dr. Semburg declares the President bases his entire case on the Lusitania, Arabic and Sussex, passenger ships torpedoed without warning, not on countless other cases in which attempted flight or resistance justified the submarine commander in torpedoing.

The Sussex, declares Dr. Dernburg, was torpedoed contrary to assurances given by th eGerman Government, and the proof adduced at least admits thep ossibility that the American claims that Germany is responsible may be well grounded, although the representations to America show that it may have been due to a mistake by the commander rather than to bad intent,

AD CLUBS IN A PICKLE

President Herbert S. Houston of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World is in a rather embarrassing position these days. It seems that someone connected with his organization thought it would be a fine thing if a $1,000,000 newspaper advertising campaign were placed at the disposal of President Wilson for use in convincing the nation that it should be prepared for eventualities. Mr. Wilson was informed of the plan and accepted it.

That the idea is a good one many will agree —unless they happen to know where the rub is. And here it is:

Space for the campaign was to be donated by the newspapers of the country. And it appears that nothing was said to the publishers about the gift until after the offer was made to President Wilson.

Mr. Houston, who is a partner of Ambassador Page in the Doubleday, Page publishing business, will doubtless find some way of smoothing out the difficulty. Just now many publishers, who surely would come forward if patriotism were involved, feel that they are being asked to donate the only thing they have to sell, simply for the aggrandizement of the ad clubs of the country. —Batavia News.

WOMEN UNITE TO MAKE 1916 CAMPAIGN ONE REAL MORAL EFFORT

The women appointed as ward chairmen of the Clean-Up campaign met yesterday with the general chairman, Miss Thayer. The report as given by these chairmen showed that they have been activity at work. In many instances a house-to-house canvass has been made my members of the ward committees, and, too, neighborhood meetings have been held. In this way the Clean-Up movement has received wide publicity, and an impetus given that cannot fail to bear fruit.

The general sentiment as found by the workers, it was reported, is one of ready cooperation. In a few instances where persons did not understand the purpose of united action a little resentment was displayed. However, this was in rare instances as most persons have become sufficiently informed of the purpose of a Clean-Up Week to join in the movement with good spirit, realizing that "what's good for my neighbor is good for me."

Mrs. W. J. Hartnett, who was unable to attend last week's meeting was present yesterday and reported the work done by her committee. The field although rather extensive as to area had been thoroughly canvassed.

Mrs. E. A. Galdman reported some successful neighborhood meetings in her ward. Mrs. Jesse Morrill, Mrs. D. M. Sullivan, and other chairmen who were unable to be present, but who sent their reports, all showed that progress had been made.

Miss Nancy Cook whose art department is doing an extensive of landscape gardening about the high school grounds has also planned to extend the work further into the community. As a part of the final exams each of the one hundred and twenty-five pupils is resuired to construct and erect a bird house, and to plant six packages of seeds. The effect of such an influence radiating from the art center of the community is splendid and Miss Cook will no doubt receive the commendation of wide-awake Fultonions, for making the work of her department so much a part in the good influence of the entire community.

The next meeting of the committee will be held on Monday afternoon with Miss Thayer when final plans will be gone over. The ultimate disposal of ashes, tin cans, etc., is a problem not so simple when the work is to be done effectively.

Hughes Must Run, Declares Alton Parker

Concerning the candidacy of Justice Hughes, today's New York Herald says:

"Justice Hughes will be compelled "as a patriot" to accept the republican nomination for President if it comes to him unsought, and may do so with "perfect propriety" to the Bench, in the opinion of Alton B. Parker, the nation's only private citizen who stepped from high judicial position to take a Presidential nomination.

"In this expression of opinion, given to the Herald yesterday, Mr. Parker voices the almost unanimous view of distinguished jurists and statemen who, by prestige and knowledge of the law and traditions of the country, areb est qualified to discuss the question.

"Giving their answers to the Herald's query, "Can Justice Hughes with propriety accept the Presidential nomination?" prominent men from all sections of the country have said, "Yes." The unanimity of the answers is amazing to the political leaders. This question has been regarded as the highest barrier ahead of Justice Hughes. The democrats have attempted to make much of it and advocates of other candidates have cried that the "ermine must be unsoiled," that Justice Hughes must turn away from the nomination even if it comes to him.

"In seeking interviews concerning Justice Hughes and the Presidential nomination the Herald has sought merely to present to its readers and all those interested in the peculiar political situation in the republican party the views of those men of the country best qualified to discuss the subject of judicial ethics.

"Perhaps the most surprising feature of the result is that for the most part democrats agree with the republicans in stating that there is no reason why Justice Hughes should not accept the nomination if it comes to him unsought. They add that he should make no move to capture the nomination, and, if it does come, that he must at once step from the Bench. A few democrats declare Mr. Hughes cannot accept."

GERMANS RENEW BOMBARDMENT OF VERDUN SECTORS

The repulse by the French of powerful German attacks around Dead Man's hill and of counter attacks to the north of Cumieres, has again been followed by a heavy German bombardment of these sectors and a continuation of the shelling of Cote du Poivre and Douaumont, northeast of the fortress. No fresh infantry attacks have been launched by the Germans. In sapping operations in the Argonne forest the French were enabled by the explosion of a mine to take a portion of thec rater.

Nothing of importance has occurred along the northern section of the battle front in Russia, according to Berlin, but in the south the Austro-Hungarians have been forced to withdraw before a counter attack by the Russians from trenches north of Mlynov, which they had previously captured.

The usual bombardments are in progress on the Austro Italian front. Gorizia has again come under the heavy fire of the Italians. In the Adaello zone the Italians are on the offensive against the Austrians at Hopeto Pass.

Paris reports that on the Greek frontier there have been frequent but unimportant skirmishes between Entente Allied and German Bulgarian forces, whose lines are less than two-thirds of a mile from each other at certain points.

Two British war craft, the armed yacht Aegus and the mine sweeper Nasturtium, have been sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean by coming in contact with mines.

ALL LEADERS OF IRISH REVOLUTION AND 1000 IN RANKS PRISONERS

London—All the revolutionists in Dublin have surrendered, and those in the country districts are doing likewise, according to an official statement issued this evening. The statement says:

"All the revolutionists in Dublin have surrendered, the city is reported quite safe. The revolutionists in the country districts are surrending to the mobile colmns.

"There were 1,000 prisoners in Dublin yesterday, of whom 489 were sent to England last night.

"It is reported from Queenstown that hopes were entertained that arms would be handed in today in the city of Cork.

"During the night of April 30-May 1 the revolutionists in Enniscorthy made an offer to surrender their leaders and their arms on condition that the rank and file be allowed to return to their homes.

"They were informed that the only terms that could be considered were unconditional surrender. These terms were accepted by them at 6 o'clock this morning. It was reported later that they were surrendering today on these terms.

"A column composed of soldiers and Royal Irish Constabulary captured seven prisoners in the neighborhood of Ferns (County Wexford) today.

"Wicklow, Arklow, Dunlavin, Bagenalstown and New Ross, and the counties of Cork, Clare, Limerick and Kerry areg enerally quiet.

FULTON PHARMACY TO REPLACE KLINE-WOOD CO.

The Kline-Wood Drug Company has sold its drug store in this city to Mr. B. L. Neubauer of Buffalo.

Mr. Neubauer has asumed control of the business and associated with him is Mr. Charles Rose of Syracuse. A complete line of new goods is being arranged, and a formal opening will be tendered the public in the near future. The store will be known as the Fulton Pharmacy.

Mr. Neubauer is a graduate of Buffalo University, and before coming to this city was manager of the Miller-Strong Drug company of Niagara.

TURKS SAY RUSSIANS COVETED DARDANELLES

Berlin (via Sayville)—Russia's desire to conquer the Dardanelles, in which she received encouragement from England (was responsible for the present world war. This is the view of Halil Bey, Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs, revealed at an official banquet last night in Constantinople.

The banquet was given by the the Committee of Union and Progress in the Turkish Parliament in honor of a visiting party of deputies from the German Reichstag. In his address of welcome Halil Bey said:

"The present war originated with Russia, which wanted to conquer the Dardanelles. Russia was encouraged by England, and thus dared to fight for thep ossession of the straits and a free entrance into the Mediterranean. The British Prime Minister assented.

"The aliance with Japan was effected to proteet England against Russian expansion in Asia. Thus England was enabled to make concessions to Russia at the expense of Turkey.

A BETTER ACQUAINTANCE NEEDED

The explanation made by Mayor Lewis in yesterday's issue of this newspaper, of the position held by the Board of Aldermen in its dealings with the construction and erection of the new billboard, is strong in one particular and relatively weak in another. The point pertinent at this time is where the Mayor states, in effect, that it is the duty of every citizen to protest any anticipated action of any branch of the present administration; that by doing so in time, acts unpopular and inconsistent with the public welfare may be left undone.

In that respect the Mayor's statement is endorsed. It is evident that Mr. Lewis would have the people become better acquainted with the workings at City Hall—that is, when those workings are within reach of the people, and not performed behind closed doors, as in executive session. The Mayor's is an old complaint, one not exclusively peculiar to any particular locality; therefore, he should not worry. He should remember the two citizens of a town who knew each other slightly for many years. Recently they became better acquainted. Prior to that time neither was favorably impressed with the other. They have met frequently and had many discussions. They now find that they like each other immensely, and they actually seek each other's society.

All of which is to call attention to the fact that were the Aldermen of this city to keep their ears close to the ground, at all times, especially when legislation affecting the welfare and appearance of the city is at hand, they would find the people incapable of misjudging any of their actions. This advice is applicable to billboard and all other legislation.

Aside from the legality, or illegality, of the action of the Board of Aldermen in granting permission to construct an obstruction abutting the main street of the city, instinct should dictate to every man and woman some love for the aesthetic side of our municipal life, and surely, were the Aldermen alive to the progressive spirit of the day they would not be parties to sacrificing an atom of Fulton's natural beauty, regardless of the stakes.

It is to be regretted, of course, that the billboard remains an eyesore upon a leading street, and yet it may serve as a blessing in the end. It stands as a lesson to the Aldermen and to the people—a silent lesson, but it is our fervent hope that, if the protests of indignant citizens availeth nothing at the meeting of the Board of Aldermen tonight, it will serve as a mute reminder against inflictions of the same nature in the future. But the matter should not be allowed to rest at this point. The Councilmen should be made acquainted with their neighbors and their neighbors' likes and dislikes in respect to the billboard nuisance. The protest cannot be made loud enough.

ADVISES AGAINST CRUSADES

Bishop William A. Quayle of the Methodist church urges his young ministers not to "make crusades." The bishop is one of the wisest of the great episcopacy of his great church. He sees the need in these times of incessant preaching of the gospel of his Christ, and knows full well that its proper preaching will cure every ill of humanity while the crusader is learning the names of the diseases.

The counsel of the bishop might well be taken home by more people than preachers. The "crusader" is not confined to the clergy, by any means. How well is recalled the undertakings of the "muckraking" periodicals of a decade of years ago! What did they accomplish? They besmirched the names of all men in public life, ruined many valuable magazine publications, destroyed the taste for reading of a healthful class. Did they work good results? Some, undoubtedly, but not so quickly nor as well as the regular press of the country was at the time bringing about reform of official places.

There are crusaders in the teaching profession, in the fields of medicine and law, in the world of labor, of capital, of science, of art and letters. They stir things up, they create dissatisfaction and doubt, and bring about disaster. They even accomplish some reforms. The net good in the results of their efforts, however, is not of the importance which comes from the steadier, kindlier, more informative, more sympathetic day-by-day work of the educator and the lawyer and the physician and the toiler in every other field who loves his fellowman and his own work, and who makes the twain affections coordinate to his better inspiration and humanity's upliftment in every moment of his living.

Bishop Quayle knows the tendency of the crusader to consider himself right and all the rest of the world wrong. It is an unfortunate position, for the crusader by that belief robs himself of power for serving the world. How the crusader of nineteen centuries ago must have despised Jesus of Nazareth, who went about preaching the gospel and doing good, instead of making everybody feel that He found nothing in them to love, and nothing to bless!—St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette.

Opinions

RESENTS BEING CONSIDERED "EASY"

We have heard once or twice that it takes all kinds of men to make a world. One kind is the man who comes to warm himself before your store stove or watch the parade from your store window, and then goes elsewhere to buy his groceries. "All well and good," you say, "a man is at liberty to buy his groceries where he can get them cheapest." Certainly, but let him warm his fingers before the other man's fire! This selfsame citizen works the editor as he does the grocer. He comes to the Journal for free notices advertising a club entertainment or a church social and then places elsewhere the business wherefrom the printer's profit can be derived. That is all right, in a way. We are not objecting to the trade another man gets. That is his means of livelihood as well as our trade is ours. The things we do object to, though, is the way our townsman consciously or unconsciously imposes upon us and expects us to play with a patient and willing smile the eternal "easy mark" If this townsman's cap fits your head, wear it, and in wearing it try to get our point of view.—Adams (N. Y.) Journal.

ACTIVE CHURCHMEN

That was a considerable amount of dead wood which Calvary Baptist church of New York cut from its rolls last week when it eliminated 1,000 members who long ago ceased to be identified actively with the church's affairs. It is difficult to see how so many names could have been permitted to accumulate unless there was neglectful oversight on the part of some one. Other churches are making statements in the New York papers that they have no such number of inactive members and that they keep their rolls checked up, so they know just where they stand.

The charge is now being made that churches throughout the country are being over-capitalized, if the New York dead wood is to be taken as an indication. It is being held that the figures published from time to time, showing the country-wide membership of this, that and the other denomination, do not give an accurate estimate of conditions. It is probable that there is much that could be characterized as inactive in the general church membership of the country, but no such amount as the recent act of the New York church would indicate. As a rule the lists are kept looked after pretty thoroughly, not only because of the interest of the church management in the individual members, but because there is a constant checking up to assist in increasing the income.

There is no good reason why the names should not be stricken from the rolls when the interest of the member lags and he disassociates himself from the church. To continue his name on the rolls only conveys a wrong impression to the world at large in estimating the strength of the Christian church. The church desires to stand on a bona fide basis of honest figures. It does not ask for a padded roll. Its legitimate membership is substantial enough to be impressive.—Watertown Times.

WEST APPROVES OF ROOSEVELT'S STAND

Myth of the Doones.

How largely Mr. Blackmore drew upon his imagination for the story of "Lorna Doone" is made clear by F. W. Hackwood in his book, "The Good Old Times." There were, in fact, no Doones. The word was simply a local bogy, a modified form of "Dane," a memory of the faroff times when the viking invaders harried the land. "The only vestige of actuality discoverable is a faint tradition that a fugitive from the battle of Sedgmoor, to escape the hangings of Judge Jeffreys, appropriated the ruins of some wretched huts in recesses of the Badgworthy glen, now 'the Doon valley,' finding there a safe retreat in which he reared a considerable family, which managed to eke out a living by committing petty depredations in the district. The 'last of the Doones,' an old man and his granddaughter, are said to have perished in the snow during the winter of 1800."

The Arrow of St. Edmund.

The legend of the death of St. Edmund was curiously corroborated after a lapse of eight centuries. The story goes that the martyr was tied to a tree and, as torture proved unavailing to make him recant his faith, was shot at with Danish arrows till his body was covered with them. The tree at Hoxne to which he was said to have been bound and which was twenty feet in circumference fell in 1848, and, according to "The Black Letter Saints of the Prayer Book," a piece of iron like an arrow head was found imbedded in the wood.

"Do you recommend this book?"

"Certainly," answered the librarian. "It's a book that every one ought to read."

SKETCHING MARK TWAIN.

Cartoonist Ward Found the Humorist an Impatient Subject.

Many of the difficulties experienced by the cartoonist are related by Leslie Ward in his volume, "Forty Years of 'Spy.'" He writes as follows with reference to America's great humorist:

"Mark Twain was another subject who came under the category of the 'walkers.' I had a good deal of difficulty in getting hold of him, but when I eventually caught him at his hotel I found him decidedly impatient.

"'Now you mustn't think I'm going to sit or stand for you,' he told me, 'for once I'm up I keep on the go.'

"The whole time I watched him he paced the room like a caged animal, smoking a very large calabash pipe and telling amusing stories. The great humorist wore a white flannel suit and told me in the course of conversation that he had a dress suit made all in white that he wore at dinner parties. He had just taken his honorary degree at Oxford, and he wanted to put his gown on, but I preferred to 'do' him in the more characteristic and widely known garb. He struck me as being a very sensitive man, whose nervous pacings during my interview were the result of a highly strung temperament. The only pacifying influence seemed to be his enormous pipe, which he never ceased to smoke."

A TERROR OF THE SEAS.

This Fish Resembles a Torpedo and Is Just as Dangerous.

His shape resembles a torpedo, and his attack too. Fishermen and bathers in seas where he is found regard him as almost as deadly as the torpedo and far more common in peaceful waters. Fishermen and fish alike are enemy to him, and he will attack with a ferocity surpassing even the shark. He's called the barracuda.

His body is long and round, and his head pointed. His wide mouth bristles with large, sharp teeth. There are more than a dozen varieties scattered over the oceans, all of them fierce and hungry.

Sometimes they grow to a length of six to eight feet. These giants are the ones dreaded by the fishermen. Even when they have him fast on the end of a hook and line he's a veritable load of dynamite and will attack and bite and snap at the hands that are hauling him in.

Fishermen have to guard against poisoned flesh in the barracuda. Sometimes the big fish eats a poisonous kind of fish, which in turn poisons its own flesh. The barracuda's bite is regarded as poisonous in itself, and the wounds caused by the giant fish's teeth become inflamed and infected.—Philadelphia North American.

Henry James' Style.

Stevenson spotted the unconscionable repetition of certain adjectives in "Roderick Hudson," but probably the most marked characteristic of Henry James' style was his passion for adverbs and adverbial clauses. He was the most adverbial of English writers. You will find more adverbs to the page than even in Meredith. And he had a quaint habit of putting the adverb before the verb when most writers would put it after. One of his ladies (the examples are taken at random) "thankfully felt," another "quite beautifully and tenderly smiled." And "after all" crops up all over the place. But one would not have these things altered; they were part of the man. One does object to them, however, in his imitators, who have learned the trick, but missed the spirit behind it.—London Chronicle.

World's Future Fish Supply.

The sea beats upon 26,000 miles of Alaska shore line, a distance greater than the circumference of the earth. All of that vast stretch of waters is teeming with the most edible fish on earth. Every bay is a harbor where these fish can be prepared for the markets of the world, and the greatest ships afloat can anchor in safety while taking on their cargo of food for the hungry of all climes. In a few years Alaskan fish will be famous wherever ships sail and men exchange the products of their toil. This is but one of Alaska's sources of wealth. — Pittsburgh Dispatch.

PEARL WHITE, THE STAR OF A SENSATIONAL EXPLOIT, PERFORMS PERILOUS FEAT ON TOP OF SKYSCRAPER.

IT is not an easy thing to startle Broadwayites. Satiated with sensational stunts of every description it requires something new and especially thrilling to make them take notice. Yet on the morning of Saturday, April 15th, Pearl White, Pathe's "peerless, fearless girl," gave Times Square thrill after thrill and compelled public attention to the extent of lengthy stories on the front pages of five of New York's leading newspapers and strong stories in the news columns of practically all the others, all of which goes to prove that even blasé New Yorkers admire true nerve and coolness especially in a very attractive girl like Pearl White.

The Gerard Building at 729 Seventh Avenue presents to Times Square, the heart of New York, a huge expanse of blank brick wall unrelieved by a single window. At the top, 18 stories up, is an electric sign, the text of which, line by line, may be likened to a ladder. It was by clambering down this sign that Miss White was enabled to reach the narrow scaffolding swaying in the stiff wind below, and there with a huge pot of paint assisted in making a huge wall sign.

Several interesting things happened before the little star stepped from the parapet and swung herself over space to the electric sign. On arriving at the building she was met by the representative of the Sign Painters, Paper Hangers and Decorators' Union, who presented her with a card which certified that she had been duly elected to the Union. When she stepped out upon the roof, she was greeted by a swarm of reporters and cameramen who had been tipped off as to what was about to happen. A belt attached to a cable was offered to her, but she declined it with scorn, "I've done worse things than this while working in pictures," was her comment. While she was standing upon the parapet Edward Jose, the producer of the serial, "The Iron Claw," in which Miss White stars, forced his way through the crowd with a copy of a morning paper in his hand. "Is this true, Miss White?" he demanded, pointing to an article telling of the coming stunt. On hearing that it was, Mr. Jose promptly forbade the thing. "I can't afford to have you take this risk," he urged. "My serial is not finished, and an accident would be fatal not only to you, but to 'The Iron Claw.' Please don't do it!" Miss White refused to be moved, and two seconds later was out upon the sign. In two or three minutes after a dizzy climb she reached the scaffolding while the crowds upon the roofs of neighboring buildings and in the streets set up a cheer.

Miss White's artistic efforts while upon the sign were mainly devoted to painting a huge "P. W." in four-foot high letters, which can be read for blocks.

This work of truly "high art" having been accomplished she clambered bravely up the sign again and then posed patiently while half the cameras in New York took "stills" of her.

After leaving the building the little star drove down Broadway in her car with Pathe's publicity man. At Forty-sixth Street a big traffic policeman, his face almost divided in half by a huge smile, raised his hand and stopped the car:

"Well, Pathe's Pearl," he said, "I see you did it. My money's on you every time!"

And, let it be known, so is ours.

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS FROM THE SEVENTEENTH STORY

Seventeen stories above the street, in an eighty-mile breeze, on a scaffold that kissed at intervals the bare unsympathetic wall of the Gerard Building, at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, Pearl White, the Pathe "Peerless, Fearless Girl," looked down into the street below, turned meditatively and delivered herself as follows: "Look at those street cleaners down there, Gee, in amongst all that traffic on Broadway. There's a job I wouldn't take, if I were a man, for love nor money. Think of the chances they take!"

"IRON CLAW" PARROT A TEMPERAMENTAL PLAYER

Evangeline, the temperamental parrot, which plays a prominent part in the Pathe serial, "The Iron Claw," has acquired many of the characteristics of the real star. The other day she "crabbed" scene after scene by insisting upon leaving her perch and occupying a prominent position right before the camera. After several disastrous attempts to make Evangeline realize her place as a minor player, director Edward Jose let her alone and left on a hunt for court plaster. He is now a believer in "Safety First."

PEARL WHITE'S MARVELOUS "IRON CLAW" WARDROBE

Costume's Worn by Her in This Thrilling Serial Cost the Pathe Producers $25,000, a Record Sum Even in the Munificent Movies.

Even Will Shakespeare, in the first dim years of the drama's development, realized the fundamental theatrical principle that little can be done "without a make-up," and he was, possibly, the first manager to take advantage of the popular appeal of elegance in stage attire.

Handbills announcing the premier performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," at the old Globe Theatre, told of "a greate companie of player folk caparisoned with muche splendoure." Years later. Edwin Booth set all London marvelling by appearing in "Richelieu," wearing a cloak which cost "one hundred guineas."

Since then theatrical managers the world over have vied with each other in the production of attractions, calculated, in the words of their press agents, to "eclipse all former offerings in magnificence of properties and splendor of costumes." It has, however, remained for the moving picture producer to set the high mark of expenditure for stage "finery," and a glimpse into the wardrobes of many of the American film favorites would make the most carefully frilled and furbellowed society leader green with envy.

The question as to how much the management of a film producing concern is willing to spend on her clothes is one of the first considerations of the popular screen star who is asked to sign a contract, and before she agrees to lend her art to any production she must be shown that the gowns will be sufficiently numerous and "right up to the minute" in style. The first week or two of her engagement will be occupied with running up a bill of anywhere from $2,500 to $10,000 with some exclusive modiste. The amount will vary in accordance to the length of the film play in which she is to appear. When she is to appear in a serial photoplay the amount is often much greater.

Miss Pearl White, the daring heroine of "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine," who is now starring in "The Iron Claw," a new and even more thrilling Pathe serial, has been equipped with no less than thirty-four gowns, thirteen suits, eleven cloaks and coats, innumerable hats and other accessories costing the Pathe Company $25,000, a record sum even in these days of extravagantly produced screen plays. Miss White declares she will do better work in "The Iron Claw" than in any of her previous successes. "To be well dressed is half the battle," she says, "and I know I can take care of the other half."

One of the most striking of Miss White's gowns is one of sapphire blue sequin on shaded green and blue chiffon, bound at the edges with silver ribbon and trimmed with small silver balls. The skirt is of sequin, finished with an eight-inch flounce of blue net and hemstitched in silver. The bodice is of sequin with draped tulle sleeves. This creation cost $1,000, and while wearing it Miss White is required to struggle with the villain down a flight of stairs.

Another sartorial triumph is an afternoon gown of dark blue Georgette crepe trimmed with ruffles of old blue taffeta and dark blue ribbon. French rosettes of dark blue and silver tassels provide a further trimming for the bodice which has a deep white chiffon collar, trimmed with Krimmer fur.

A sapphire blue chiffon velvet evening coat, worn by the peerless Pathe star in another episode, should make the fair members of the audience gasp at its gorgeousness. It is trimmed with solid gold ornaments set with jet. Another masterpiece of the modiste is a Russian dark blue chiffon velvet suit with a cape edged with Krimmer fur and collar and cuffs of the same material. There are fifty or more gowns, cloaks and whatnots to describe which would take up columns of space. "The Iron Claw" is the most sensational fashion show ever staged.

Some of the costumes are worn by Miss White only in one scene. After the camera handle has been turned on them for a few minutes they have served their purpose as far as the Pathe Company is concerned, and before long will probably find their way into the auction room or second-hand store.

TRULY PROTEAN, SHE PUTS OVER "HIGH LADY STUFF"

"Waddyemean, drawing-room experience," said the director of whom Jackie Saunders, "The Maude Adams of the Screen," first applied for a job. Jackie hadn't ever posed for a picture before, but she'd seen many and had made a mental decision that the most difficult part of the screen work to negotiate was the society stuff. Now Jackie hadn't ever mixed with the 400, but she had posed for artists, so her "drawing-room experience" was a reality. When the director found what her "drawing-room experience" had been, he took a chance on the girl's native keenness to supplement her good looks and forthwith hired her. This incident was brought strongly to mind by the title of Miss Saunders' latest picture, "The Girl Who Won," a three-reeler released on the Pathe Program.

"WHAT'S WHAT IN STYLE," ACCORDING TO ANNA NILSSON

It is expected that the gowns worn by Anna Nilsson in Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series will make much food for conversation among the ladies who view the film throughout the country. A well-known firm of modistes has gone to the limit of their resources in making these creations for the star and they are the very last word—le dernier cri—of what's what in style. In each episode she appears in a new set of frocks, all of which will set the feminine heart flutter.

HAROLD LLOYD

"Lonesome Luke," of the Pathe Comedy Series, Has the Missouri Mania—Must Be "Shown."

Harold Lloyd, the "Lonesome Luke" of Pathe's Lonesome Luke comedies, produced by the Rolin Film Co., is a scoffer and a disbeliever in the old adages. Nothing makes Harold madder than "a-penny-saved-is-a-penny-earned-start-at-the-bottom-and-work-up" stuff. To prove his point that the man who starts at the bottom of the ladder invariably does it because he hasn't brains enough to take the elevator, he tells the following story to young hopefuls who set out to conquer the world with nothing but persistency: "Ah, yes, perseverance is a great thing! A wonderful thing! Why, ten years ago I knew a man who hadn't a cent to his name. He hadn't even any particular talent or training, but he was persistent and said he would persevere till he made his pile. So he started out by gathering up old bones. He found there were more bones to be gathered than he could hold without the aid of some container, so he went to a basket-maker in the city, told his story and got a basket on credit. Then he went about his business again gathering up old bones. Today that man is worth—well, what do you think he's worth today?" Here the aspiring one's eyes usually gleam and he stutters something to this effect: "Oh, I don't know—millions, I suppose." "Not at all," says Lloyd; "he still owes for the basket!"

"DESERT STUFF" UNPOPULAR WITH PATHE PLAYERS.

Jose's "Light That Failed" Company Nearly Perish From Cold on "Burning Desert Sands."

A certain beautiful and popular song is built around the theme "till the sands of the desert grow cold." The burning love that vowed to endure until such an unheard of and unexpected calamity occurred would have met an untimely end had it been exposed to the biting winds that swept over the "Sahara Desert" location which producer Edward Jose and his Pathe players found on Fayerweather's Island off the city of Bridgeport, Conn., recently. Kipling, when he wrote "The Light That Failed," which Mr. Jose is now putting into a Pathe Gold Rooster Play, little reckoned when he placed his characters in the blistering heat of a Hades-like desert of the troubles he was causing an earnest, able and artistic director anxious to get his picture full of real atmosphere. But it was so, and old Boreas of the nasty disposition kicked out Aeolus, Zephyrus, and all the rest of that gentle mythological crew and set out to do his darndest. He succeeded.

The stately caravan of shivering Arabs, British soldiers, camels and horses moved across the sands under the eagle eye of Mr. Jose, which eagle eye was shedding tears under the promptings of the heartless gale.

"Remember, men," shouted the producer, "you are fairly shrivelling from intense heat! You are parched, exhausted and dripping with perspiration. You must register all that!"

Frozen fingers sought for handkerchiefs and mopped brows that were blue with cold. The man who touched his icy rifle barrel once with his bare hand showed a surprising reluctance to do it again. The "ships of the desert" ploughed through the sand as stiff-legged as so many automatic toys, squealing with protest.

It came time for a "close-up" of Robert Edeson. The camera was planted and the miserable leading man placed himself in front of it. "Mr. Edeson," said Mr. Jose from between his teeth, which chattered like castanets, "you are in the throes of mental agony——" "Quite right," interpolated Mr. Edeson very feelingly. "You must registor that," continued Mr. Jose, "and hold it until I give the word."

The cameraman turned. From Mr. Edeson's lips as he breathed issued jets of steam like vapor, a tribute to the potency of friend Boreas.

"Heaven!" said Mr. Jose, "this will never do in a desert scene! Mr. Edeson, you must hold your breath."

And so Robert Edeson registered mental agony and held his breath while the cameraman turned and turned, until his face became as purple as an Egyptian sunset.

"Say, friends," said Mr. Jose, "we'll finish this desert stuff in Nogales, Arizona!"

IMMIGRANT GIRL BECOMES A PICTURE STAR.

Anna Nilsson Proves There's Always Room At the Top.

ANNA NILSSON, co-starred with Mr. Tom Moore in "Who's Guilty?" the fourteen two-reel series of photo-novels which is about to be released by Pathe, was born in Helsingfors, Sweden, just twenty-four years ago. She has been on the stage and in motion pictures in the United States for the last nine years; yet she does not come of theatrical folks. In fact, Miss Nilsson is the first member of her family to go on the stage.

It is largely an accident—though a very lucky accident—that Miss Nilsson is today one of the real screen stars of America. That accident was caused by the triumph of curiosity over caution. Back in Helsingfors Miss Nilsson, as a little girl, knew several families who in time emigrated to the United States. She kept up a constant correspondence with her young friends and one day was overjoyed to learn that two of them were returning to their home city for a visit. When they got there they fired the imagination of Anna Nilsson with their tales of the land across the sea. When it came time for them to return they took with them the little girl who saw in New York City the place where her youthful ambitions would be justified.

For a time all Miss Nilsson did in New York, as she tells it, was to wander around open-eyed and open-mouthed. Then she learned to keep her eyes open and her mouth shut, as she puts it, and her ears very alert. Quickly she learned the language. And then she met one of the leading fashion photographers of the metropolis, who was convinced that in Anna Nilsson, then but fifteen years old, was a charming subject for the camera. Also, she could, to use the vernacular, "wear clothes." In a brief time Miss Nilsson had become the highest salaried fashion model in New York.

One day she dropped into the studios of a picture company to visit Alice Joyce. While she was sitting in Miss Joyce's dressing room a director entered and—well, then and there Miss Nilsson became booked for a theatrical career. She worked in small parts for a time; parts so small, she says, that if the audience had winked at a certain point in the films they would have missed her entirely. But by degrees she worked herself up and soon was playing ingenue roles and then ingenue leads.

For four and a half years Miss Nilsson remained with that company, appearing in more than 250 pictures in that time. In the feature presentation of "Shenandoah," Miss Nilsson was starred for the first time; also, her work in that picture established her as one of American's premier screen actresses. Then she went to play the lead in "Regeneration." She was also featured in "The Scarlet Road." Playing then opposite Robert Warwick she appeared in "To Him That Hath," one of the big dramatic roles of her career. The Arrow Company, producing the "Who's Guilty?" series, have now given her the best chance of her career.

Chief among Miss Nilsson's pleasures are swimming and horseback riding. She is a really expert equestrienne, nor does she confine herself to the bridle paths of Central Park. She can—and unhesitatingly will—take her horse over the jumps and rough country in a fashion to make even a professional horseman envious. And her ability as a swimmer and sailor is second only to her horsemanship.

SHELDON LEWIS WANTED THE WATER WARMED

Sheldon Lewis, who as the unmitigated villain in Pathe's "The Iron Claw," causes delicious shudders to chase up and down one's spine, pulled a good one the other day. Director Edward Jose had just had Mr. Lewis jump from a bridge into a river which was pleasantly spotted with ice cakes. Mr. Lewis was trying to control his shivering as he sat hugging a red hot stove in a shack near the scene of the dip. The director came in and said, "Awfully sorry, Sheldon, but the camera buckled when you did the jump and it will have be done over!" Lewis groaned and then replied: "I'll do it one one condition, old top." "What's that?" said Mr. Jose. "That you have that water warmed!" said Mr. Lewis.

NEW STUNTS IN DARING THAT FEASE EVEN PEARL WHITE

"Have a heart, George," was the way Pearl White, starring in Pathe's "The Iron Claw," expressed her idea of the scenarios for the serial. She was talking to George Brackett Seitz, the scenario editor, who was partially responsible for her "Perils" and "Exploits," and wholly so in her encounters with the villainous Legar. Mr. Seitz had thought of some new stunts which were of such a degree of daring that even "peerless, fearless Pearl" had to ask for a little consideration.

DEMON STATISTICIAN REDUCES TO FIGURES PERILS OF PEARL

Some demon statistician with a natural bent for figures has figured out just how many times Pearl White, Pathe's fearless, peerless girl has endangered her life and limb in the pursuit of her calling. He makes it 26 times in Pauline, 14 times in Elaine, and several times already in "The Iron Claw," her latest attempt to tempt Providence. Miss White certainly has the proverbial horseshoe hidden somewhere about her person, and has thus far escaped very serious injury.

CLEVER ESCAPE OF POODLE WINS HIM NEW NAME

"Let's call him Houdini!" shouted Miss Anna Nilsson, star of the Pathe "Who's Guilty?" series, as she rushed out of the Arrow Studio in Yonkers and flew pell mell down the street in pursuit of a frisky toy poodle. Half way down the street she overtook it, gathered it up and started back toward the studio just as Tom Moore, her co-star, came puffing up. "I thought the doors were all closed so's that pest couldn't get out," wheezed Moore. "So they were," said Miss Nilsson; "he was chained and the doors were closed and yet he got out! That's why," she said, smiling pleasedly up at the mystified Moore, "I'm going to call him 'Houdini!'"

POLICE CYCLE IS IN SERVICE

The police motorcycle is again in service, and an active campaign against speeding motorists will begin immediately. Automobilists who fail to obey the law in any particular will be taken to account, according to Chief of Police Dyer, who proposes to carry out the wishes of Common Council relative to traffic regulations.

Village authorities between Syracuse and this city are already enforcing speed regulations. Last Sunday three motorists were arrested at Baldwinsville, a speed trap having been set there. As yet no speed trap has been established at Phoenix.

Inasmuch as 1st street paving operation may be begun within a short time, the Syracuse-Rochester official automobile route must include the Broadway bridge, West 1st and Hannibal streets. That street within the city limits is a disgrace to the city. A little relief can be secured by traveling Worth st. as far as 6th st., but the Hannibal-Fulton bus line cannot be operated in Worth st., however, as its franchise stipulates Hannibal st. as the route.

Preachers Who Preach Having Not God's Spirit Are Powerless—Peacock

This afternoon's sermon by Dr. Peacock left an impression upon the minds of the audience which should be lasting. He dealt a few blows at the heads of the preachers who rely upon their education to accomplish God's work and who possess none of the power of Divine spirit.

The sermon was in part as follows:

John 1:6—There was a man sent from God whose name was John. The little that is known about John the Baptist can be told in a very few words. The history of the first thirty years of his life is recorded in one verse in the Gospel according to Luke, "and the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the desert until his showing unto Israel. He was the offspring of pious parents, and was the child of prayer and prophesy. He was a Nazarite, drinking neither wine or strony drink, and was filled with the Holy Spirit from his birth. He was the last prophet of the Old Testament dispensation. He was the forerunner of the Messiah. He was in truth a man sent from God.

In John 1:6 we read: "There was a man sent from God whose name was John." The same came for a witness, that he might bear witness of the light, that all might believe through him. He was not the light, but came that he might bear witness of the light. He was divinely commissioned to prepare the minds and the hearts of the people to receive Him; to lead them by repentance to God, and to point out the Messiah to Israel when He came. He preached repentance to the people, and baptised them sayiny, that they should believe in Him who should come after him, and thus he produced a very general expectation that the Messiah was about to come. He was the voice of one cryiny in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord. Make His path straight."

God Always Chooses

With a little altering what has been said of a great modern might more truly have been said of John the Baptist. "He took the suffering human race, he read each wound, each weakness clear. He struck his finger on the place and said, Thou ailest here and here. He looked on Israel's dying hour, of fitful dreams and feverish power, and said, The end is everywhere—Christ still has truth, take refuge there."

The life of John the Baptist reveals to us that God chooses His own instruments. We have many illustrations of this in the Bible, and we see many illustrations of this in the world at the present time. You remember in the book of Acts, Philip was one of the seven selected by the church, and after being selected by the church appointed by the Apostles to dispense relief to thep oor. This was not considered a very important work by the apostles. It was a work most any one could do. The Apostles said: "It is not fit that we should forsake the Word of God, and serve tables. Look ye out therefore brethren from among you seven men of good report, full of the spirit and of wisdom, who we may appoint over this business. But we will continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the Word." This was man's idea.

Paul was struck down on the way to Damascus and received a revelation from Christ and was considered the greatest of all the Apostles of Jesus.

The Successful Men

The people of the church and the ministers of the church say: "These shall do so and so, and we will do so and so." When Christ says Stephen shall proclaim a wider gospel than the other twelve had caught sight of, and Phillip shall be the first to go beyond the charmed circle of Judaism to preach the gospel. Paul shall be the greatest missionary the world has ever known." God always has and always will choose His own instruments, and it is not the business of the church nor the business of any body of any sort to settle the work of any man or any set of men in the service of Christ. He is capable of choosing His own leaders. And when men are sent out into the world by God, they are successful. They are conscious of God's presence, and there is a divine power within. That was the secret of the mighty power of John the Baptist, and it has been the secret of the power of every man who has been a preacher of distinction from that day to this. Men must be sent from God in order to accomplish God's purpose.

No man entering the service of Jesus Christ will ever be able to write success across the page of the Journal of his life until he comes to the place where he realizes that what he is he owes to Jesus Christ. Men receive power from God and not from men. Men may prepare themselves for preaching the gospel, but without the power of God and Jesus Christ as a backing he will not amount to much as a preacher. There is more in preaching the Gospel than simply an education. There is so much unrest and fighting among the ministers and church members to day that it is high time for us to get to the fundamental doctrines of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. Man, if we are going to teach our fellow men about Spiritual things, we must permit the spirit of God to guide and direct us. And we must remember that the blood of Jesus Christ is still powerful enough to cleanse from al lsin.

God wants us to do our part and if we do our work we will not go unrewarded;

For thou to me art all in all,
My honor and my wealth.
My heart's desire, my body's strength,
My soul's eternal health,
Of Jesus, Jesus, sweetest Lord,
What art thou not to me?
Each hour brings joy before unknown
Each day new liberty.
What limit is there to thee love?
Thy flight when wilt thou stay?
On, on, Our Lord is sweeter for today than yesterday.
O, Love of Jesus, blessed love,
So will it ever be. Time cannot hold thy wondrous growth,
No nor eternity.

EGG OF PET PARROT.

After Much Treatment Opal Finally Lays One.

Riverside, Cal.—The hurried administration of red pepper pills under the orders of a veterinarian and the hurried application of hot flannel cloths and other family remedies, all designed to save the life of Opal, the pet white parrot at the Mission inn, occasioned great excitement among the patrons of that hostelry.

Frank A. Miller, master of the inn, took personal care of the bird, which was found to be writhing in seeming paroxisms of pain and making the air vocal with squawkings. After submitting to the sympathetic treatment of its friends for a time the bird calmly laid an egg, Opal's first achievement along this line, although she is twenty years old.

ABLE TO SHOE HORSE AT 90.

Aged Blacksmith Kept Vow Made Years Ago.

Parnell, Mo.—Josiah Collins of this place celebrated his ninetieth birthday recently, and to keep a vow that he had frequently made, he went to the blacksmith shop on his anniversary and shod a horse.

Mr. Collins, who is a native of Ohio, began his trade when he was nineteen years old. He has followed the blacksmithing business all his life and has often declared that, if he lived, he would shoe a horse or mule on his ninetieth birthday, no matter how unruly the animal might be. He kept his vow and was much pleased again to perform the familiar task.

STEAM AUTO FOR RAILWAYS.

New Car to Carry Forty-four Persons and Make Mile a Minute.

A steam automobile railway car, using kerosene as fuel, capable of making a mile a minute and carrying forty-four passengers, is being built by the Unit Railway Car company in Newton, Mass. The members of this concern consist of F. E. and F. O. Stanley, who manufacture a steam automobile that bears their name. For a long time the Stanleys have been working upon a plan of adapting the steam automobile engine to railroad and street railway purposes. They have now reached a point where the first car, which may be described as the steam automobile enlarged and applied to rail conditions, will be on the rails in the course of a month or two.

F. E. Stanley estimates that with the present cost of kerosene the operation of the car will be about a cent a mile. It has a baggage compartment and a compartment for the engineer, weighs about 35,000 pounds and will cost about $10,000. The body is of steel and is equipped with airbrakes, electric lighting system and standard equipment. Designs have been made for a smaller car to carry twenty-six passengers and adapted more for service similar to that of trolley cars.

WOMEN'S PART IN POLITICS.

Suffrage Prevails In States Which Have Ninety-one Electoral Votes.

When the Republican and Democratic parties meet in convention next June they will find that equal suffrage has a very different status from what it had in former conventions. At the time of the presidential election of 1912 the states in which women voted controlled thirty-seven electoral votes. At the next presidential election the states where women vote will control ninety-one electoral votes—more than New York and New Jersey combined.

Since 1912 six states—Arizona, Kansas, Oregon, Illinois, Montana and Nevada—have given women the right to vote. If Iowa, where the question of woman's enfranchisement comes before the voters on June 5, joins the equal suffrage commonwealths thirteen more electoral votes will be added to the ninety-one of the enfranchised states.

GERMANY'S REPLY EXPECTED THURSDAY

Washington, May —A report from Ambassador Gerald containing a fore cast of the German reply to this country's demand for a modification of her submarine methods is expected in Washington within then ext twenty-four hours.

It is thought probable this communication will arrive in time for tomorrow's Cabinet meeting. It is a-together unlikely that the full reply will arrive in Washington before Thursday at the earliest.

The reply has not been given to Mr. Gerard, so far as Washington has been advised. Allowing forty-eight hours for transmission, it is not thought possible that it can reach Washington in time for Cabinet consideration before Friday.

It is authoritatively learned that the German reply, while agreeing that submarine operations should be conducted in conformity with international alw, will plainly point out that in Germany's view it is impossible to conduct submarine welfare in this manner when enemy merchantmen are violating international law by carrying on cruiser warfare against submarines.

WILSON DEFERS FIXING CAMPAIGN FUND LIMIT

Washington — Suggestions for changes in the Corrupt Practices Act, including one to limit expenditures in a Presidential campaign by a national committee to $250,000, were laid before President Wilson today by Senator Owen and Representative Rucker. Mr. Rucker preferred that State expenditures be limited to sums raised therein without a fixed total for the whole country.

The President did not pass the suggestions, but will confer again on the subject.

GERMAN CLOCKS SET TO GAIN DAYLIGHT HOUR

Berlin —The so-called "Summer time" became effective last midnight, the clocks being advanced an hour for the conservation of daylight.

The transition occurred without any disturbance to any branch of activity. Even railroad schedules were so arranged that only a few hours' inconvenience was caused.

A Nest Of Spies

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Captain Robert Edgerton of the staff of a general commanding the right wing of the British troops in France was directed to take an important communication to the general commanding the left wing of the same army. It was contained in a fat envelope and must be carried in the captain's side coat pocket.

Edgerton took with him an orderly, an Irishman named Michael Farriday, recommended by his company commander for possessing a cool head. Mike, like a good soldier who knew his place, rode forty paces to the rear whenever there was no especial danger.

The two zigzagged along, sometimes in advance of the British line, sometimes in the rear. At one moment they would be riding through shot and shell, at another would be where there was all the quiet of a rural cemetery. The captain had been told that there was no need for hurry; all that was expected of him was to get the message through during the day. At noon he stopped at a house and asked for some dinner. The occupant claimed to be a Frenchman, but Edgerton could not make out exactly what was his native nationality. At any rate, he spoke a kind of French to which the captain was not used. The day was warm, the roads dusty, and the officer, who was an English gentleman and could not brook dirt, asked to be shown a place where he could wash his face and hands.

His host showed him to a room on the second floor, where the captain took off his uniform coat and plunged his face into a basin of water. When he had finished his host stood with his coat in his hands ready to help him put it on. The man had already brushed off the dust, doing the work while the captain's face and eyes were covered either with water or a towel. And this was no brief time, for if there is one thing about which an Englishman is particular it is his ablutions.

As soon as Edgerton had buttoned his coat he put his hand to his breast to feel if the message was still there and, feeling its bulk, complacently descended to the dinner table. A woman had cooked the meal, but she said nothing to the captain, who ate while the others served him. The man talked a good deal about the war, was very bitter against the Germans and hoped they would soon be driven from French territory. He was continually going out to the kitchen for dishes, and on one of these exits Edgerton heard him speak a few words to the woman.

Now, Edgerton was a Cambridge professor of languages. The words spoken were Persian. They were said in a tone so low that he could hear only a few of them. These were "Be ready to"— A vague feeling that something was wrong about the couple seized upon Edgerton, and he involuntarily put his hand to his breast to see that his dispatch was there. Feeling its bulk he was again satisfied. Before leaving he offered to pay for his dinner, but the man was too good a patriot to take anything.

Meanwhile, the orderly remained without, munching a piece of bread and meat the woman had given him. As soon as the captain appeared Mike led his horse to him, Edgerton mounted, and the two started on their journey. They had not gone far before Mike called from the rear:

"Captain!"

"Well?" turning in his saddle.

"Have ye the dispatch?"

"Certainly I have. Why do you ask?"

"Thim's not Frenchies; they're Turks or somethin' o' the like."

Edgerton unbuttoned his coat, took out what he had been supposing to be his dispatch to find that it was a newspaper folded to the shape of the package with which he had started on his mission. He was thunderstruck. Turning, without a word he rode back to the house he had just left. It was deserted.

Mike, who had meanwhile caught sight of something flitting through a wood, gave chase and returned with the woman. She had carried the dispatch, dropped it, and Mike had his grip on it.

"Ride for the nearest troops!" cried Edgerton, "and bring them. We've stepped into a nest of spies!"

The captain remained where he was, guarding the woman, and in a few minutes Mike returned with a small troop of cavalrymen. They beat the bushes and captured the man.

Edgerton narrated what had occurred to the officer in command, who told him that information had been going to the enemy from some source and they had been unable to locate it. The house was carefully examined, and under it was found a telephone machine, from which a wire ran underground to a hill occupied by the enemy.

Edgerton, having given his testimony, rode on, delivered his message, and when he returned on passing the house where he had dined he found it razed. The occupants had both been shot. As Edgerton rode on he mused aloud:

"I wonder how they got that dispatch without my knowing it?"

"What were ye doin' all the time, captain?"

Edgerton told him how he had washed and dried his face.

"Faith, captain," said Mike, "ye can't see with your eyes full of water or through a towel."

A PRINCESS' LOT

The Grand Duchess of Luxemburg Is Closely Guarded.

REPORTED TO BE ENGAGED.

Barely Twenty-one Years Old, the Youngest Ruler In Europe, Marie Adelaide Is Practically a Prisoner In Her Own Palace.

It is reported that the young Grand Duchess of Luxemburg will marry soon, but the name of the fortunate bridegroom to be is withheld.

Marie Adelaide is one of the most pathetic as well as one of the most romantic figures in the world today. This pretty young girl, barely twenty-one years old, was adored by her prosperous little country before the war broke out. Today she is practically a prisoner in her own palace. Unable to get out without a military escort and forced to look from her prison windows upon a people starving, terrified and forced to live upon charity, she has striven bravely to assert her rights and those of her people in the face of the overwhelming power of the German empire, but the struggle is naturally a hopeless one.

To complete her misery great pressure has been brought to bear upon her to marry a German prince, but this she has refused to do, as she bitterly resents the German invasion of her country. For more than a year the kaiser's agents have worked hard to persuade the youngest ruler in Europe to become the bride of a German prince, the object being to insure the future control of Luxemburg. So strong did this pressure become that the spirited young duchess revolted against it and, stamping her foot on the floor of her palace, exclaimed:

"I really must be left alone. If I cannot find peace in my own palace I shall soon be forced to seek it in a convent."

The grand duchess is the oldest of six sisters. Her family is a branch of the house of Orange, which rules in Holland. When Wilhelmina became queen of Holland she could not succeed to Luxemburg because of the Salic law. A cousin of Wilhelmina's became Grand Duke of Luxemburg. When he died in 1912, leaving only girl children, the Luxemburg parliament passed a new law making his daughters eligible to the throne.

Colors For Middle Age.

It is safe to say that few women of middle age can wear brown successfully. When the hair is turning white or gray it is particularly unbecoming, as the gray and brown do not harmonise in the least. Brown seems to bring out all the unbecoming yellow qualities in gray hair. Dark blue, on the other hand, lends it a bluish white tinge that is soft and particularly lovely. If your face is sallow never wear green. If, however, your hair is turning gray, but your skin is white and clear, with a soft pink flush in the cheeks, take to green kindly, as it will be most becoming. Lavender and purple are really beautiful on most middle aged women, while black and gray are equally successful. White, however, seldom looks well unless the skin is almost flawless.

Cream of Beet Soup.

Materials: One cupful of beets well cooked, one pint of mutton stock, two teaspoonfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of butter, one pint of milk, salt and pepper.

Utensils: Two saucepans, fine sieve, spoon and cup.

Directions: Cut the beets fine and simmer in the mutton stock fifteen minutes. Rub through sieve. Mix the butter and flour and add to the mutton stock and beet puree. Heat thoroughly, stirring constantly, and add to a pint of hot milk; season with salt and pepper.

Cinnamon Apples.

Core and wash six good sized tart apples. Mix together three rounding tablespoonfuls of sugar with one teaspoonful of cinnamon. Place the apples in a baking pan with three tablespoonfuls of water. Sprinkle over the prepared sugar and bake in a hot oven until tender. Serve hot or cold with thick, sweet cream.

Over the Desert

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

I found myself in Bombay in May of the year 1862, after a year and a half in other parts of India, and very soon thereafter it was announced in the local papers that "Professor Mazam, the celebrated French aeronaut, would soon make an ascension from the public gardens." Three or four days later I ran across the professor and was surprised and gratified to find him to be none other than an old friend whom I had traveled with in China.

Mazam was now going into ballooning just for the fun and adventure it might bring him, and when he invited me to accompany him on his first trip I was not five seconds in accepting the invitation. We packed the car with provisions enough to last a week, took rifles, revolvers and ammunition along and made all preparations for a long journey.

Without her burden of baggage the balloon could have carried five or six men. As it was, she shot up like a bird when all was ready to let go, and in a few seconds the city and its harbor were far below us. We at once started on our journey, making a pace of about fifteen miles an hour.

When night came we added 500 feet to our altitude as an offset to the dew, and as the weather was fine we both lay down to sleep. I awoke twice during the night, but to find all quiet, and when I turned out first at sunrise it was to find the Arabian coast almost under our feet, and soon we were sailing over land.

We had no sooner left the water than the breeze began to subside, and our pace was reduced to five or six miles per hour. We knew that a countercurrent would soon be met with, and both of us were looking over the edge of the basket at the morning panorama below when we suddenly espied a native village. It was, rather, the camp of some wandering tribe, all the shelters being of canvas or skin. We saw camels, asses, goats and horses, with many people moving about, and we had only got sight of them when they saw us. Some fell down and others ran away, and we were laughing at their fright when we heard the report of a gun and the sing of a bullet.

"Over with the ballast!" shouted Mazam, and the next instant we were so far above them that their horses appeared to be mere specks.

Along in the afternoon, while sailing about a thousand feet above the earth at a slow rate, we came to an open country which seemed to be destitute of human life, and the professor announced that we would descend and replenish our stock of water and see what was to be seen. After the anchor had trailed along the ground for about a hundred yards it caught in the limbs of a fallen tree, and we soon hauled our craft down and secured her. We were within ten rods of a small watercourse, and while I was filling our water keg Mazam shot a few birds, and we cooked and ate them on the spot and decided to make a night of it where we were. I judge it was about midnight when Mazam shook me and whispered:

"Come; here is a sight worth seeing. Be careful not to make any unnecessary noise."

As I looked over the basket I saw two immense lions, standing about twenty feet apart and facing each other.

The animals approached each other slowly with growls of defiance, each carefully lifting his paws, but they did not diminish the distance over a rod before both stopped and stood as if cut from stone. Suddenly one of the beasts made a rush so swift that we could not follow him with our eyes, and they grappled and rolled over and over on the ground. Just as we thought that both would be killed in the fray one of them turned tail and ran, being hotly pursued by the victor.

The remainder of the night passed without incident, and as daylight came a breeze from the north came with it. After a cold bite we lifted our anchor and were off, but we had scarcely begun to move before we found ourselves above a long, drawn out caravan, which had just taken up its line of march. Perhaps all knew our craft to be a balloon; perhaps they believed it to be some great bird. At any rate they began firing at us, and the very first bullet struck the basket. It was an open country, and such men as were mounted on horses could keep up with us.

"Now, then," said Mazam as the bullets continued to sing about us, "overboard with that keg of water, all extra clothing, everything to give us a lift out of range."

Inside of an hour the balloon began to approach the earth again, and as we were driving toward Murbat we threw over all the rest of the ballast, even including the spyglass and the box of bread. In a short time we began to descend again, however, finally landing in a field of maize just outside of Murbat.

It had been a most delightful and exciting balloon trip, and, although I was anxious to go again, it turned out that I was not to make another voyage among the clouds. Shortly after our ascension I married a Bombay girl who had a horror of balloons.

Poor Mazam! This intrepid adventurer had made six successful ascensions in India and was getting an international reputation as an aeronaut when he met his fate. On his seventh trip something went wrong with the balloon and he fell with it from a terrible height.

NEW COLOR SCHEMES.

Clever Women Design Their Own Decorations These Days.

Magpie rooms have long been in favor and pronounced as a success because of the way in which this combination of black and white intensifies the color of its inhabitants' dresses. Now it is to be followed by other bird schemes. The woman who loves to work out color schemes for her house can find no more interesting study than the plumage of birds. It ranges from the most delicate pastel tints to deep metallic greens and blacks.

The idea of a peacock room has been immortalized by an artist, but it may be carried out in simpler terms by any woman with a good eye for color and texture. Another idea is to have a peacock suit of rooms. The bedrooms may be decorated in the softest of blues and greens, the living rooms in the gorgeous bronze and gold, the brilliant blue and luminous green. Even the domesticated birds of the farmyard may suggest good decorative schemes. There is a smoky gray sort of hen with a comb of soft geranium red which might inspire the prettiest of boudoir.

A bluebird room for children is rather obvious, but usually very satisfactory. A stork nursery just devised for a new baby has a faint gray paper, coral red cushions and curtains and white furniture. Round the white frieze of this room go flapping large storks with their delicate red beaks and legs and their gray tinted plumage. These appropriate birds were cut out, colored and pasted up by the young art student aunt who designed the whole room.

HE WAS ONLY A NEWSBOY.

But He Had a Motto That Pointed to the Road to Success.

A newsboy stood on a blustery night with a pile of newspapers at his feet watching for customers at a subway entrance in New York. In a bantering way as a gentleman hurried by he said to the little newsboy, "You can't sell all those papers tonight." The lad looked up with a smile and said, "I can try."

No bread line or bundle day for this sturdy American lad or for the fine, wholesome man he is bound to be as he grows up.

"I can try!" Good for the newsboy who said it; a motto for the girl at school poring over her lessons, for the mechanic toiling in the shop, the merchant busy in the counting room, the banker in his office, the professional man at his desk, the preacher in his study, the architect with his drawings and the astronomer at the telescope.

The world has been built by those who can and who do try. They put to shame the idler, the sluggard, the drone, the complaining and the ne'er-do-wells forever thrusting themselves forward to beg for special consideration.

The world would be better in every way if it had a revival of the good old fashioned spirit of self dependence that American fathers and mothers taught their children at their knees, mingling patriotism with their prayers. God speed the day when the spirit of young America shall be everywhere.—John A. Sleicher in Leslie's.

BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

An Ancient Legend That Every One Should Know by Heart.

There is an ancient legend of a man who faced the great day of final reckoning. He had lived as well perhaps as most of us while here below. At last he stood before the Judge of all the earth. His record was unfolded. The face of the Judge seemed to him to grow clouded as he traced its story. The record was pushed aside. The eyes of the Judge were lifted until they rested upon the man. The lips were parted as if the sentence was about to fall.

Suddenly from every quarter there gathered a shining host of forms which pressed about the judgment seat. They appeared to be in conference with the Judge. It looked as though with eager faces they were urging certain claims. Then they vanished from sight as mysteriously as they came. The Judge smiled, turned to a messenger clad in radiant robes of office and bade him conduct the man whose case he had just considered into the realms of the blessed.

As they moved away the man said to his guide, "Tell me, who were those who just now stood in numbers about the Judge and held converse with him?"

"Those," replied the conductor, "were friends who saved you. They were the deeds of kindness and of unselfish service you scattered far and wide while you lived on earth." — Detroit Free Press.

YOUR FLOWER BEDS.

How to Set Plants So That They Will Thrive and Bloom.

Where beds are to be filled with a single plant they should be planted in even rows an equal distance apart and the plants alternated in the rows, which will give each plant considerably more room and light. It is well to have these lines laid out and the places for the plants marked before any plants are lifted from the hotbed, in order that the planting may go forward as rapidly and smoothly as possible. A board with chalk marks on the edge will accomplish this admirably for small beds, or a cord with bits of white cloth tied at intervals, or chalk marks even will be useful in long beds or lines.

In planting make a hole in the earth with the trowel large enough to hold the root of the plant in a natural position and place the plant therein, drawing up the earth about the roots and pressing it snugly down; pour in sufficient water to fill the hole, and when it has partially soaked away draw up the remaining earth and press firmly.

Make a fine dust mulch about the plant by working the soil lightly with the trowel, and if any damp places show after the plant has been set a few moments go over the soil again or add dry earth from another part of the bed if necessary. The planting may be hastened by making a row of holes across the beds before beginning to set the plants, then placing the plants in each before applying water, but drawing up part of the earth; the water is then placed in all the holes, and by the time the last is filled the first has soaked away sufficiently to allow of filling up and finishing; this saves an appreciable amount of time when there is a large amount of planting to do.

No shade or covering of any kind will be needed if the planting has been well and thoroughly done, nor is it necessary or advisable to wait for signs of rain before planting, though planting at the edge of a spell of rainy weather has doubtless advantages. But planting before a summer shower is to be avoided, as this is usually followed by hot weather, and under the influence of a hot sun the moisture in the soil evaporates rapidly, and the soil must be constantly cultivated to retain what water it contains.

After the planting is completed go over the beds carefully and where any moisture has drawn to the surface restore the dry mulch by cultivation or by adding dry soil from some other place. If the planting has been well done the plants will not need watering for several days, indeed are far better off without it. If the weather is unusually dry as soon as the plants begin to grow or show that they are becoming established by the way they settle themselves in the ground and turn toward the light water may be given in sufficient quantity to thoroughly soak the ground and the following day the soil worked over with rake or trowel to restore the dust mulch. This is better than repeated waterings.

How to Make a Dress Bag.

Make a bag of any kind of material desired (a pretty flowered cretonne is suitable), the length of the garment to be covered with the back piece a little longer than the front, so it can be brought up and fastened to the front side with buttons and button holes or "snaps."

Draw up the front to fit around the hanger, thus entirely inclosing the garment. In the interior of the bag make two or three small pockets, fill with sachet, camphor or some other protection against moths if garment is not in use.

HOMEMADE BREAD

How to Make the Staff of Life Quickly and Well.

Break two cakes of yeast into a cupful of water at blood temperature. Put a tablespoonful of sugar on the yeast to stimulate its quick growth. While this soaks, warm two cupfuls of milk with a cupful of water. This, with the water over the yeast, makes a quart of wetting sufficient for four loaves.

In a large mixing bowl put several sieves of flour and make a depression in the middle of the flour, in which put a level tablespoonful of salt and a heaping tablespoonful of lard. Pour the liquid and the yeast upon the flour and mix with the hands, working the flour from the outside into the liquid in the middle of the mass. Make a stiff dough and lift the ball out, putting away any remaining flour for future use. If the flour is granular let the dough lie on the board for ten minutes, covered with a warm bowl, that the flour may properly absorb the moisture. If the flour is not granular this wait is not necessary.

Now shape the dough without kneading, lay the ball in a buttered bowl and butter the surface of the dough to keep it soft. Cover and let it double in a warm place, an hour to an hour and a half. If you wish still further to hurry it set the bowl in warm water and place a smaller bowl of warm water on the lid of the large bowl containing the dough.

When doubled shape quickly into the baking pans for the second rising and bake when again light. This recipe is excellent for use when one must have bread in a hurry. Half of the dough may be made into crusty rolls.

Shampoo For White Hair.

The very best shampoo for white hair is the white of an egg beaten into a pint of soft, cool water. Rub the hair with the egg, making a soft lather, after wetting the hair with cold water and finish the same as with other shampoo, except in the last rinsing water, which should be cold. A few drops of the best indigo, not ordinary bluing, should be added to tinge the water. This acts exactly as does bluing on white goods, leaving the hair a pure white and not in the least tinged with yellow.

Pale eyebrows and lashes make a face expressionless. They can be coaxed into a better growth by rubbing the eyebrows nightly with vaseline and applying to the roots of both the eyebrows and eyelashes a tonic made by mixing five grains of sulphate of quinine with one ounce of sweet almond oil. Apply this with a fine sable brush, which comes for the purpose.

Cheap Fruit Cake.

Cream one cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of butter; then add three tablespoonfuls of molasses and one beaten egg, one small tablespoonful of cinnamon, one teaspoonful of mixed spices, one cupful of sour milk, with one teaspoonful of salt to foam; one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cupful of chopped raisins, and you may add citron and chopped figs, which will make it much nicer; two cupfuls of flour, adding alternately with the milk till all is used. Beat thoroughly. Flour the fruit and bake in a moderate oven.

Free Muscles.

Garters are, happily, being relegated to the errors of the past. It stands to reason that any tightening on such a busy and important part of the leg is dangerous, and many men and women owe varicose veins to the garters of their youth.

GARDEN CUES.

Plant Seed on Cloudy Day and Water Ground With a Spray.

Always select a rather still, cloudy day to plant the seed. If the day is windy some of it (which is very fine) will be blown about, and this must be avoided. After sowing, water the ground with the fine spray in the nozzle of the hand watering can. Never use a garden hose for this purpose or you will injure much of the seed.

A garden that is composed entirely of blooming plants must be planted in a sunny situation. Not even a branch of some tall tree must cast a single shadow across it. Where the shadow falls there will be few flowers.

In the beginning it will require a certain care. The plants will spring up in close masses, which must be thinned out. Each plant, if it is to develop to its full quota of beauty, must have room for individual development. When thinning out your garden give the plants you do not need to your neighbor or to some friend. This may encourage her to make a garden.

For the first few weeks it may be rather hard to distinguish weeds from flowers, but in a short time the former can be detected and uprooted easily.

Keep down all weeds and bear in mind that they are usually more vigorous growers and have stronger constitutions than other flowers, and unless they are destroyed you will have a garden of weeds, with only here and there a few very indifferent plants bearing even more indifferent blooms.

Before sowing the seed make a rough sketch of the plot. This will prevent a clash of colors when the blooming season comes. Unless you take this precaution you are apt to have brilliant yellow poppies growing next to red verbenas and other garish combinations.

As a second equally important reason, every plant has its own height, and if you would see all your posies you must have the low growing varieties along the borders and the tall ones in the background. So plant the hollyhocks in the back beyond the phlox, which are not so tall, and the sweet alyssum in front of the garden pinks for the same reason. Your plan may be ever so crude, but it takes only a few minutes and will eliminate future confusion and disappointments.

Baked Crabs.

Mix with the contents of a can of deviled crab meat, breadcrumbs or pounded crackers, pepper and salt to taste. Mince some cold ham. Have the baking pan well buttered, place therein first a layer of crab meat prepared as above, then a layer of minced ham, and so on, alternating until the pan is filled. Cover the top with crumbs and bits of butter and bake.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SEASONABLE PUDDINGS.

PLUM PUDDING NOT TOO RICH—Put half a pound of well chopped beef suet into a bowl, half a pound of raisins, half a pound of dark brown sugar, half a pound of breadcrumbs, half a pound of flour the grated rind and the juice of one lemon; one teaspoonful of mixed spice, two tablespoonfuls of molasses, mixing well with a wooden spoon as each ingredient is added. Now put in a saltspoonful of salt and stir in a pint of milk or a little more if necessary. Dip the pudding cloth into boiling water, sprinkle with flour, spread it over a bowl and pour in the pudding mixture. Boil hard for three hours, filling up the saucepan as the water boils away. When taking up the pudding dip it into cold water for a second. It will then turn out firm and whole.

Grandmother's Indian Pudding.—One quart of milk, seven tablespoonfuls of Indian meal, one cupful of molasses, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Put the milk in a kettle and when scalding hot stir in the meal, which has been wet with a little cold milk. Take from the stove and add the molasses, the salt and one-half cupful of cold milk. If you wish, add two tablespoonfuls of chopped suet to make it richer. Bake two hours in a moderate oven.

Prune Pudding.—One pound prunes, whites of three eggs, two-thirds cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of vanilla. Stew prunes until tender in as little water as possible. Pour off juice, remove stones and chop fine with silver knife. Beat whites of eggs until stiff, mix well with prunes, add sugar and beat hard again. Flavor with the vanilla, pour in unbuttered dish and bake in moderate oven twenty minutes. Serve with cream or milk.

Individual Apple Puddings.—Put a tablespoonful of thick sweet apple sauce in greased muffin tins. Make a batter of two cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of shortening worked in with the finger tips and milk to make a batter like cake. Put a tablespoonful of batter over apple in each muffin tin. Bake until batter is cooked. Turn out of tins and serve with a lemon sauce.

SENDING MINISTERS HOME NOT NEW CUSTOM FOR UNITED STATES

But Never In History Has a German Ambassador Been Handed His Passports.

British Representatives Have Been Sent Back For Interference With Commerce.

WHEN the negro messenger of the state department in Washington, who for almost forty years has been the American government's official passport carrier, visits the German embassy—if the break with Germany comes—it will be the first time in the history of the United States that this country has severed relations with that empire or with any of the states which were united to form the kaiser's realm.

Since our government was founded many ambassadors have been sent home, but in the majority of cases the cause was their own indiscretions. The closest approximation to the present situation was in the case of the famous Citizen Genet, in the administration of Washington, and even that meddling Frenchman was more to blame for his recall than the Girondist government which had sent him here to enlist this country as an ally of France in her war with England.

Genet traveled from one part of the country to the other, campaigning for sympathy for his own country and rousing factional and racial strife. So ardent was he in his campaign that he publicly attacked the most prominent persons, and after a spectacular controversy with John Jay and Rufus King, wrote an insolent letter to President Washington. Soon thereafter France was requested to recall him. Passports were handed to him, but he never returned to France. He had married a daughter of Governor Clinton, and he lived in obscurity on his estates in the Hudson valley until 1836.

Arrange Treaty With British.

Hardly had Genet passed from public view when, in 1794, the British navy, and especially British privateers, seized American ships and cargoes by the scores under the pretense that they might be carrying aid to France. The indignation of the country was great, but as there was no ambassador to send home the house of representatives passed a bill prohibiting all commercial intercourse between citizens of the two countries. The senate voted it down, and then Washington sent John Jay to London as envoy extraordinary to arrange a treaty. The treaty was arranged, but when the senate advised Washington to sign it the whole country was roused to anger. Jay and Washington were bitterly denounced. Virginia threatened to secede, and writers in the newspapers even accused the president of venality. The treaty was so favorable to the British that the French saw in it a secret alliance with England, and as a result the Robespierre government demanded the recall of Gouverneur Morris, the American minister.

Morris was the first American envoy to have his passports returned by the government to which he was assigned, but the two countries did not go to war, although the international situation was as tangled as it is today, and Washington was bitterly assailed by his political opponents. Although the fact is forgotten nowadays, France and the United States were bound together by a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance, yet as soon as Great Britain declared war and attacked France the American government issued a proclamation of neutrality. This on its face was a breach of the national contract, and Washington was severely scored for not aiding France, for permitting the British to bring prizes into American ports, for allowing Englishmen to board an American ship in Long Island sound and for permitting English warships to be fitted out in American ports. But in those days France had troubles plethoric at home, and she sought no additional ones across the ocean, although it appeared to her that Washington was doing his utmost to provoke a war.

Minister Monroe Recalled.

James Monroe was sent to France as Morris' successor, but he aggravated the situation, the tenseness of which had been increased by the capture of an American ship near the Delaware capes by a French privateer. As a result of this capture the French minister, Adet, was called on for an explanation. He could give none, and Monroe was recalled. Charles C. Pinckney was sent abroad as his successor, but the French directory refused to receive him until her grievances had been righted. All America was incensed, the president proclaiming a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer; congress was called; President Adams denounced "the refusal on the part of France to receive our minister is the denial of a right." But war did not follow. Nor did it follow soon thereafter when Pinckney, Gerry and Marshall, who had been ordered to heal the differences with France, were boldly told by Talleyrand that money would mend all the ills of the Paris government. American anger was great over this demand for tribute; war resolutions were introduced in congress, the navy was increased, crowds shouting "Down with France!" paraded the streets of Philadelphia, New York and Boston; commercial intercourse was suspended, cities were fortified, and even the navy and privateers were ordered to capture the cruisers of France. Yet France did not declare war.

During the Napoleonic wars the foreign interests of the United States were constantly menaced by one or the other of the belligerents. The decrees of Napoleon were usually aimed at Great Britain, but they almost invariably hit American commerce, and the British orders in council just as frequently harmed the interests of the United States. In those days no European power permitted any foreign ships to carry on any trade with her colonies, and as the United States had no colonies of her own, these orders in council worked a great hardship on the American merchant marine. On Nov. 15, 1806, a law went into effect forbidding the importation from Great Britain of a long list of goods. This was regarded as a polite way of breaking off diplomatic relations.

Blow to American Commerce.

One week after this bill was passed and before the law became effective a British warship attacked an American ship two miles off Sandy Hook and shot off the head of the helmsman. The body of the sailor was viewed by indignant crowds in New York. President Jefferson ordered British warships to leave American ports and sent commissioners to England to demand redress. They arrived abroad just as Napoleon issued his famous Berlin decree blockading the British islands and practically wiping out American trade. The British countered by prohibiting neutral trade with France, and as America was practically the only nation then trading with France, the blow was a most serious one to the commerce of this country. The United States was ground between the two millstones—England trying to drive America into a war against Napoleon, France trying to force her into strife with England.

At this crucial juncture the British Whigs fell from power, and while the new government was studying the situation a bomb upset everything. The Leopard, a British warship, which had been assisting in a high handed blockade of the American coast for three years, made an attack on the Chesapeake, an American warship suspected of having British deserters aboard, killed three and wounded eighteen of the crew and almost sank the vessel before the American commander hauled down his flag. Again the country was aroused over the outrage. President Jefferson issued a proclamation shutting our ports to armed ships of England, troops were called out, congress was gathered and a commissioner sent to England to demand redress. After many delays Great Britain disavowed the Leopard's acts and recalled her commander. Then congress, to cure all the ills that Napoleon and Britain had heaped on America, passed a law prohibiting American ships from leaving the ports of the United States for those of any foreign power.

But plenty of ships left American ports surreptitiously and so crowded the harbors of Spain that Napoleon saw his opportunity and seized them all. Again the war cry was raised, and the French minister was about to be sent home when the Spaniards rose, drove Napoleon out of the country and liberated every American ship.

Meanwhile Pinckney, the American minister at London, tried to heal the breach between the two countries growing out of the orders in council. He was unable to make progress, and, taking advantage of the failure of the British to appoint a minister to succeed Jackson, who had been sent home because he had insulted President Madison, asked for his passports and in 1811 left London in a threatening manner. This was the only time in history that an American minister returned from England in a huff. In the following months the relations between the two countries grew more strained over the impressment of American seamen and the seizure of American cargoes, and in June, 1812, war was declared. Then the British minister received his passports, but in a different spirit from that in which his predecessors had received theirs.

Other serious breaches of diplomatic relations, of course, occurred preceding the war with Mexico in 1846 and the more recent war with Spain. The United States for a long time had no diplomatic relations with Servia after the king and queen were slain in Belgrade, nor did this country recognize Huerta in 1913-14, although the United States legation in Mexico City was kept open during the absence of the American minister. In 1868 the American government withdrew its minister, General McMahon, from Paraguay and declined to hold any diplomatic intercourse with that country because President Lopez had arrested, imprisoned and tortured an American and an Englishman who were in the personal suit of the American minister. A congressional inquiry placed the blame on the minister, and no war followed the breaking off of relations.

THIRTY thousand American engineers are making a card index survey of American industry so that it may be prepared for its vital part in defending the Country, if need comes. The past eighteen months have taught us here in America what lack of industrial preparedness has meant to some of the countries now at war. These nations had the ships and they had the men; but when the hour struck, their factories were not able to furnish the colors with arms and shells and powder. Their factories were not prepared. And our factories are not prepared.

But it is not enough to draw a moral. In the United States five great Engineering Societies — Civil, Mining, Mechanical, Electrical and Chemical — have pledged their services to the Government of the United States, and are already working hand in hand with the Government to prepare industry for the national defense. They receive no pay and will accept no pay. All they seek is opportunity to serve their country, that she may have her industries mobilized for defense.

All elements of the nation's life — the manufacturers, the business men, and the workingmen — should support this patriotic and democratic work of the engineers, and assist them cheerfully when asked. There can be no better national insurance against war.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, representing all advertising interests have offered their free and hearty service to the President of the United States, in close co-operation with these five Engineering Societies, to the end that the Country may know what the Engineers are doing. The President has accepted the offer. The Engineers have welcomed the co-operation.

This advertisement, published without cost to the United States, is the first in a nation-wide series to call the country to the duty of co-operating promptly and fully with the Engineers.

TROOPS IN MEXICO FACE HARDSHIPS

Not a Murmur of Discontent Is Heard, However.

INDIAN SCOUTS AT WORK.

Ready to Search All the Mountains For Some Trace of the Outlaws—Efficiency of American Soldiers Leaves Vivid Impression on Mexicans—Some Are Friendly and Some Are Sullen.

As troop column succeeds troop column, horse, foot and guns, marching southward over the primitive trails of Chihuahua uplands and through the rambling towns and villages, it would appear as if the entire regular establishment of the United States land forces were being concentrated to encompass Francisco Villa and his brigand following, says a correspondent.

To the white troops and the black that have succeeded one another in the several phases of the man hunt has been added a force of Apache Indian scouts. These red men arrived at field headquarters the other day attired as are the white and the black, in the regulation olive drab of the United States army, uniform in garb as in purpose with the others of Uncle Sam's fighting men.

The Apaches appear to be intent upon performing their particular function in the broadly laid military scheme of General Pershing. Therein they differ not at all from the other units of the expeditionary force detailed to exact retribution for the Columbus atrocity.

As the most mobile of the troops are being thrust into the mountain gaps in every direction through which the fugitive fox of the Sierras might elude his pursuers all manner of rumors are flying over the face of the land.

Troops Impress Natives.

The strength and obvious efficiency of the American troops have left a profound impression upon the Mexicans. Not all of the Mexicans of northern Chihuahua are inclined to brand Villa for what he is, for many regard him with superstitious fear and awe. They know him for what he was.

Others, and these are many, who have suffered grievously in their peaceful pursuits by his indiscriminate forays look with relief, if not with sympathy, upon the advent of the foreign troops upon their soil. There might have been anxiety in the beginning, for the United States border is nearly 300 miles away, and these peacefully inclined farmers never travel far and know but vaguely of the nation to the northward. With the scrupulous observance of all the rights of the inhabitants of the territory over which our troops are operating and the unaccustomed sensation of security from all molestation accompanying the occupation of this section by the expeditionary forces, the Mexican farmers are daily growing more friendly.

Anti-American Propaganda.

That Villa and his lieutenants are carrying forward a carefully prepared propaganda, with the purpose of effecting a union of several factions to war upon the United States, is indicated by the rumors that are wafted abroad in guarded tones by a section of the population. There can be no effective resistance offered, however, so long as the Mexican government remains friendly, for the expedition, besides disintegrating at San Geronimo and Ojo Caliente the military organization of Villa, has been of immense educational value. All along the direct line of advance, at Casas Grandes, Galiena, El Valle, Las Cruces, Namiquipa and the lesser towns and villages, it was noted that the Mexicans regarded our troops with great respect. The attitude of these communities is indicative of the impressions left because of the scrupulous regard by the commanding general of the expedition for the national sensibilities of the people. At the same time the caliber of the troops—the superb condition of men, mounts and accouterments—was not without its effect in stimulating the general feeling of amity.

Like the mathematical calculation of gasoline and oil consumption by the indispensable truck trains is the measure of the troop and battery horses' endurance in the field. Infinite care is exercised at all times so that no trooper or fieldpiece may become ineffective, for without his mount and without a full complement of horses in a gun team the cavalryman and the artillery lose their worth in a field force. So also are the men being scrutinized by the surgeons and the food supply maintained at the requisite standard of quantity and quality in nutriment. So far from the supply base and with no other means than truck and wagon train, the maintenance of these supplies represents no inconsiderable phase of the operations.

Throughout the march, although they touched no water for twenty-five miles one day, not a murmur of discontent from any soldier because of hardships endured was heard and not a horse faltered in spite of the terrific strain. On the mountain summits, where the trail led sometimes, the rarefied air currents swept with such force on occasion as if to drive the uniformed horsemen from their precarious perch. Then only a few hours would intervene ere the mounts, with their riders, were picking their way on again.

DEVICE MAKES BOMBS HIT.

Range Finder For Air Craft Bought by Government After Tests.

The government, after tests by naval officers, has purchased the invention of a Philadelphia youth which will drop bombs accurately from an aeroplane.

The inventor is Alfred J. Erickson. He is nineteen. His father was working on the bomb dropping device when he died. The boy took up the problem, finally got a patent and brought the invention to the attention of the government. Tests made at Norfolk with a hydroaeroplane are said to have shown that bombs can be dropped within a radius of twelve feet.

The device adopts the idea of an automatic range finder for guns. In a frame before the face of the aviator is an indicator by which he can plot out any object in sight on the ground and time the release of the bomb.

BORDER DEADLOCK STILL UNBROKEN

El Paso, Texas—Stripped of all minor issues and diplomatic evasions, here is the actual situation as it stands between the United States and the defacto government of Mexico:—

Washington has instructed Major General Hugh L. Scott and Major General Frederick Funston to enter into no agreement with General Alvaro Obregon, Mexican Minister of War, having for its basis the withdrawal from Mexico of the American punitive expedition under Brigadier General John J. Pershing.

General Obregon and the military leaders of the North have served notice on the American representatives that they will not discuss any agreement that does not have for its basis the withdrawal of the soldiers of the United States from their country.

Washington has been fully advised of the existence of this deadlock, but for some reason refuses fully to recognize it.

General Obregon is waiting in Juarez, but not patiently, for a summons from General Scott to receive the answer of the United States to the proposals which he made at the conference last Saturday afternoon. General Scott cannot give a definite answer because he has not received one.

American army officials have agreed that every available soldier in the United States should be sent to the border at once, even if it is necessary to call on the Coast Artillery and the National Guards of the States.

FAVORS SMALL SUBMARINES.

Simon Lake Says G-1 Boats of Our Navy Are Best Type.

Simon Lake, inventor of undersea boats, told the members of the New York Electrical society the other night that he favored a number of small submarines rather than a few large, high speed submarines, which were liable to have engine trouble.

"It would be wise to take a step backward in speed in order to take a step forward in reliability," he said. "A number of 200 ton boats would afford the best defense to the country. The kind of submarine I favor is what I term an 'amphibious' boat. By that I mean one which may be transported by rail from one part of the country to another. By building a system of rail communication between the principal points to be defended it would be possible to ship the submarines at the rate of fifty miles an hour from one point to another.

"The small boats could be built quickly at a cost of $300,000, one-tenth of the price of a large boat. They would have a surface speed of 10 knots and a submerged speed of 8 knots. They could run out 300 or 400 miles."

A Street Car Miracle

The baby laughed—and through the car
Of dull eyed folk at the nightfall weary
The little silver ripple ran,
And in its wake the smiles began
Like sunshine over waters dreary.

The baby laughed—and shoulders bent
'Neath weight of toil and trouble tragic
Straightened with motion swift and strong,
As if that burden, carried long,
Had lifted been by merry magic.

The baby laughed—and one who came
As slumber stilled that music's ringing
Looked wondering down the crowded car.
"How brave, how kind these faces are."
He thought, with hope and faith upspringing.

DANCING AND LATE HOURS HELP MAKE GOOD SOLDIERS

Physical Director Tells Why City Men Are Best For Sentry Duty.

He who would prepare to act as a sentry in case of war should spend these nights of peace tangoing until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. This will make him accustomed to staying awake until late, and he won't mind the lonely vigils of a night watch.

This may be gleaned from a statement made by Dr. Louis Welzmiller, physical director of a New York Y. M. C. A., who added that the city chap has the advantage over the countryman in his fitness for war. Dr. Welzmiller is now rounding a class of business men into shape to stand such hardships as Plattsburg will impose.

"City and country men ought to be prepared to be prepared for war," said Dr. Welzmiller. "But they are not fit to prepare for war because they are not ready to undergo the preparation. What they should do is to get in such physical shape that they can stand the military preparation."

Both classes are creatures of habit, he added, and, although the country rookie is physically harder than the city rookie when they first get to camp, a few days will offset that. The interruption in habits of the country rookie will break him all up, too, said Dr. Welzmiller.

"The country chap finds it almost impossible to go on night sentry duty," said he. "He is used to going to bed with the chickens, and the loneliness of a night post is too much for him. The city fellow who goes to tango parties and after theater suppers and gets home several nights a week long after midnight doesn't mind sentry duty at all. His only regret when assigned to it is that he has no partner with whom to dance through it."

CARSON, FINNEGAN AND ORCHESTRA GAVE FULTON ITS RAREST TREAT

On the page's of the city's history May 2, 1916, should be written as the most perfect musical event that our city has ever known. The Fulton Symphony Orchestra upon its second public appearance acquitted itself with such skill as to entirely captivate the entire audience, and make proud every loyal Fultonian. The leader, Mr. F. Jess Newton, surely merits the unstinted praise of the entire community.

The soloists of the evening, Mr. John Finnegan and Miss Mary Carson, both with equal grace, entirely sang their way into the hearts of their listeners. Mr. Finnegan and Miss Carson before leaving the city thanked Fulton people for their evidence of appreciation. Every mark of appreciation was shown during the evening. There was a hushed, stilly quiet that was felt throughout the theatre when these two masters sang. Miss Carson, a girlish little figure clad in a simple frock of white, sang in her pure sweet soprano voice without affectation and as direct as a child. She was exceptionally pleasing in her first group of songs as they gave her an opportunity to show to advantage her pure lyric quality.

Mr. Finnegan in a pure, Irish tenor held the audience spellbound. His group of Irish songs were faultlessly sung, and it is to be doubted that the people of Fulton who were so fortunate as to hear him sing "Mother Machree" and "Somewhere a Voice is Calling," will soon forget the witchery of his tones. The more pretentions numbers, from a musical standpoint, the Aria from "Creation" was perfectly done.

The entire program for the evening was full of inspiration. The work of our local musicians was of superior ability. The orchestra's part of the program was a difficult one. The March from Tannhauser, Prelude from Rachmaninoff and Lohengrin were masterpieces well performed, while Mr. Newton's special arrangement of the Humoresque took the house by storm.

The public will await with pleasure the next concert of the Symphony Orchestra, and would gladly welcome again to our city the two sweet-voiced singers, Miss Mary Carson and Mr. John Finnegan.

Sunday Converts Lay Bare Their Lives to Tabernacle Audience

Evangelist Peacock did not preach a sermon last night at the tabernacle. He confined his talk to comments upon George Wilson and George Harris, who came here with the Syracuse Billy Sunday Business Mens' Club. 2300 persons crowded into the large building last night. Mr. Peacock called for trail hitters, 89 persons responding.

The story of his life as told by Mr. Wilson brought tears to the eyes of many persons. Mr. Wilson told the story of his life prior to his conversion in a matter of fact way. "Whiskey will make you forget everything—your friends and your home—everything," he stated. The loss of his family, due to the drinking habit, the burial of his wife and children, and a sudden realization of the consequences of misdeeds formed a recital of intense interest to the large audience.

Mr. Wilson and Mr. Harris were introduced by Mr. George L. Pratt, who stated that it would be a good idea if the business men of the City of Fulton would take into consideration that there is a time for offering prayer and a time for business. Mr. Harris, former jockey, racetrack tout, gambler, etc., told of his conversion and of his happiness since that time.

The delegation of Syracuse men, 100 strong, made a fine appearance. In addition to this group, there were present 600 Congregationalists, who marched to the tabernacle in a body, the Rev. Charles Olmstead, pastor of the church, leading the column. The marchers carried large American flage, also banners reading, "Congregational Brotherhood for Christ," and, "We are in it every minute." Each person also carried an emblem bearing a letter "C."

Mr. Olmstead standing on the platform led his congregation in cheers. "One Two Three, Who are We, Congregationalists, Don't You See, Rah. Rah. Rah. Painter, Speer, Davidson, Warth, Peacock!" was the yell especially composed for the occasion. The Rev. T. A. Stubbins, pastor of the Congregational church at Lysander was also in attendance.

Collections last night were $141.82. From the afternoon attendance of 100, $3.23 was obtained. Prayer meeting will be held at the Congregational church tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Here are the words of the song of the Congregationalists:

There's a church on the west side with steeple,
Where its bell to us all sweetly calls,
No spot is so dear to its people
As the little brick church at the Falls.

CHORUS

We come, come, come, come,
Come from the church where the steeple
With its bell to us all sweetly calls
No spot is so dear to its people
As the little brick church at the Falls.

Airships Drop Bombs on British East Coast

London—Five hostile airships attacked the northeast coast of England and the southeast coast of Scotland last night.

The official announcement on the raid says the movements of the raiders appeared uncertain; adding:—

"A few bombs were dropped in Yorkshire, but there are no details yet regarding the casualties or damage."

French troops are regaining ground from the Germans on both sides of the River Meuse.

On the west, on the north slope of Dead Man's Hill, on April 29 and 30 they coptured about a thousand metres of trenches and forced the Germans back three hundred to six hundred metres. There was artillery firing throughout last night from the Avocourt region to the Mort Homme.

On the east they captured last night a first line German trench 500 metres long and took 100 prisoners.

Berlin—Herr von Jagow, the Foreign Ministers at the reopening of the sitting of the Budget Committee of the Reichstag today said the government had not yet reached a decision with regard to the situation that had arisen from the American note to Germany regarding Germany's submarine campaign.

As soon as the Imperial Chancellor returned from headquarters, Herr von Jagow added, he would give to the committee definite information.

The Foreign Minister said the government, in view of the importance of the American question, would have been glad to make a statement today regarding the status of the problem, but that for the reason stated this was impossible.

It has been learned that Dr. Karl Helferich, the Imperial Treasurer, is at headquarters participating in the conferences on the American note and the framing of an answer thereto.

The Frankfurter Zeitung says the American Ambassador, Mr. Gerard, twice dined with Emperor William and that he also was able to see the German troops at an important point on the front.

Dublin Is Now Quiet; Cork Sinn Fieners Yield

London—Ireland is being restored to normal conditions, says an official despatch issued last night, which reads:—

"Dublin is gradually reverting to normal conditions. The work of clearing some small districts around Irishtown is being carried out by an ever contracting cordon.

"Cork.—All is quiet in this county, with the exception of an affray in the Fermoy district. Here the police in attempting to arrest two men in a house met with armed resistance, the head constable being shot dead. On the arrival of reinforcements the occupants of the house, two of whoo were wounded, surrendered.

"The Sinn Feiners in Cork city, where there has been no rising, have yielded up their arms.

"Wexford.—The column which went to Enniscorthy is carrying out the arrest of rebels in the county of Wexford. The rest of South Ireland is reported quiet."

Speaking in the House oof Commons yesterday afternoon, the Premier, Mr. Asquith, said he hoped to give an early opportunity for discussion of the motion calling for the resignation of Mr. Augustine Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland.

Mr. Asquith said that communication between Ireland and England was now virtually normal.

West Siders Petition Aldermen to Remove Billboard in 1st Ward

The Common Council at its regular monthly meeting last night took final action on a number of matters which had been placed in the hands of committees to investigate. Chief among there were assessments against the Directoyou Company, the Steam Pressing Machine Company, and Clinton H. Hulett, which the board declared erroneous and passed resolutions cancelling the assessments.

Several applications for permits were placed in the hands of committees and also referred to the City Attorney for investigation. Of particular interest is the petition presented to the board and signed by 47 residents and taxpayers of the first ward requesting that the billboards in the ward be removed. The petition set forth that the residents of the ward have made many efforts to improve the appearance of the streets in that section and had even at their own expense constructed a small park, the sight of which they state is pleasing to tourists and travellers on the interurban trolley, but the effect of this beauty spot is marred by the appearance of a number of unsightly billboards a short distance away which display advertisements of goods made elsewhere. By resolution this matter has been referred to the City Attorney.

A resolution was passed authorizing a payment of $75 to the G. A. R. The City Chamberlain was also authorized to pay interest on bonds. A request for a building permit by Fred Buillard and Mr. Brennan's request for permission to operate a transfer truck within the city were referred respectively to a committee and to the City Attorney and payrolls were audited.

A resolution was passed that the bill entitled, "An Act to amend the city charter of the City of Fulton in relation to the Police Pension Fund be accepted by the City of Fulton and the Common Council thereof." A similar resolution in connection with the Fire Department pension fund was also passed.

The monthly reports of the City Chamberlain and Commissioner of Charities Somers were also received annd placed on file. Mr. Somers' report showed that there was a decrease in the cost of operating his department during the month of April. Resolutions were offered authorizing the purchase of a typewriter and the designation of E. L. Preman as dog catcher. A resolution was passed to meet Friday of this week to act on thhe Assembly Bill which authorizes a $15,000 bond issue to pay debts incurred by former administration. At this time final action will also be taken on the First street paving matter.

HOSPITAL PAPER DAY OCCURS TOMORROW

Threatening skies and later rain this morning, did not look to the committee in charge of the hospital paper day as favorable conditions for making collections. It was therefore decided to postpone the collection of old newspapers and magazines until tomorrow.

YOU WOULDN'T THINK IT

Many people evince surprise if the printer adds a percentum to a present day bill over that of last year. That someone has seen the humor of the situation was shown in an article in a Wichita, Kansas, newspaper. It is as follows:

And it came to pass that the fierce war waged by the countries round about was sorely felt by the printer in the land of Quichita.

For the price of his type metal jumped up an hundred fold, and on other things quotations were withdrawn.

Ink that he had brought for two pieces of silver and six bits was hiked to eighteen pieces.

Likewise did paper and other necessities take a trip on the Zeppelins.

Also a walking delegate appeareth and addresseth the boss, saying,

Master, because of the high cost of living, thy servants must have more shekels in their weekly pay envelopes.

And it came to pass that a customer ordered a duplicate of his last order for a box of parchment.

When he received the invoice therefor he went up in the air higher than did the prices.

And seeking out the printer he reviled him, calling him all manner of evil names, saying,

What thinkest thou that I am? Ye highway bandit and worker of iniquity!

Pirate that thou art, thou hast charged me ten per centum more for my job than thou didst two years ago.

By heckerino, I will not stand for this thing, and I will see thee in the place where snowballs do not grow before I will pay thee.

For I am beset by clamors for more money from all sides.

The filling stations have doubled the price of joy juice, and tires are going up while blowing out more frequent.

But my business prospereth until now I can assert mine independence, and will not suffer to be robbed by the likes of thee.

Therefore correct this bill and make it right before I lose mine temper.

Then the printer opened his mouth and spake, saying,

Did I charge thee ten per centum more than of two years ago?

Verily, I am a blooming chump and then some. For certainty will I make the bill right. Givvit t'muh.

Then when the printer had added forty per centum he returned the bill saying,

Sir, I thank thee for calling mine attention to mine shortcomings.

Here is thy corrected bill. And if thou payest it not, I will levy on thy autos and other superfluous property.

And when the customer came to himself he wrote a check for the amount and departed, saying not a word to any man.

This matter readily admits that he must pay more for his printing and will not argue the matter.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR SUCCESS

A professor, editor and author has made a searching inquiry into presidential qualifications. He finds it impossible to discern a single absolute requisite for election—aside from the constitutional limitations of course—but he does discern many qualties in candidates that are likely to promote their election.

Thus he finds the candidate for president who lives near the limelighted center of population enjoys a big initial advantage over his competitors.

The candidate should possess a wife and children.

He should have a public official record, including an army record.

He should have an agreeable name, preferably but two.

He should be publicly known as a warm friend or as a bitter enemy of at least one president.

He should be an orphan or an older child; and thereby have got an early start in independent living.

He should be from forty-five to sixty-eight years old.

He should have but limited wealth and income from earnings.

He should have some knowledge of the law.

He should be a country boy by birth and rearing.

He should belong to one or more national secret societies.

He should be identified prominently in the public mind with some cause, or principle, or achievement, or issue.

He should have a group of enthusiastic friends either "insiders" or with large financial means, or both.

Here is the composite picture of the presidents. How do the aspirants now before the country fit into the photo of their illustrious predecessors?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Opinions

A REMINDER OF TESLA

Attention has recently been called to an apparently abandoned and certainly mysterious electrical plant, erected fifteen years ago, near Shoreham, Long Island, by Nikola Tesla, at an alleged costof $1,000,000. It consisted of a large laboratory, equipped with alternating current machinery, and a huge tapering, steel structure, crowned with an immense copper mushroom dome. After apparently completing the plant, Tesla and his employees suddenly departed, and for a decade and a half the costly outfit have been almost forgotten.

It is said that Mr. Tesla has never fully revealed the object of this singular electrical station, although rumors that he is about to surprise the world again with results of his researches are in circulation. It is, though, recalled that about fifteen years ago the Hungarian declared that through the use of a tall tower and a powerful alternating current generator he would flash messages to all parts of the world, without wires. At that time he announced the theory that the earth was a vast electrical reservoir. Through his tower he purposed to draw on this reservoir for energy, and after transmitting it around the world in the form of signals, would return it to mother earth; thus both drawing upon and replenishing the earth's store of electricity. It was a dream, but it was the vision of a man many of whose scientific dreams had materialized; and the public waited.

Much water has run under the bridges since the opening of the century. The improved wireless telegraph and the quite promising wireless telephony have outrun the dreaming scientist's visions. Messages encircle the earth without wires, and without steel, mushroom mounted towers rising 185 feet in the air. The scientist's dream of 1900 is the schoolboy's plaything of 1916. Tesla may yet awake and add to his early laurels but he must lose no time if he does not wish to be lost in the shuffle.—Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

THE REAL DANGER THAT THREATENS US

The Russian censorship has passed the following dispatch, which is reprinted from the New York Times of May 1:

"Petrograd, April 28 (via London, April 30.)—Regarding the lately circulated rumors about an approaching agreement or understanding between Russia and Japan looking toward the future control of China to the exclusion of other nations and a defiance of the 'open door,' the Foreign Ministry informs me that Japan and Russia, as allies, are constantly exchanging their views on questions of mutual importance, but that no formal agreement harmful to foreign interests is under consideration. There is considerable activity here in trading on the Chinese Government loan."

Lying comes as naturally to Russia diplomats as stealing cream does to a cat.

It is as certain as anything can be that the end of the war will see Russia and Japan in an open alliance to divide Asia. They are in secret alliance now.

Japan will have Russian support in the seizure of China. Russia will have Japanese support in the conquest of Persia and Asia Minor, and, if the allies can win the war, of Constantinople.

Russia is not and never was a European Power. Russia is as much Asiatic as Japan.

With Russia and Japan in control of Asia, and with Russia at last in possession of a seaport and naval station in the impregnable Marmora, and Japan in possession of Chinese Pacific ports, the two gigantic thieves will oust England from Hong Kong and from India.

In the meantime, Japan, with Russian aid, will strike her blow at us whenever the time seems most favorable to her. She covets the Phillippines, and, above all, she covets Alaska.

While France, England, Germany, Astria and Turkey are exhausting their military strength and bankrupting their treasuries, Russia is losing only moujiks and borrowed French and English money. She has millions of moujiks to waste, and there would be no simpler way to avoid her debts than by going to war with her present allies and repudiating their loans to her.

At the same time, Japan is increasing her armies and navy and becoming rich beyond her most optimistic dreams.

The European nations are playing the game of those Asiatic Powers exactly as those faithless, ruthless and dangerous Asiatic Powers would have Europe play it.

And instead of warning Americans of this peril and inculcating the necessity of American preparation to meet the onslaught of these Asiatics, our newspapers and politicians and our very President and Cabinet are all doing their best to involve this country in participation in Europe's insanity—which is exactly what Asiatic Japan and Russia fervently long to see us do.

Citizens, we tell you plainly that we shall have our work cut out for us when this Russo-Japanese combination begins to show its teeth.

If we are insane enough to waste our young men and our reserves of capital by plunging into this European war and actually aiding Russia to become more powerful and Japan to become more rich and powerful, we shall be simply handing these unscrupulous Asiatics a knife with which to cut our own throats.

We cannot understand the blindness and madness which would thus destroy our own strength and help to destroy what remains of the white man's strength in Europe at the very time when the menace of Asia looms above the horizon of events, threatening the civilization, the religion, the domination and the very existence of the white race.—N. Y. American.

National Defense and International Peace

What the Engineers are Doing

THIRTY thousand American engineers are making a card index survey of American industry so that it may be prepared for its vital part in defending the Country, if need comes. The past eighteen months have taught us here in America what lack of industrial preparedness has meant to some of the countries now at war. These nations had the ships and they had the men; but when the hour struck, their factories were not able to furnish the colors with arms and shells and powder. Their factories were not prepared. And our factories are not prepared.

But it is not enough to draw a moral. In the United States five great Engineering Societies — Civil, Mining, Mechanical, Electrical and Chemical — have pledged their services to the Government of the United States, and are already working hand in hand with the Government to prepare industry for the national defense. They receive no pay and will accept no pay. All they seek is opportunity to serve their country, that she may have her industries mobilized for defense.

All elements of the nation's life — the manufacturers, the business men, and the workingmen — should support this patriotic and democratic work of the engineers, and assist them cheerfully when asked. There can be no better national insurance against war.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, representing all advertising interests have offered their free and hearty service to the President of the United States, in close co-operation with these five Engineering Societies, to the end that the Country may know what the Engineers are doing. The President has accepted the offer. The Engineers have welcomed the co-operation.

This advertisement, published without cost to the United States, is the first in a nation-wide series to call the country to the duty of co-operating promptly and fully with the Engineers.

What One Company Is Doing for Fulton

On another page of this issue appears an advertisement received from the George L. Dyer Advertising Company of New York, whose letter we publish in full that the public may know something about the publicity given this city through the generosity of the Electric Company.

Every now and then some one does something especially pleasing for Fulton and the public press gives a full measure of praise. Here is an opportunity for this newspaper to join hands with the people in voicing our approval of the public-spiritedness of an act that, for the amount of money involved, seems all out of proportion to the hope of pecuniary gain.

The Dyer Company's letter, which tells the story is as follows. Fulton Times:

"Enclosed is proof of an announcement for the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company, which you will please insert one time in the next issue of your paper.

"The order for same is going forward in the regular way thru our placing department and will reach you in this mail.

"You will notice that this advertisement signed by the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company calls attention to the advantages of the City of Fulton and vicinity as a manufacturing location.

"When Mr. Warner put this advertising campaign in our hands he told us to give preference as far as possible to Fulton newspapers. We said to him that if we were trying to sell power to the Fulton people we would advertise in Fulton papers—but as our campaign was designed to let people elsewhere know of Fulton advantages, it was necessary to advertise elsewhere.

"As a result an extensive campaign has been undertaken in the chief metropolitan or industrial centers, using such papers as the New York Evening Post, The Times, Chicago Tribune, Newark News, and the leading papers in such cities as Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse—as well as the Trade Press in many important industries.

"You will understand that a campaign of this nature runs into a good deal of money—one insertion in the New York Times costing approximately $200, while the Chicago Tribune is even more expensive.

"We believe this campaign on the part of the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company will be pleasing to all Fulton people as evidencing the willingness of the Power Company to cooperate in a practical way in community building.

"It is interesting to us as a striking example of enterprise on the part of a local public service company. It shows a breadth of policy and a public spirit that is most gratifying, and we believe that the people of Fulton should know of this campaign running in other cities in various parts of the country—calling attention to the advantages of Fulton and placing the town more in the public eye than perhaps has ever been done before.

"Yours very truly,

"THE GEORGE L. DYER COMPANY."

Mayor Lewis, with Commissioners of Public Works Wiltsie, O'Brien and Allen, and Aldermen Van Valkenburg, McKay, Distin, Malone, Quirk and Baker, made an inspection trip of the city yesterday in automobile, consuming several hours of time.

It was the desire of the Mayor that the officials see conditions for themselves in order to be better prepared to act on matters affecting conditions. At the conclusion of the trip Mayor Lewis expressed himself as being highly pleased with results. NOTED JEWISH LECTURER HERE

Commends the Mere Handfull of His Race Whose Courage Led Them to Establish a House of Worship.

"Jewish History" and "Zionism" were the topics upon which the Rev. Dr. Colbenz of Syracuse addressed an audience composed of all the Jewish residents in the city in the new synagogue on First st. last night. Dr. Coblenz was introduced to the audience by Mr. David Katz. Alber Rosen' representing the Jewish Publication Society of America, also addressed the congregation.

Dr. Coblenz, in opening his address, called attention to Carlisle's book on hero worship. He defined Carlisle's conception of the requirements of a hero and stated that he would like to make one addition, namely that of the passive hero, which Dr. Coblenz stated was not described in Carlisle's book. The speaker stated that there were two kinds of heroism, active and passive, and declared that Jewish history can be summarized in these two classifications. "There are really two perioids in Jewish history," Dr. Coblenz said, "One, the first period which we might term the period of active heroism, when there was construction manifested in the heroic sense and the seconnd period, the past 2,000 years during which the Jew can be said to have existed as a passive hero."

Defining the term hero, Dr. Coblenz said that every "Tom," "Dick" and "Harry" in the Jewish race was not a hero, but the term is applied to the mass, the soul of the Jewish race in its enterity. The past 18 months, due to the European war, has been a critical period in thep rogress of the Jews, Dr. Coblenz stated. He spoke of the thousands of Jews fighting on the battlefields, under the flags of every belligerent engaged in the great conflict.

To the young girls in the congregation who have recently organized a Zionistic society, Dr. Coblenz made known the exact purposes of the organization. He spoke of the misconception of certain people in regard to the aims of the society. Briefly, Dr. Coblenz followed the course of events in Jewish history, calling attention to oppression four or five hundred years ago during which time the Jews had seen periods of banishment from practically all of the European empires.

At the onclusion of his address, Dr. Coblenz requested his audience to ask him any questions they might see fit towards promoting the interests of the synagogue and the Zionist society in this city. He was advised that the plans made for a Sunday school were temporarily suspended on account of failure to provide a teacher for the children. This matter, Dr. Coblenz promised, would have the attention of interested persons in Syracuse and arrangements made immediately to provide a teacher.

Dr. Coblenz con gratulated the congregation on the result of their efforts to have a separate house of worship in this city, although the synagogue is supported by twenty families at the most. Dr. Coblenz expressed his thanks and gratitude to the trustees of the synagogue for the invitation extended to him to adrdess the congregation and requested that all the Jewish residents in the city combine to help support the institution.

Mr. Rosen spoke to the congregation on the work of the Jewish Publication Society, which he stated was not a commercial organization but a vocational organization. The Jewish Publication Society of America, he stated, waso rganized in 1888 and since that time the Jewish race especially in the Engglish speaking countries has been greatly benefited by thew orks of the society in translating the Bible and other works of litgrature.

CHARM OF BIOGRAPHY.

It Leads the Reader Into Quaint and Delightful Byways.

Reading biography will furnish you with a peculiar and rare form of entertainment, for besides the subject in hand biography legitimately treats of the foibles, the fashions and the peculiarities of the age with which it deals, says Youth's Companion. History, although it may have its lighter moments, is essentially sober, but biography, although it is never merely farcical or satirical, may touch vividly upon the lighter phases of life and take you, as it were, into quaint and delightful byways, through private parks and into remote and lovely fields.

"Indeed," wrote Boswell in his introduction to his famous biography, "I cannot conceive a more perfect mode of writing any man's life than by not only relating the most important events of it in their order, but by interweaving what he privately wrote and said and thought, by which mankind are enabled, as it were, to see him live and to live o'er each scene with him as he actually advanced through the several stages of his life."

Biography, treated in that manner, must inevitably include much that is delightfully diverting. It will give you "the table talk of the great;" it will recount those fascinating little incidents and anecdotes that history so often regards as beneath its notice. It will afford far more than a running account of a life, "beginning with a pedigree and ending with a funeral."

CONTRASTS IN ICELAND.

A Curious Land of Fire and Ice, of Volcanoes and Glaciers.

Iceland is known as a "land of contrasts." The land of Iceland boasts in comparatively small compass fire and ice, volcanoes, glaciers and geysers. There is magnificent scenery in its desolate plateaus. It has more than 100 volcanoes, of which the largest is Hecla, 5,100 feet high. There are thousands of craters in Iceland, the chief among them being Askya, with an area of thirty-four square miles.

Of glaciers there are more than 120, with aggregate areas of about 5,200 square miles. The largest is Vatna. Not far from Hecla is the so called geyser region, where there are many hot springs. The Great Geyser is sixty feet in diameter. One geyser was found to have water at a temperature of 262 degrees F., which makes it possibly the hottest spring in the world. One-eighth of Iceland is glacier hidden, and there are ice clad mountain domes, of which the highest is Oraefa-jokull, 6,424 feet.

There are not many settlements in Iceland. The capital is Reykjavik, with a population of 11,600, and after that the two chief towns are Akureyi, 2,089, and Isaford, 1,850 inhabitants. The people of Iceland are described as unusually intelligent, and one authority states that "perhaps in no other country of Europe are so many books in proportion to the population printed and sold as in Iceland."

An Utter Lack of Faith

It is surprising to know how many people there are, particularly women, who are utterly miserable in body and mind only because they have not enough confidence in Chamberlain's Tablets to give them a trial. Mrs. Sarah Hughes, Booneville, N. Y., was troubled with indigestion and constipation. She had bilious spells and would feel most miserable at times. She says, "Chamberlain's Tablets helped me from the first, and since using two bottles of them I have been in theb est of health."

DR. PEACOCK EXPLAINS SOME ESSENTIALLY GOD-LIKE QUALITIES

Uufavorable weather conditions had much to do with the light attendance at the tabernacle this afternoon. Dr. Peacock was in fine form and he preached an eloquent sermon, in part as follows:

Danied 3:16-18 — Shadrach, Neshac and Abednego, answered and said unto the King, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve in able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O King. But if not, be it known unto thee, O King, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

It is an easy matter for us to do our duty, when we can see the end from the beginning. It does not require any great amount of courage to take a stand aggainst any wrong when public opinion is against that wrong. We may be very loud in our denunciation of wrong when we know that we will not be called upon to suffer for the position we take in regard to the matter. Daniel may hasten with triumph ant pace to the lion's lair, if the God who formed the ravenous beasts shall go before him to take away their thirst for blood. And when the trumpets blow on the plains of Dura, the three sons of the Hebrews may stand proudly erect before the golden image of a temporal king, if, with the open window toward Jerusalem, they may fall down before the King Eternal; and with unfailing courage, they may encounter the flames of a Babylonian furnace, seven times more rading than it is wont, if the God of fire ensheath them with His Divinity. It requires no great amount of courage to jump into the sea, if we are securely engirdled with a life preserver; and it is easy enough to walk into the flames, if we know beforehand that the smell of fire will not come up on our garments; but nothing short of an omnipotent conviction can inspire us with a spirit of martyrdom, as we stand in the face of threatening disaster—a disaster we may certainly avert if we are willing to stifle the voice of God in the soul; but a disaster which may overwhelm if we move on under the Divine impulse. Assurance of deliverance needs no commanding voice to urge on toward impeding doom; while uncertainty of deliverance, requires a voice as high as heaven and as far reaching as destiny to inspire with the breath of self-sacrifice.

Love is the greatest thing of it's kind in the world, or in the universe; but love is not greater than duty, for the two are incommensurable. They are both God-like, and therefore, both great; but each in turn grows out of the other, and each in turn is subordinate to the other. Love God and you will obey Him; obey God and you will love Him. Love your neighbor and you will do your duty to him; do your duty to him and you will love him. Probably the greatest thing of its kind in the world is conviction. Probably some one will say: "What is conviction?" The state of being convinced. Strong persuasion of belief. Dr. John says: "Conviction is not a whim, it is the very opposite. Whims and convictions have only one point in common; they both look toward action; but they look with different motive and with different spirit. They start from the same point, but it is the remotest chance, that they start in the same direction, and equally remote that they continue to keep their eyes on the same mark. Whims are of spontaneous birth; convictions are born of deep experience. It was a whim when the daughter of Pharoah, in a moment of outburst of pity, rescued an infant from the bulrushes of the Nile; it was conviction when Moses refused to be called the son of Pharoah's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Conviction is more than opinion. A man will not go to the stake or the fiery furnace for an opinion. But for conviction he will face the taunts and sneers of the community, will go to prison and to death,

Man may have opinions in regard to certain things, but when the test comes they will not pay the price for their opinions. Daniel was convinced that it would be wrong for him to eat of the king's meat and to drink of his wine, therefore, he positively refused. He was convinced that he would be sinning against his God and against his soul, if he should worship the King, therefore he refused, paying the penalty.

Conviction takes fear away from men. Noah was not afraid to build the ark. The people laughed at him, but when the flood came, Noah was saved, and the people who laughed at him were destroyed. Elijah was not afraid to stand alone on Mt. Carmel. John was willing to face the fiery furnace, because they knew they were right. God was there. God was with Noah. God was with Paul when he stooo before king Agrippa. God was with John on the Islanod of Patmos. God was with the three Hebrews when they refused to worship the image. They knew Gad was with them and they were willing to trust Him. My friends, God has never left conviction to fight a battle alone.

We are all too willing to compromise. We are afraid of our business. We fear our position. In other words, we are cowards. We know certain things are wrong, but we never lift up our voices against them, unless we are with our friends or in our house where we know no one will repeat any thing we say. It is time for the Christian people of this land to reach the place where they will obey God in preference to man. God never has, and God never will accomplish His purpose in this world with a gang of cowards. God must have men He can trust. Men willing to pace persecution annd danger for the right. God always takes care of His own, and when men do right God will protect them in the end. God took care of the three young men in the fiery furnace, and He will take care of us if we do our duty. And I believe it is better to be in the fiery furnace with God than tto be in the throng and be a coward in the sight of God. God never has been defeated, and He never will be defeated. His people have been dfeated many, many times, but the secret is not hard to discover. They compromised, and when we compromise God will never give us the victory. If we want the company of God, we must have a conviction. We must be God-like; and if we would be God-like, we must set our faces unalterably and eternally against every sin. We must come out openly and above board and use our influence against it. The coward talks behind closed doors and when with friends, but the man of God is not ashamed to permit his voice to be heard in the streets. You may be compelled to suffer, you may be called upon to face persecution, but what do these things amount to when we know we are doing the will of God? I have no faith in the man who is always saying this, that, and the other thing ought to be done but is unwilling to face the music himself.

When we have God with us we need fear no evil. For He will stand by us in life and death, and in eternity He will be our refuge. Are you willing to trust Him and go forward and do what He has commanded you to do?

DISCUSS BELGIUM.

Von Bethmann-Hollweg Favors a New Kingdom.

CANAL PROPOSAL IS MADE.

Among Number of Plans Talked of in Regard to Future Relations Between Germany and Belgium Is a Channel From Rhine to Antwerp.

Berlin.—"After the war there must be a new Belgium."

This statement, made by the imperial German chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, in a recent speech before the reichstag, directs the interest of those who are following the trend of the German press to a number of plans discussed of late by the editors in the fatherland with regard to the future relations between Germany and Belgium.

The suggestion of a tariff union with the little kingdom now occupied by the kaiser's troops has been a popular topic of discussion in the press of Germany.

VON BETHMANN-HOLLWEG.

Among other projects on this subject suggested is one by J. Rosemeyer of Koeln-Lindenthal, a prominent engineer.

Herr Rosemeyer's idea, based on the ancient principle, "Navigare necesse est," is to create a new mouth of the Rhine by connecting that river with Antwerp, Belgium's great seaport, and Zeebrugge, the little town on Belgium's coast which now serves the Germans as a submarine base.

In a lengthy article which has been reprinted in many of the foremost pan-German organs he points out that such a "Rhine-west canal" would be welcomed by Holland. For the canal under his plan is to lead through Holland via Sittard, through Dutch Limburg and would thus be of great service in expanding not only German but also Belgian and Dutch commerce.

The distance from Cologne, on the Rhine, to Antwerp by way of the new canal would be, Herr Rosemeyer figures, 130 miles, while that from Duisburg to Antwerp would be about 122 miles. The former distance could be covered in seventy-four, the latter in seventy-one hours.

The total length of the proposed canal is figured at about 152 miles, and the total cost of construction is estimated at 314,000,000 marks, or $78,500,000.

CATCHES STRANGE BEAST.

Looks Like a Fox and Climbs to Top of Trees.

Albert Lea, Minn. — A new and strange animal was discovered in Bancroft township by Emil Halvorson, who was hunting.

It appeared larger than a fox and when pursued jumped about the trunk of a tree and was soon in the topmost branches. Later in the day another of the species was captured.

The animal resembles a fox, has light red fur about the neck and head, but the rest of the fur is light gray, with a jet black stripe down the back. It is thought the animal is a hybrid or else has strayed here from its native haunts.

Three In One

By EUNICE BLAKE

When triplets, all boys, came to Mr. and Mrs. Doncaster they were named —with facetious intent—Thomas, Richard and Henry; in other words, Tom, Dick and Harry. When the brothers came of age they made their homes in different localities. Three years later they arranged a reunion.

One of the first questions was, "Are you engaged?" though the way it was put to Tom was, "Have you got a girl?" To which he replied, "I haven't got a girl, but a girl has got me." "What do you mean by that?" "Well, I'm in love with Julia Atkinson, but she won't have me." "Doesn't she love you?" "She says she does, but claims that I have two defects, either of which make me unfitted to be her husband." "What are they?" "First, I am undemonstrative. She doesn't want a cold man. Second, I look on the dark side of everything. She calls me 'Mr. Dismal.'"

"Suppose," Tom went on, "you, Dick, call on Julia, personating me. She'll never know the difference. Plaster her all over with your taffy. Next time you go, Harry, and give her hot air. She'll think I'm changed, and I wouldn't wonder if she'll say 'Yes' after all."

"But can you keep it up?" asked both the others.

"I tell you what you do. You, Dick, rehearse on Harry, and you, Harry, rehearse on Dick. Then I'll see how it is done."

"Agreed!"

Tom threw himself on a lounge and lit a cigar. Dick went out of the room and in a few minutes came in and approached Harry with cordiality enough to convict a mob. One would have thought there was no one else in the world for him. After this lesson Harry went out, and when he returned he rattled off optimism like a mill race.

"That's all right, boys," said Tom. "I've received permission to call tonight to plead for the last time, with no hope to win. Take my place, Dick, and make an appointment if possible for Harry later on."

The same evening Dick appeared before the lady to be wooed. He looked a sad, loving look out of his eyes that almost broke her heart. But he soon took courage and adopted a different manner. It was not in what he said—affection is not necessarily expressed in words—it was in his pleading manner and those other auxiliaries that are natural to some and impossible to others.

"What's come over you, Tom?" asked the girl. "You've always been cold as a stone before."

"The prospect of losing you has lighted fires in my heart that will never be quenched till you tell me that you will be mine."

"If it were not for your pessimism I would," said the lady.

"Try me on that. I have been convinced of my fault and will make an effort to rectify it."

"Very well. I will put you on probation for a month. If at the end of that time you succeed in throwing off your pessimism maybe I'll relent."

Tom would have learned something had he seen Dick's parting kiss, though perhaps it was just as well that he did not. After the call Dick rejoined his brothers, who were expecting him, and he gave them an account of his visit—all but the kiss. He was to call again the next evening, which prepared the way for Harry's effort to supply Tom's second deficiency. Hope sprang buoyant in Tom's breast.

The next evening Harry entered the lady's presence, enthusiasm beaming all over him.

"Oh, sweetheart," he exclaimed, "congratulate me!"

"What's happened?"

"I've been taken in on the ground floor of the Acme Gold Mining company. For a $500 investment I shall be rich. They are taking out ore that pays $800 to the ton."

Dick took from his pocketbook a certificate of stock that was not worth the paper it was printed on.

"Upon my word, Tom, what's become of Mr. Dismal? I'll have to change your name to Mr. Aircastle. Tommy Aircastle; that's a good name."

"You don't believe me?" reproachfully.

"I believe that you are trying to convince me of your reformation as a pessimist. I don't care if you remain something of a pessimist in disposition, but I do care if you weigh down others with your lugubrious views. Since you are under probation for your coldness, you may consider yourself under probation for your other fault. We shall see how you succeed."

Harry returned to his brothers, and when he reported that he, too, had been put on probation, the three of them embraced and then turned their attention to refreshments as on the evening before.

"Now, Tom," said Dick, "you practice on either me or Harry every day during the term of your probation. We'll coach you; and, mind, don't go to see your girl except immediately after a lesson from both of us."

Tom took the advice and persuaded his brothers to remain with him until he was "out of the woods." At the end of the month he was accepted and became the husband of Julia Atkinson. After their marriage she continued her husband's training. Her own demonstrative bearing became subdued, and Tom unconsciously relapsed into pessimism. But, on the whole, they get on together as well as most couples.

Interesting Sleepy Time Story From the Land of Fairies.

FABLE OF THE THERMOMETER.

How a Wayward Little Elf Was Put In a Prison and Kept There For the Benefit of Mankind—Things of Interest to Small Folks—Girl Policemen.

Polly Ann and little Ned were looking at the thermometer when just then Uncle Ben came in and told about—

AN ELF FROM FAIRYLAND.

Once there lived in Fairyland a capricious little elf named Quicksilver. This was not her real name, but was given to her one day by the king of fairies in a fit of anger at her waywardness. Quicksilver was never to be counted on at all. When one thought to find her visiting the Rose Fairy, whose home was by the garden wall, she had already left and was flashing here and there like a streak of lightning. She led all of the fairy folk such a dance that they decided to teach her to be more reliable. But she was such a sprightly little thing and looked so pretty in her dainty silver frock that they hesitated to change her.

One day when the queen had planned some work for Quicksilver and she had slipped away and could not be found the king's patience was exhausted, and he called his counselors to help him devise a punishment. They decided to build a little glass house for her without doors, through which she might attempt to escape, and to place a little ladder at the rear so that she might climb up and look out upon the scenes of her former naughtiness.

They had difficulty in catching her, but at last she was placed in her new domicile and forced to remain there forever. In the summer, when her friends the flowers, bees and butterflies were about, Quicksilver climbed high up on her little ladder to look at her former comrades with longing eyes. In the winter, however, when these sought shelter from Jack Frost and were nowhere to be seen, she felt sad and lonely and slipped down into her little room and would not allow herself to be seen but for an occasional peep when the day was warmer. Then she climbed in the hope of seeing one of her dear ones.

One day a wise mortal noticed Quicksilver and studied her habits. He determined to make her useful in the world by teaching them to other men. To this day we look at her as she sits in her little glass house, and when one asks mother, "Shall I put on my warm coat today?" she answers, "Go and see what the thermometer is doing."

How Silver Bow Creek Was Named.

Silver Bow creek received its name from a party of prospectors who reached its valley in the vicinity of Butte in 1864. While discussing the best name for the stream the clouds broke away, and the sunshine falling on the creek as it circled around the mountain suggested the name Silver Bow, and it was accordingly so called. — United States Geological Survey.

Police Girls of New York.

In all the importance of blue uniforms, blue caps, badges and little twirling sticks, fifty patrol girls recently appeared on the east side of New York city. INTERESTING MENUS.

If You Must Be Economical, Read This Food Schedule.

Sunday.—Cream of pea soup, fricasseed chicken, sweet potatoes, cauliflower, apple nut mayonnaise salad and fruit souffle.

Monday.—Bouillon, ham en casserole, white potatoes, spinach, beet relish, tapioca pudding.

Tuesday.—Tomato soup, chicken pot pie (left from Sunday), peas, rice, egg sardine salad, pastry.

Wednesday.—Cream of potato soup, beef loaf, macaroni or white potatoes, carrots, lettuce-tomato salad, cornstarch pudding.

Thursday.—Consomme, roast pork, white potatoes, parsnips, squash, onions, apple-celery salad, acid gelatin dessert.

Friday.—Cream of onion soup, broiled fish, white potatoes, tomatoes, beets, lettuce, cheese salad, light steamed pudding.

Saturday.—Vermicelli soup, baked beans, tomatoes, coldslaw, stewed fruits.

On Monday the ham should be just enough for one meal.

Tuesday the pot pie is made from leftover chicken from Sunday dinner.

Wednesday there can be enough of the loaf left for a lunch on Thursday.

Thursday buy a small roast of pork, some may be left, or two chops could be reserved and broiled for Friday's lunch.

Fish on Friday. As we seldom care for leftover fish, enough should be purchased for one meal. If boiled fish is preferred extra may be purchased so as to have a leftover which may be creamed for lunch Saturday.

Saturday there will be baked beans, and of course enough for one or two breakfasts or a lunch. These are considered perfectly balanced meals and are merely samples of what may be done if the woman will plan ahead and devote time and thought to her menus.

Skirt Hangers.

Nothing can be said against the ordinary skirt hangers of wood; but, as every woman likes useful things to be as ornamental as possible, there is a great deal to be said in favor of the strips of ribbon or linen that can be embroidered to form skirt hangers. Each strip has a brass ring attached to one end and a brass clasp at the other. The ring is intended to be slipped over the nail or hook from which the skirt suspends. In the teeth of the clasp the skirt is held securely. The hangers can be made for oneself or they can be made as a shower gift.

Many Ribbons.

Ribbons are used generously as trimmings for afternoon and dance frocks these days. They are made into panels, loop upon loop, and are sewed around wide skirts in graduated widths. Very broad ribbons of soft brocade patterns are draped over the bodice under a veiling of tulle, and very narrow ribbons are plaited and used as an edge trimming. Gay little bowknots and rosettes of ribbon flutter from dance frocks captivatingly.

MAGGIE AND A MYSTERY.

The Dark Secret Was Revealed After the Maid Had Gone.

"And so," said one north Pennsylvania street matron to another, "you let Maggie go?"

"Yes, and I made the mistake of my life, but I came to be afraid of her."

"Afraid of her, for goodness' sake! Why, she always seemed so quiet!"

"You noticed perhaps that she always had one or two lead pencils stuck in her hair? Well, we began to find pencil marks everywhere—on the paper lining the pantry shelves, on the packages that came from the butcher and the grocer—the strangest, most mysterious marks."

"Well, I never!"

"Yes; I had read of thieves marking on gateposts and all that kind of thing—the way they gave information to each other. So I let her go. One day when my brother Fred was here I told him about it and showed him some of the pencil marks. Then he laughed and read them right off. One of the markings said:

"'Don't forget to tell her we need mustard, macaroni and cheese.'

"Another was interpreted by Fred to read, 'Two quarts of milk for Sunday,' and another, 'Bluing and salsoda.' 'Why,' said Fred, 'that's shorthand and mighty good shorthand at that. Sister, you have let a bird go.'"—Indianapolis News.

GREAT MARKETS OF PARIS.

Buyers in the "Halles" May Not Carry Parcels of Any Kind.

There are some queer customs and regulations in the "halles," the great Paris central markets. No buyer is allowed to enter or leave the markets carrying a parcel, however small it may be. To carry parcels is the privilege of the porters of these markets. Quaint figures are they in baggy velveteen trousers, blue striped jerseys and big brimmed, round leather hats. They alone can be employed to convey from the market to the street outside your merchandise, whether it be half a beef or only a good fat hen.

Madame has to help in her purchases market women known as the keepers. These women sit at the entrance to the main division of the markets and for a small fee watch over all purchases brought to them. Many of these "salesladies" are wealthy. A portly dame, a small seller, wears a fine pair of diamonds in her ears and a sparkling solitaire on her ring finger.

Another character at the markets is the "cutter." When a sheep is brought to him by the buyer for half a dozen Paris housekeepers he cuts the animal into six portions and divides it among them. The purchasers draw lots for the best pieces and pay according to value received.—Exchange.

On Modern Man.

"The late Emerson Taylor, our consul at Port of Spain," said a Washington official, "hailed from Dry Run, and he had a fund of happy Dry Run humor.

"Taylor once compared a disgruntled brother consul to a Dry Run housewife.

"'This woman,' he said, 'often took a queer, disgruntled view of things. Thus she said one day:

"'I don't think the prodigal son was so bad, after all.'

"'He wa'n't no good to his family,' said her husband.

"'That's a fact,' said the Dry Run woman. 'But when he got home, all the same, he knowed enough to keep his mouth shet. If he'd been like the twentieth century man the first thing he'd done would 'a' been to find fault with the way the fatted calf was cooked.'"—Pittsburgh Press.

Languages In Switzerland.

Both French and German are the "official" languages of Switzerland. Public signs, such as those of railroads, are printed in both languages. Italian is also spoken in those parts of Switzerland which are closest to Italy. As a matter of fact, the country is, however, quite definitely divided as to language. The cantons of Vaud, Neuchatel, Geneva, Fribourg and most of Valais speak French. The canton of Ticino speaks Italian. The rest of the country speaks preponderantly German. The canton of Valais has different districts, where each of the three languages is spoken.

Film Realism.

"Do you suppose that was a real brick he hit that man with?" asked the sweet young thing as she and her young man sat watching the motion picture comedy.

"Of course it was," replied her escort. "You don't suppose after paying an actor $10,000 a week they'd be such tightwads as to ring in a fake brick on him, do you?"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

UNSOUND FOODS.

Points For Young Housekeepers About Shellfish.

HOW TO DETECT BAD MEATS.

If the Caterer For a Family Knows the Difference Between Fresh and Stale Foodstuffs Ptomaine Poisoning and Other Serious Ills May Be Avoided.

Smoked meats and fish are bad when they are flabby to the touch and have a rancid, sour smell.

Glassed meat products are bad when they have a rancid, sour smell and when the color differs from the fresh product.

Good fresh pork is solid, has pure white fat and pink flesh. Do not buy pork that is soft and yellow.

Remember that lamb or mutton should be firm, close grained and light red in color, with fat that is white and hard.

Beef should be of a rosy red color, with cream colored, firm, elastic fat and scarcely moist when touched with the finger. Do not buy wet, flabby beef that is pale and purple.

All shellfish should smell fresh, and the shells should close firmly when put into water or touched with the finger. Shellfish should be alive when cooked.

Fresh veal is pale red (unless milk fed, when it is light), with firm, white fat between the muscles and surrounding tissues and scarcely moist to the touch. Bad veal is soft, mushy, sticky and has a very red tinge, while the fat has a grayish lead color.

Fresh fish should have red gills, moist, bright scales and clear eyes, and should be firm and rigid when handled. Stale fish is flabby, has dull scales, the eyes are sunken and covered with a film, the gills are pale or of greenish color, and the fish has a bad odor. All lumpy fish should be rejected as the growth may be cancer.

To detect decomposing meats in cans before opening inspect the ends of the can and if they bulge, discard the can. This bulging is due to accumulated gases of decomposition that push the ends outward by force of pressure. Leaking and rusty cans should also be discarded. Canned meats should be free from mold. The odor of such meats should be the same as when freshly prepared. If the meat is putrid exposure to heat will make it possible to detect the foul odor.

Remove from stove as soon as it forms a soft ball in water. It burns very easily, so stir quite often, but not continuously.

For Spring Brides.

A dainty and acceptable gift to tuck into the bride's traveling bag as a little surprise to her when her destination is reached is a boudoir set of cap and ribbon slippers. The whole output may be folded very small in its tissue paper wrapping and will take up scarcely any room at all in the bag—not as much as the handful of rice which is sometimes slipped in by a mischievous bridesmaid. The cap is an ordinary boudoir cap of white point d'esprit, filled with fine white lace and trimmed with the best quality satin ribbon in pale blue or pink shade. A bow of the ribbon is caught against the cap with a tiny rhinestone buckle.

The slippers have very flexible soles, cut from pale blue or pink goldenrod satin; two layers of satin for each sole, and a thin layer of cotton batting may be slipped between if one fancies a little thicker sole. Two inch blue or pink satin ribbon is sewed around the edge of the sole and fastened together at the back. About two inches of the ribbon are gathered along the upper edge over cord elastic to hold the slipper on the heel.

Attractive Suits.

Every woman who can possibly afford it will invest in one of the attractive suits of pongee, poplin or silk homespun. They are to be had in white, cream and oyster white, tan, brown and biscuit Dutch, navy and gray blue, besides different tones of green and gray.

Now we have little wagons to use in the library. These book wagons do not take up much space in the library.

Satin For Blouses.

A new blouse of white satin shows a delightful touch of color in the lining of primrose yellow taffeta that appears in turnover points of the high collar and the jabot-like frill on the front and in the lower side of the frills that finish the long sleeves.

HOW THE FISHERMAN SHOULD HANDLE HIS SHORT BAIT CASTING ROD.—The successful fisherman is one who is familiar with the habits of the fish he seeks, and it is to his advantage to be acquainted with the waters which he intends to explore. In early spring the water is cool, and bass can be found in the shallows during the day. The likely places should be near the sheltering rocks in shoal water or near old stumps and submerged branches. Pickerel also make for the warm waters during the day, and in casting during the early months of the season work the shoal places well.

The fish at this time feed on minnows and helgramites below the surface, and the logical bait to use is the underwater type. Two styles of bait casting are used, the overhead and the underhand casts, and it would be well for the angler to master both. The underhand cast is made by reeling in the bait until it is within six inches or so of the tip of the rod. The click and drag are released and the ball of the thumb is firmly pressed on the line of the spool. The rod is swung across the body to the rear, the tip being level with the angler's breast, then brought smartly forward across the body in the desired direction, while the thumb is partly eased to allow the line to run freely.

The whole secret of casting lies in thumbing the line, and a few hours of practice should suffice to demonstrate how the trick can be accomplished. The beginner, however, will find it an advantage to practice casting with a full reel, and if the casting line is not sufficiently long enough to fill the spool a quantity of string may be first spooled and the casting line wound on the core thus made. Considerable practice is, of course, necessary before the angler can cast long and accurately, and the thumb must be educated to regulate the speed of the reel and allow it to travel freely, but not overrun.

How to Test Eggs In an Easy, Practical Way.

For the benefit of the many women who do not know the various means of testing home foods the following hints are given:

A simple test for the freshness of eggs depends upon their weight. An egg quickly loses water by evaporation through its shell and weighs less as it grows older. Place the eggs in a solution made of two ounces of salt to one pint of water. A fresh egg sinks. An egg a few days old has a tendency to rise a little in the liquid, while a stale egg floats on the top.

The light test is a very effective one. Place an opaque screen over a strong light, leaving an aperture about the size of an egg. Place the egg between the eye and light, close against the opening. A fresh egg appears clear, almost translucent, and at the large end, between the lining and the cell, a small transparent air chamber can be seen. Dark spots indicate staleness. A stale or rotten egg looks darker than a fresh one. If an egg is broken and the white and yolk are found to have run together it is almost enough proof that the egg is not fresh.

How to Crack Nuts For Fudge and Cake.

Almost all housewives know how very hard it is to crack pecan nuts. Pour boiling water over the nuts and allow them to stand tightly covered for five or six hours. The nut meats may then be extracted easily without a trace of the bitter lining of the nut. Use nut crackers and crack lightly all around the nuts. The work is quickly done and is not at all like the old tedious process of picking out the meats from the dry nuts. The meats nearly always come out whole.

How to Remove Iron Rust From Cottons and Linens.

Buy five cents' worth of oxalic acid crystals (poison), put into a bottle, fill up with water and shake. On a sunny day take clothes with iron rust on outdoors, wet with oxalic acid solution and hold in sun until stain disappears. If it does not go quickly wet again and rub between hands. Then be very sure to rinse thoroughly or the acid will eat the cloth.

How to Hang Curtains So That They Hang Well.

Curtains will hang straight if a small lead weight is sewed in each end of the lower hem. In the case of thin curtains the weights will also prevent them from blowing. They will hang as they should, following the line of the woodwork. For silk curtains get a weighted braid, which comes for dress skirts, and sew it in the hem.

How to Mix a Homemade Fertilizer For Foliage Plants.

A splendid fertilizer for all pot plants and evergreens may be made in this way: Dissolve one can of lye in two gallons of water, and put in enough bones to make a thick, crumbly mass. A few spoonfuls of this in your watering pot once a week will give a wealth of growth and brightness to all foliage plants.

KIDDIES PLAY TO HOUSE CROWDED FROM PIT TO DOME OF QUIRK THEATER

Last night was another big night at the Quirk. The pupils of the city's schools were decidedly in evidence. As amateur performers they showed a high degree of proficiency, and evidence of careful training was easily seen.

The high school orchestra with Mrs. L. R. Owens as director did themselves proud, as the old saying goes. It is to be doubted if a better orchestra could be found in any city of Fulton's size, and the youthful artists, together with their able director, are worthy of high praise.

The first number on the program was an overture by the orchestra, "Dawn of Love". This was followed by a pretty arrangement by the pupils of the Fourth street and Rochester street schools. It was entitled "The Cycle of the Months." Each month was cleverly represented by a group of children appropriately dressed.

The third number was a chorus song, "Darkey Lullaby," by the members of the teachers' training class, and was exceptionally well given. Miss Ash, training class teacher, acted as director.

The pupils from State street school gave a scene from Hiawatha's Childhood with splendid success. Robert Taggart as Hiawatha, Thelma Bogardus as Nakomis and James Blakeslee as Iagoo, each displayed talent.

The Open Air Kiddies gave a demonstration of some of the

New Streets and Lights Wanted in East Side Wards

"Crying needs" in the way of street improvements were made known to the Board of Public Works last night by several delegation of taxpayers and three aldermen, whose complaints were mostly on crosswalks and deep holes in the streets. Alderman McKay, with Messrs. Worden and Moore, residents of Academy st., entered complaint against the grade in the vicinity of Academy and 5th streets, asking the board also to construct sidewalks in the vicinity. As no appropriation was made in this year's budget for sidewalk construction, the alderman was advised that the request could not be carried out, but that the residents of Academy st. would be taken care of in next year's budget. City Engineer Hill was authorized to prepare plans and estimate for improvements in the Academy st. section.

Lighting the Ways

A "pocketful" of complaints were made by Alderman Quirk. He requested that a light be constructed in Buffalo st. between 5th and 6th. Granted. Cayuga st., between 4th and 5th sts., Mr. Quirk stated, was in bad condition where the refuse from the paving operaitons between 2nd and 4th sts. had been placed. The gutters are all clogged up, he stated.

A resolution was also passed authorizing the placing of a light at Utica and 12th sts., upon Mr. Quirk stating that the residents in the vicinity had shown him convincingly that a light was needed there. The fact that the board has authorized the placing of several lights at each meeting led Mr. Wiltsie to ask when the end of the string would be reached. A suggestion was made that in 3rd st., between Oneida and the Park there are too many lights and some of these could be taken away and placed where they are badly needed. Other complaints made by Mr. Quirk were the condition of the crosswalks at 7th and Utica sts., which he requested completed, a protruding manhole at 7th and Cayuga sts., which he stated caused an accident last week when a buggy overturned there. The manhole protrudes a full foot, Mr. Quirk stated, and will eventually result in damage suits being filed against the city unless measures are taken to rectify the defect. On the same corner, he stated, there is a big hole in the crosswalk. Oneida st. residents, the alderman stated, were "kicking" on the dirty condition of the gutters and the street in particular. He suggested that the street be cleaned and oiled. Alderman Van Valkenburg also had a few suggested improvements to offer, namely thatq f the crosswalks at 6th and Seward sts., 6th and Ontario, 6th and Seneca, and 5th and Ontario sts.

Will Look Up a Claim

Resolutions were passed by the board granting permission to the Kavanagh Press to construct a sign, auditing the pay roll and the purchase of a cast iron syphon. A communication was received from the Board of Health requesting the city to clean, widen and deepen Waterhouse creek from Harrison st. to the Fulton Light, Heat andn Power company dam. Mr. Hillick also informed the board that no satisfactory settlement could be made with Starr F. Hill in regard to the suit arising out of the change of grade in Oneida st. Mr. Hillick recommended that the city permit the proceedings already started to continue and let the commissioners settle the amount.

Mr. Hillick advised the board that after on investigation of the condition of the city's water supply he was certain that the quality of the water is changed as a result of the State's barge canal operations interfering with the drainage of the area about the springs. He recommended that Dr. Mason of Rennsalaer Polytechnic Institute, a consulting expert, be brought here to ascertain definitely whether the city has a just claim against the State for damages.

The Board took final action on the First st. paving work, introducing and passing a resolution of its final decision to have the work done. No persons appeared at the meeting to enter a protest on the paving.

Salvation Army Men and Women Go to the "Shed" Tonight

The weather had a dampening effect on the attendance at the Tabernacle last night, there being only 600 persons there to hear Evangelist Peacock preach one of the most interesting sermons of the campaign. A delegation was present from the Free Methodist church to the number of 80. The Minetto Free Methodist church also sent a delegation of 30 of its members. There were 48 trail hitters yesterday.

With large delegations coming from neighboring cities tonight and tomarrow night, it is expected that the big building will be filled to capacity. The Salvation Army headed by a band of music, will attend tonight, and the local division and friends, together with a large delegation from Syracuse will march to the music of the band. Delegations will also be here from Mt. Pleasant and Baldwinsville. The business women will meet in the Presbyterian church at 6:15 for supper and march to the tabernacle at 7:20.

Tomorrow night will be Odd Fellows and Rebekah ninght.

We Are Afraid to Trust God, Says Evangelist

Exodus 4:2—And the Lord said unto him, "What is that in thine hand?" And he said, "A rod."

Men are very willing to hunt up excuses to keep them from doing what they know they ought to do. They seem to think that a poor excuse is better than none at all. This seems to be the most natural thiing for men and women in the world. When we are called upon to do something we know in our own hearts we ought to do, the first thing we think of is, how can we get out of doing it? We do not want to say we will not do it, but we begin to make excuses and try to make ourselves believe that such and such a thing is impossible. This is true with regard to the work of God. We are more willing to make excuses when we are asked to do something for God, than at any other time. This is not only true of the people in the service of God today, but it is only true of the people who have lived in the days gone by. We find in reading God's word that man has hesitated when called upon to do a work for God from the very beginning of time. We seem to be afraid to trust God to carry the work through to completion. We forget that with man things are impossible, but with God all things are possible. God had called Moses to deliver the children of Israel from bondage, but Moses hesitated, just as many of us do when we are asked to do something for God. He mentioned one difficulty after another, which he thought would excuse him from entering on his allotted task. But God soon revealed to him the folly of his wickedness. The Lord said unto him, "What is that in thine hand?" and he said, "A rod." Moses had in his hand a shepherd's staff. A very insignificant thing in many respects, Yet God often takes the weakest instruments to accomplish His mightiest deeds. He said to Moses, "Cast it on the ground," and it became a serpent. Then he told Moses to take it by the tail, and it became a rod. This act revealed to Moses that what was formidable to weak faith might become an element of power when the act of obedience to God was performed. What was simply a rod in the hand of Moses now became a mighty power when used by God. This reveals to us that opportunity rightly employed becomes blessing greatly multiplied; but opportunities neglected or misused become disadvantages greatly multiplied and increased. When we make use of our God-given talents they will increase, but when we misuse them they will decrease. Now, God could have accomplished His work without the intervention of any human agency, but he chose to use a man who was slow at speech and of slow tongue. It was to be done by the use of means that seemed especially insignificant.

We sometimes get the idea into our head that in order to do God's work, we must have a mighty host, we must have a mint of money at our command, we must enlist the sympathy of the great and mighty in the world. But, my friends, this is a mistaken idea. All God asks is this, that we be willing to let God us us in His service, and to permit Him to use our talents in the way which seems best to Him. Let us notice some of the means God used to bring victory to His people, and to advance His Kingdom in the world. When the children of Israel had crossed the river Jordan, they capture the city of Jerico by simply marching around the city every day for seven days, and on the seventh day when they blew the trumpets, and marched around the city seven times, the walls fell down and the city was captured. When Joshua went up against the city of Ai, The Lord commanded Joshua to "stretch out the spear that is in thine hand toward Ai." Joshua was obedient, and God gave him the victory.

God is calling us in His service. He is calling us to a greater task than that to which He called Moses. Moses was called to overthrow the King of Egypt, but we are called to overtrow the power of darkness. We are called by God to use our talents and our men to free the world from the power of the evil one and to establish the gospel of Jesus Christ thruout the whole world. This is a great task when we stop long enough to think about it. Yet God has placed in our hands, that which properly used will accomplish great things for God's glory and man's good. Let us notice some of the things God has placed in our hands. In other words a few of our talents or powers God has given us that can be used in the service of the Master. These things can be Master if we are only willing to do it. The first thing we can consecrate is "self." It is a solemn thought when we take into consideration that every man holds, as it were, in his hand an immortal being, with it's eternal destiny, it's possibilities here and hereafter. Paul fully realized this when he said, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world but be transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." The greatest need of the church today is a consecrated membership. We need to give ourselves to God. Paul said this was the reason for such wonderful success in the church of Macedonia. They first gave their own selves to the Lord. And if we have a desire to see thew ork of God prosper, we must first give ourselves

TEACHERAGES

If a parsonage, owned by a congregation, is desirable for the use of the pastor whose stay may not be permanent, but who needs a comfortable home while on his charge, why not a teacherage for rural communities where there is now no suitable home for the teacher? That was the question asked by many women's clubs a few years ago. It has been answered by the establishment of 108 cottages for teachers in the state of Washington alone. The movement has now been taken up by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior.

The Bureau in a recent bulletin ascribes the difficulty of getting good teachers for country districts largely to the lack of suitable living conditions for carrying on a teacher's work.

If she boards in a farmhouse, it is quite likely to have only one room warm enough to sit in on winter evenings. This is used by the whole family, and gives the teacher no quiet and seclusion in which to prepare lessons, mark papers, or do the general reading necessary for her to keep abreast of current thought. If she demands a room where she can be alone she is often thought "stuck-up," and is made uncomfortable mentally, even if she can secure the necessary physical comfort without which she cannot work.

The establishment of cottages where one or more teachers may live in places easily accessible to the school removes these objections. Most of the Washington teacherages are charming little homes.

When the Bureau proposes that these cottages serve also as community centers the suggestion seems not quite so wise. The school house itself is admirable for a community center, but the teacher's home, one would think, ought to be her own; not a place where the community comes, but one in which she may retire from her public activities to have the quiet, personal life which belongs of right to every citizen off duty.

$25,000 A YEAR

Lawrence Copely Thaw, a 17-year-old New York boy, needs $25,000 a year to live on. He can't possibly get along with any less, according to the judgment of the referee appointed by the surrogate court to fix a proper income for the lad. Lawrence's guardian insisted that he really needed $28,000, itemised as follows:

Rent and electricity	$5,000
Household expenses	12,000
Education	1,500
Clothing	1,500
Automobile	3,500
Spending money	1,500
Traveling and incidentals	3,000

Most persons may imagine that Lawrence is extravagant. But in that, says the referee, they will be quite wrong. It would be a good deal of money for an ordinary boy, but Lawrence isn't ordinary. He has been accustomed all his life to a certain standard of living and, considering what that standard is, he's very modest and economical. He practices economy in buying gasoline for his motor car. He has no bad habits. He gets up at 6 o'clock every morning, takes regular exercise, is a conscientious student and is careful and orderly in all things.

Even so, the average American will question whether $25,000 a year is good for any 17-year-old boy. If his relatives and friends are so dead sure that he needs it, possibly that fact in itself is evidence that he shouldn't have it. Such a standard of living needs changing. At least, the lad subjected to it ought to be enabled to discover that there are other standards which are tolerable and respectable.

It would be doing Lawrence a great favor to cut him down to about $1,000 a year until he becomes of age.

THE COUNTRY NEWSPAPER

But the beauty and the joy of our papers and their little worlds is that we who live in the country towns know our own heroes. Who knows Murphy in New York? Only a few. Yet in Emporia we all know Tom O'Connor—and love him. Who knows Morgan in New York? One man in a hundred thousand. Yet in Emporia who does not know George Newman, our banker and merchant prince? Boston people pick up their morning papers and read with shuddering horror of the crimes of their daily villian, yet read without that fine thrill that we have when we hear that Al Ludorph is in jail again in Emporia. For we all know Al; we've ridden in his hack a score of times. And we take up our paper with the story of his frailties as readers who begin the narrative of an old friend's adventures.

Our papers, our little country papers, seem drab and miserably provincial to strangers; yet we who read them read in their lines the sweet, intimate story of life. And all these touches of nature make us wondrous kind. It is the country newspaper, bringing together daily the threads of the town's life, weaving them into something rich and strange, and setting the pattern as it weaves, directing the loom, and giving the cloth its color by mixing the lives of all the people in its colorpot—it is this country newspaper that reveals us to ourselves, that keeps our country hearts quick and our country minds open and our country faith strong.

When the girl at the glove counter marries the boy in the wholesale house, the news of their wedding is good for a 40-line wedding notice, and the 40 lines in the country paper give them self-respect. When in due course we know that their baby is a 12 pounder, named Grover or Theodore or Woodrow; we have that neighborly feeling that breeds the real democracy. When we read the death in that home we can mourn with them that mourn. When we see them moving upward in the world, into a firm, and out toward the country club neighborhood, we rejoice with them that rejoice. Therefore, men and brethren, when you are riding through this vale of tears upon the California Limited, and by chance pick up the little country newspaper with its meagre telegraph service of three or four thousand words—or, at best, fifteen or twenty thousand; when you see its array oof countryside items; its interminable local stories; its tiresome editorials on the waterworks, the schools, the street railroad, the crops and the city printing, don't throw down the contemptible little rag with the verdict that there is nothing in it. But know this, and know it well: If you could take the clay from your eyes and read the little paper as it is written, you would find all of God's beautiful sorrowing, struggling, aspiring world in it, and what you saw would make you touch the little paper with reverent hands. —William Allen White in Harper's.

NO TRAITORS WEAR THE SHAMROCK LEAVES

At the Irish-American mass meeting Sunday night both Ireland and Germany were lustily cheered.

But when the ringing declaration was made that in any quarrel in which America might be involved, the Irish American citizens of these United States would fight to a man for the Stars and Stripes against ANY nation—oh, then, the walls fairly rocked to the cheers!

The Tory newspapers that try to impugn the majority of the Irish-Americans to America have a hopeless job on their hands.

There are no traitors to the dear land of their adoption wearing the shamrock leaves.—N. Y. American.

COSTLY ANCESTRY

Buffalo is a good illustration of what one's ancestors can do for their desecendants. That city must this year pay bonds and interest in the sum of $4,790,374. It has a tax rate of $30—a very natural consequence when present administration must be continued and such a very large sum must be paid on old debts and the intesest on the same.

Ertravagance of the past is making Buffalo wince, just as it will make many cities wince before very long and is doing in a good many others just now. It is all right to make the future generations pay some of the cost of permanent and abiding improvements and betterments; but it is a wicked and criminal thing to mortgage one's widow and children to provide temporary excesses for the present.

That is why a city ought to be mighty careful indeed as to the issuance of bonds, unless the money is to be used for something that will be just as greatly needed a half century from now as it is the day the bonds are sold.—Utica Observer.

REPUBLICANS' BIG GAIN

A comparison of the total enrollment for the years 1914-15 and 1915-16 in this state furnishes some interesting guides to the drift of public opinion.

The Republican enrollment shows an increase of nearly 100,000 and that is the only increase of any moment that is shown by any party. The Democratic party shows a loss of 3,816, the Socialist party a loss of 724 and the Progressive party a loss of 30,704, or about 40 per cent. The greatest gain is made by the Republican party; the greatest loss is made by the Progressives. The Republican gain is nearly sixty times as large as the combined gains of the Independence League and the Prohibition parties, the only parties except the Republican making gains.

Studied from any angle the enrollment figures point to the success of the Republican party in the cominpg campaign. The great gain in the Republican enrollment shows that the voters of the state are turning to the Republican party. Last year the Democratic enrollment was 20,000 larger than the Republican. This year the Republican enrollment is 70,000 greater than the Democratic.—Batavia News.

Cut prices and substitution are twins. The store that sells a trademarked article at a loss must increase its profits on anonymous goods to continue in business. It is clear that a certain average of profits must be maintained or a merchant will become bankrupt.

No. 10.—JUNK

The waste in every household is considerable. Part is unavoidable waste and part is unnecessary waste. Altogether too much food goes into the garbage can. Clothes are not taken care of, are not in use and so become shabby long before their usefulness is ended. Shoes that with a little mending would go many a mile are thrown out, and throughout the house there is waste. The attic bears testimony to this fact.

Waste that is waste should not be hoarded, but turned into profit. Old rubbers, rags, iron, can be turned into many an honest penny, and clothing that has served its day may be sold to second hand dealers glad to get such articles.

The conversation of household waste affords a living for thousands of people. The junk man is usually a leading citizen, well housed and well fiixed. The privilege of "trimming" the scows that take the waste of New York to sea is worth millions annually. It makes millionaires. And the waste that finds its way to the garbage scow is what breaks some families.

A certain school teacher has the right idea. Every spring she asks the children to bring to the school the worn out rubbers of the winter, and from the proceeds she buys pictures for the walls and phonograph records for the dances. At times these contributions amount to over half a ton. Waste becomes profitable as you get it together. And when so gathered it should be used for a good purpose as a standing object lesson that "waste conserved it profit earned."

Here is a junk story from the Far East: A Japanese rag man of excellent speech and manner has been making a canvass, offering to buy all the old junk offered. In stead of paying cash he gives a coupon good at a certain bank, where it must be left untouched for a certain number of years.

Upon investigation the ragman turned out to be a former superintendent of Yokohama police annd manager of a large dock corporation, interested in teaching his people the proper use of junk.

Junk money is apt to be regarded as "easy money" and spent foolishly. While it is easy money, it should be conserved to usefulness and not wasted. The school teacher uses one method, the Japanese junk man another, but both tending in the right direction. We can teach our children no better lesson than to avoid waste, but avoiding all possible waste to so use the junk that it will prove a lasting benefit. Save your junk and save the money your junk turns in.

ASK AID FOR BLIND

Call Upon American Women to Help War Victims.

PLAN TO TEACH THEM TRADES

Unceasing Activity of American People in Their Efforts to Alleviate Sufferings in Europe Has Met With Kindest of Appreciation From Abroad.

New York.—The activity of the American people in their efforts to alleviate the sufferings in Europe has resulted in the saving of the lives of many persons who were on the verge of starvation and the receiving of profound thanks from both victims and rulers of the belligerent nations. Their unceasing work will long be remembered. Money and supplies in large quantities have been sent to both sides.

One of the latest steps taken by the sympathizers of the allies is an appeal issued by the B. F. B. (British, French, Belgian) Permanent Blind Relief fund, with headquarters in this city, over the names of Lady Arthur Paget of the fund's executive committee and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, one of the honorary secretaries, calling upon the women of America for aid. The appeal says in part:

"Thousands of wives, mothers and daughters in France, England and Belgium are speaking to you. Their husbands, brothers and sons, blinded in the war, are helpless and hopeless. They cannot see to work at their former trades. These brave, true women are now obliged to assume the entire burden of supporting them and their children, of supplying all their daily material needs and of encouraging them constantly in their complete despair and continual distress.

"Unless you act these thousands of women will be condemned for the rest of their lives to an existence of hopeless drudgery and hardship.

"For humanity's sake help these European women. They are your sisters, even though you have never seen them.

"Six months' training will educate the blinded men dependent on them in trades not requiring sight. Even your single donation alone will go far toward enabling one of these sightless men to support himself and partly support his family for the rest of his life.

"These women stretch appealing hands to you from across the ocean. Make at least one of them permanently happy and her husband, father or son permanently useful by sending us a contribution.

"The sooner you act the sooner one brave, good, faithful woman will be rescued from an existence of despair and crushing slavery and the sooner the man who is tragically anxious to support her will be saved from a life of uselessness and hopelessness."

FOX IN PORCH SWING.

Apparently Found Cushion Comfortable Sleeping Place.

Duarte, Cal.—When C. A. Werner opened his house the other morning he found his swinging seat occupied by a full grown fox. With the cushion for a nest the fox was resting comfortably and evidently enjoying his quarters.

When his presence became known the members of the family came trooping out to see the porch climber. Then the fox disappeared under the house, where his nature prompted him to hide until the spectators left the porch, when, finding the coast again clear, the fox gracefully jumped on the porch and into the swinging seat, and with an almost human air of comfort and satisfaction adjusted the pillow and settled down to complete the morning nap.

When again interrupted the fox disappeared and headed for the mountains.

TOWN AND CITY PLANNING CONSIDERED AT CONVENTION

Suggestions by Bernard J. Newman of Philadelphia Housing Commission.

At the convention of the Pennsylvania Housing and Town Planning association held in Reading recently there were many suggestions in the address delivered by Bernard J. Newman of the Philadelphia housing commission as to why a continuously growing city or even a town whose population counts up to only a few thousands, needs plenty of extra room. Cities develop along two lines which, for mental, moral and physical wholesomeness, should be kept separated.

The development of a city in its industrial phases and features is intimately connected with its growth in homes or in the residential sections. In arranging the layout of a city or big town, however, the intermingling of industrial buildings and residential buildings is to be avoided. That part of a city that stretches along a water front is naturally adapted to factories, commercial warehouses and such, and there must be spacings for traffic approaches, and, in short, the layout of such a section should have regard entirely to its adaptation to commercial and industrial uses. It is the same with regard to those sections of a city that border the railroads. Such areas should be planned upon a liberal scale with regard to industrial uses.

A territory that is likely to be occupied by an urban population should be under a city planning organization. It should be laid off in advance with a scientific regard for both its continuous industrial development and its continuous residential expansion. It is an absurdity, almost a monstrosity, for such an area to be under county government, representatives of agricultural interests. And such an area should not develop at haphazard; every detail of its development should be planned in advance.

TREES AND PLANNING.

They Are Important Elements in Landscape Gardening.

Why is it that in the planning and laying out of grounds an unfair percentage of time and money is always devoted to seeds, plants and shrubs, leaving the planting of trees to the last? asks Edward R. Parkinson in the New York Evening Post. Is it that the effective planting of them requires too much skill for the average person or because he fails to realize how much trees can be made to do for a landscape, not only in summer, but in the bleakness of early spring and the somberness of late autumn? Perhaps a closer knowledge of our native trees and those which are ours by adoption might disclose new possibilities in color combinations of which they are capable, for no one should be allowed willingly to miss these protecting and beautiful additions to the landscape without a protest.

As to the purely commercial viewpoint of a tree's value, which might appeal more forcibly perhaps to some than the artistic side, a stranger who was motoring by a friend's house last autumn stopped to admire the extraordinary number and beauty of the maple trees and acknowledged he would have no peace of mind until he secured at least one of them. It so happened that the owner had intended to move three of the younger trees to permit the more perfect development of some others, so that the stranger was lucky enough to realize his desire and paid $60 cash for one tree where it stood, in addition to $75 for moving it, thus making the total cost reach $135.

Now, had the first owner of this tree purchased it direct from the nursery when it was twelve feet high it would have cost him a comparatively insignificant sum. Another point not to be forgotten is the coolness it gives in summer and the warmth and protection in winter, while its leaves, if gathered in the autumn, make the very best compost to be obtained. But how amazingly ignorant is the average person about the many species and varieties of trees! To enjoy trees to the full one should know something of their habits and characteristics.

A bureau of efficiency and economy has been formed as an adjunct of the Portland (Ore.) chamber of commerce to have oversight of expenditures and important activities of city, school and county governments. PREMIER OKUMA.

JAPS LIKE OKUMA

Considered Representative Character of Oriental Great Men.

Tokyo.—Should any Japanese be asked by a foreigner to point out a representative character of oriental great men Japan has at the present time he would be inclined to mention the old count Okuma, who is now leading the country during these memorable epochs of the world's war through the most perilous seas of international politics.

His magnanimity toward his personal enemy who had actually attempted on his very life, his liberality in material ways toward those who are indebted or apply to him for assistance, his unhesitating readiness to shoulder any amount of responsibility if by so doing there is the least prospect of promoting the public weal of the nation, the grateful treatment of old friends and early comrades irrespective of the heaven and earth difference probably created in the social position, the high standard of morality he observes in his private life, his sterling integrity and strict probity, never questioned during his long public career of fifty years, all these and others support the assumption that he ought to be classed among true and cultivated gentlemen of the first class standing.

His invariable optimism in the depth of the gloomiest and melancholiest situation in which a mortal can find himself, his infinite resourcefulness in the face of any hardy and intricate problems presented him for solution, his daring intrepidity and excellent nerve and his lofty contempt of death that more than once confronted him, his resolute firmness to carry out amid showers of attacks and reproach, even at the expense of his personal safety and reputation, those plans which he believed to concord with the permanent interest of the nation, the calm serenity of his mind and the tranquil equanimity of his heart and his open hearted simplicity and friendliness with any one who is honored with his interview testify to the undeniable fact that he is equipped with every necessary quality that goes to make up a great hero of oriental pattern.

He is a man who conquers by his personal dignity and his overwhelming sweep-it-allness, not by the ingenuity of his artificial skill or the elaborate device of fine machinations.

As an educationist also he is entitled to claim the first and foremost rank in view of the distinguished services he has tendered to the cause of education in Japan. The University of Waseda under his presidency and other various schools pertaining to it comprise more than 10,000 students, while the graduates might count more than ten times the number. The university, divided into four colleges (literature, law, technics and commerce), practically absorbs the greater portion of the students who do not enter the governmental institution. The Waseda middle school is inferior to no other similar institution, either private or public, in the excellency of the educational service as well as in the quality of the students produced. In the list of those successful applicants for the entrance examination of governmental higher schools the graduates from the Waseda middle school always occupy the most predominant proportion, a fact most strongly appealing to the confidence of the Japanese public.

Count Okuma is also a distinguished educationist in a different sense of the word. He is the great teacher of democracy. Having belonged to the minor Hizen clan by birth, his situation in the Japanese politics has always been somewhat isolated as compared with those potentates who enjoyed the effective support and protection of the influential clan of Satsuma and Choshu that took an active part in bringing about the restoration of the imperial power through the dethronement of the Shogun. It is this very circumstance that made a democrat of him.

ALLOWS CONVICT TO FARM.

Oregon Governor Helps Man to Save Homestead.

Salem, Ore.—Governor James Withycombe granted ninety days' leave of absence to C. O. Bogart, serving a term in the penitentiary for assault with intent to kill, in order that he might plant his spring crop and save, if possible, his homestead in Malheur county from foreclosure proceedings.

Several weeks ago Bogart informed the governor that unless he could be given an opportunity to plant his spring crop his wife and eight children would be without provisions next winter and also unable to meet interest on a mortgage on his homestead. He is serving a term for attempting to kill a man named Mathews, with whom he quarreled over a land right.

ALLOWS PITTSBURGH PARKS FOR "SPOONING"

Superintendent of Police Extends Invitation to Boys and Girls and Married Persons Too.

Pittsburgh.—"I want to extend an invitation to all of Pittsburgh's lovers, and married persons as well, to use the city parks for 'spooning' if they so desire, and, further, any policeman who attempts to interfere will be 'put on the books,' on the ground that he is not humane," announced Superintendent of Police Matthews recently.

"Yes, sir, you can say for me that 'spooning' goes in the parks," continued Superintendent Matthews. "It is in the spring of the year especially that young hearts turn to love affairs, and love leads to marriage and happy homes, so why not let the boys and girls 'spoon'?"

HER SUICIDE EFFORTS STUCK.

New Orleans Girl Didn't Count on a Tarred Ferryboat Deck.

New Orleans.—Miss Annie Hendren, grieving over her mother's recent death, tried to drown herself in the Mississippi. She went aboard a ferryboat and dashed for the edge to take the plunge. But just there the tragedy became a comedy.

The deck had been freshly tarred, and Miss Hendren's feet stuck. She struggled, knocked over a pail of tar, sat down abruptly and stuck some more.

Gallant Captain David W. Garner had seen the girl rush and started for the rescue. A yard from her his own feet got stuck. He fell forward, and his hands stuck.

Rescuers crept cautiously forward while the captain and the would be suicide wrestled, struggled, heaved and finally tore themselves loose. The girl fled from the sticky deck toward safety, not the river.

DRINKING HENS BEAT TEETOTAL SISTERS

Sprayed With Alcohol and Ether, They Waxed Fat and Laid More Eggs.

Philadelphia.—That roosters and hens that soak up ether highballs are better parents than teetotaler chickens was the assertion recently made to the American Philosophical society by Raymond Pearl, biologist at the Maine agricultural experiment station.

Mr. Pearl told of experiments upon seventy chickens, all of a crossbreed between Black Hamburgs and Plymouth Rocks. They were placed in tanks and sprayed with alcohol and ether for an hour each day.

The chickens didn't like either intoxicant when mixed in their water, but became lively in their appreciation and their antics after the spraying.

It was found that the drunken chickens grew much fatter than a number of brothers and sisters which were denied opportunity to dissipate. In a year the alcoholic hens averaged 184 eggs apiece, while their white ribbon sisters averaged only 181. The rum fighting roosters became lazy and quarrelsome, but otherwise appeared in excellent condition.

EXCHANGES HER DOG FOR RAILROAD FARES

Woman Without Enough Money Trades Canine For Two Railway Tickets.

Wichita, Kan.—In the earlier days bartering was the method of exchange. The Indians used wampum, beads and other trinkets to secure things that they desired. All the records of bartering were placed in the discard recently at the Union station, when a woman exchanged a collie dog for two tickets to Fort Worth, Tex.

Mrs. Martha Fenton, an elderly woman, accompanied by her daughter and a collie dog, entered the office of Z. E. Brooks, city passenger agent, and informed him that they wanted to go to Fort Worth, Tex. He told them what it would cost, and they were dismayed. They informed him that it was urgent that they go, but that they did not have sufficient funds to defray their expenses. They were willing, the woman said, to trade the collie dog for the tickets. Mr. Brooks studied the matter for a moment, attempting to think of what use he could put a collie dog. Nothing came to his mind, and he said that he would find a purchaser. Mr. Wright, who was at the office at the time, stated that he would take it. The tickets were purchased, and with a parting pat and sorrowful look they bid goodby to their dog as Mr. Wright led him away.

A Skin Tonic.

Salt is finer for the skin than any other known tonic if properly used. The face should never be washed in salt water when it is not properly clean, for salt is in the nature of an astringent and will contract the pores. It is excellent for enlarged pores, and the solution will act as a veritable stimulant to the whole skin.

National Defense and International Peace

What the Engineers are Doing

THIRTY thousand American engineers are making a card index survey of American industry so that it may be prepared for its vital part in defending the Country, if need comes. The past eighteen months have taught us here in America what lack of industrial preparedness has meant to some of the countries now at war. These nations had the ships and they had the men; but when the hour struck, their factories were not able to furnish the colors with arms and shells and powder. Their factories were not prepared. And our factories are not prepared.

But it is not enough to draw a moral. In the United States five great Engineering Societies — Civil, Mining, Mechanical, Electrical and Chemical — have pledged their services to the Government of the United States, and are already working hand in hand with the Government to prepare industry for the national defense. They receive no pay and will accept no pay. All they seek is opportunity to serve their country, that she may have her industries mobilized for defense.

All elements of the nation's life — the manufacturers, the business men, and the workingmen — should support this patriotic and democratic work of the engineers, and assist them cheerfully when asked. There can be no better national insurance against war.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, representing all advertising interests have offered their free and hearty service to the President of the United States, in close co-operation with these five Engineering Societies, to the end that the Country may know what the Engineers are doing. The President has accepted the offer. The Engineers have welcomed the co-operation.

This advertisement, published without cost to the United States, is the first in a nation-wide series to call the country to the duty of co-operating promptly and fully with the Engineers.

FALL KILLED LOCAL MAN

Patrick Darby Fell Through Elevator Shaft at Woolen Mill Yesterday Afternoon and Was Instantly Killed.

Dr. E. J. Cusack, coroner, conducted an inquest at 1 o'clock this afternoon into the death of Patrick Darby, 62, of 115 W. 1st st., who was killed instantly when he fell three stories down an elevator shaft at the Fulton Woolen Mills late yesterday afternoon.

It is not known how the accident occurred as there was no one near at the time Mr. Darby alighted from the elevator on its upward journey. It is believed that he stepped back into the shaft in the belief that the elevator was there. Workmen on the floors below saw the man falling and gave the alarm. He struck on hard planking at the bottom of the shaft fracturing the skull and bones of the face. It is believed that he struck on his head, and on the left side

Dr. C. L. Fessenden was summoned and arrived soon after the accident. Finding the man dead, the physician summoned the coroner, who ordered the body removed to the undertaking rooms of Young & Hill.

Mr. Darby was a well-known resident of the West Side where he had lived most of his life. He was a stone-mason and was one of the best known fishermen in this section. He had been working in mill No. 6 of the woolen company for several months.

Besides his widow and one daughter, Anna, he is survived by four sisters, Mrs. Michael Fitzgerald. Miss Catherine Darby and Miss Rose Darby, all of this city, and Miss Agnes Darby of Waterloo.

The funeral will be held from his late home Saturday morning at 8:15 and at 9:00 o'clock from the Church of the Immaculate Conception. The Rev. John L. Lindsman will officiate and burial will be made in St. Mary's cemetery.

SIDEWALK RIDERS TO BE ARRESTED

Bicyclists riding on the sidewalks of the city hereafter will be arrested, according to Chief of Police Dyer, and a fine of $10, the usual penalty for this offence imposed.

Accidents are seldom reported of cyclists colliding with pedestrians on sidewalks, yet there are many complaints received of reckless riding by youngsters who do not properly respect the rights of pedestrians

Automobilists will be under better control this year than ever before, it being the intention of Chief Dyer to enforce all traffic regulations, including thed isplay of lights at night. Arrests will follow violations. It is probable that two members of the force will this year be detailed to enforce the regulations as a considerable amount of automobile traffic is expected on the downtown streets when the touring season is under way.

FIDO SHOULD WEAR A NEW TAG

If He Doesn't, and Is Caught, and You Would Return Him to the Fold, Costs Will be Added.

The dog tags for 1916 are now on sale at the office of the city clerk. The dog catcher has been appointed, to begin operations at once. Dogs not tagged after this date will be treated with all due courtesy for a reasonable length of time, and then left to the tender merciesof Mr. Catcher. If the owner of a dorg, or dawg, wants to redeem his hund from the clutches of the master of ceremonies, he will have to pay more than the license sum to regain the pet. The law provides for a fine of not less than $3 nor more than $5 for any person who shall harbor a dog for three consecutive days without a license, the same being considered the owner.

Persons owning small dogs sometimes evade their obligations regarding the license question, and sometimes there are complaints of discrimination.

It is well, therefore, to bear in mind that Mr. Catcher is making his rounds ready to take all dogs not displaying the tag to his place of incarceration.

If your dog is not tagged, do it now. It may be well to have your last year's license with you when calling upon City Clerk Allen for a new tag.

TAXI CO. WOULD MAKE IMPROVEMENTS

The Wilson & Scott Company, operating taxicabs, are negotiating with the O. & W. railroad for a lease on the vacant lot adjoining the depot in Cayuga street. This statement was made by Theodore J. Wilson, a member of the firm, last night, before the Board of Public Works. It is the desire of the company to construct an office building on the site. Mr. Wilson stated. At the present time the firm is using the flaghouse at the station as an office. The firm would have a permit to construct a gasoline tank at the same corner.

Upon the advice of City Attorney Hillick, action on the matter was deferred for several days until the board has had an opportunity to determine whether a pump will interfere with sidewalk traffic and become otherwise a nuisance.

UNPREPARED

Preparedness—it's all very well to talk;
We need it, maybe—guns, and ships and such,
And teaching boys that military walk,
All looking straight ahead. I sort of clutch
My heart sometimes, and wonder if, perhaps
I'll see my little, stalwart, handsome chaps
March off to fight that surely-coming war,
They talk about and are preparing for.

Well—maybe if it came I should be glad.
A mother should be glad her sons can fight,
They say. And yet—perhaps there's something bad
When they're in bed, I'm sometimes sort of scared
At all the hate this war talk sets a-start.
Preparedness? They've never yet prepared
An armor that will shield a mother's heart.

FEWER KANSAS FARMERS.

There Are Not So Many Now as Ten Years Ago.

Abilene, Kan.—Fewer people are engaged in agricultural pursuits in Kansas now than ten years ago, according to J. C. Mohler, secretary of the state board of agriculture.

"In 1895 of those engaged in all occupations 55 per cent were in agriculture," he declared, "and in 1905 50 per cent and in 1915 46 per cent. It is a very discouraging sign in a state like Kansas, where agriculture is the overshadowing industry, that fewer instead of more people are engaging in it."

Some of the serious problems that must be solved in Kansas are those of the home seeker, the ownership of lands, employment of capital, better farming and the improvement of conditions of rural life, Mr. Mohler asserted.

Peacock Describes Keynote of Apostle Paul's Existence

The theme of Evangelist Peacock's sermon last ninght, was, "I am ready." He based the sermon on three utterances of the Apostle Paul, in part as follows:

Romans 1:15, "I am ready to preach the gospel to you also that are in Rome."

Acts 21:13, "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus."

II Timothy 4:6, "For I am ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand."

In each passage of scripture under consideration Paul says: I am ready. I am ready to preach the gospel in Rome. I am ready to be bound in Jerusalem, I am ready to be offered. He was ready to serve. He was ready to suffer. He was ready to sacrifice. During a certain period in the life of Paul, he was not ready, there was a time when he hated Jesus Christ and the people of God. He persecuted the disciples of Jesus Christ and the people of God. He persecuted the disciples of Jesus and used every means in his power to overthrow the work of Jesus and His disciples had been carrying on in the world. He had been going from place to place putting to death men and women and children. During this period he was not ready to do the will of his divine Lord and Master Jesus Christ.

Let us notice the way Paul was led to become a ready man. The first step in his marvelous change was brought about when he began to see. He tells us "I saw in the way." He had a revelation from God. He began to see things differently from what he had ever see them before. Before this time he had been looking at things from a worldly viewpoint. Now he looked upon things from a spiritual viewpoint. His eyes had been opened. He had been permitted to behold the glories of the kingdom of God. It is a blessed thing when men and women begin to see. It is one of theg reatest blessings God could shower upon us. When God opens our eyes to see ourselves as we are.

It is the Same Today

There are many spiritually blind people in the world today. Men and women groping about in spiritual darkness. Paul was spiritually blind until Jesus Christ revealed himself to him on his way to Damascus. After that time Paul could see. He could see the mistakes he had been making previous to that time. It is a difficult task to arouse men and women from sin, so long as they are blind to the love of God and the self sacrificing spirit of Jesus Christ. But the moment an individual begins to see the folly of sin and wickedness and the curse it will bring upon the immortal soul that very moment he is ready to come to God for light. And the very first thing a man gets when he is returning to God is the eye to see himself and to see the Savior. The staring point is the light of the Son of God. And the second step or the second thing is the ear to hear. Paul first saw the light and then he heard the voice. He heard Jesus, the risen exalted Savior speaking to him and asking him to become a follower of Him.

After Paul saw the light and heard the voice he was a changed man. He was changed from a servant of Satan to a servant of God. Now God has the same power today. If men and women will look and listen they will be changed. Paul heard the voice and surrendered. He gave up everything that would keep him from becoming the child of the living God. He was a man having a powerful intellect with all the intellectual culture that the day afforded. He had been at college. He had sat at the feet of Gamaliel. He was an intellectual giant but that wonderful intellect of his was laid at the feet of Jesus, and he was able to say: "Take my intellect and use every power as thou shalt choose."

Now it is not true that the greatest intellects in the world have been opposed to the teachings of God's word. The men who have done most to advance science, art and literature are men who have believed in the Bible, that blessed book of God and in the Savior whom that book reveals. And this is the reason for their success because they are believers in God and His son.

One time Robt. Ingersoll was exploding his pet theory on a railroad train. He denounced the Christian people and the word of God, and said Christianity had never done anything for the world. He turned to a man in the seat behind him and said: "You know the whole scheme of Christianity is false and that Christianity never did anything for the world." The man not wishing to enter into an argument with him remained silent. Ingersoll grew very eloquent thinking the man was frightened and could not answer him. Suddenly the train stopped and an old lady sitting across the aisle said: "I can tell you something Christianity has done for the world. It kept Robert Ingersoll from becoming governor of Illinois." The truth was put so plainly to him he could not deny it and he realized that Christianity had a power too strong for the unbeliever to overcome.

David Livingstone had reached a point where he could say with Paul. I am ready to serve, to suffer and to sacrifice. And the reason he was able to say this was because he had heard the voice and saw the light and had been filled with the spirit of God.

The Apostle's Bravery

At one time Paginini, the great violinist wanted to make an impression upon a crowd in Paris. Working the strings of his violin with his thrumb he broke one. Then there was tremendous disappointment over the vast audience. In the same way he broke a seconnd and a third and while the crowd rebelled against him he stepped to the front and said "Ladies and gentleman, one string and Paginini." Wonderful music came from that one string. One string and Paginini was able to hold that vast multitude of people spell bound as it were. One soul and God almighty will be able to shake the very foundations of this city. There is a mighty power and influence in the individual who is willing to surrender himself completely to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now the reason Paul was willing to preach the gospel at Rome was because he was not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Hear his own words: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This was the reason he was ready for service. He felt he owed it to others to tell them of Jesus and the Kingdom of God. Now God had to punish Paul severely before he reached this point and some times God is compelled to deal very firmly with men and women before they are willing to say I am ready to serve.

The daughter of an English Nobleman had embraced the truth as it is in Jesus. He father, an unbeliever was almost distracted at the event and by threats and temptations to extravagance in dress, by reading, by traveling in foreign countries and to places of fashionable resort sought to divert her mind from spiritual things. Failing in these he resolved upon one final desperate effort by which his end should be gained or his daughter's prospects in this life ruined. He invited a large number of the nobility to his house and arranged that during the festivities, the daughters of different noblemen should entertain with singing and music. At the call of the company they performed their parts with great applause. At length the crisis came and the young Christian lady was announced. In a moment all were in silent suspense, eager to see what might follow. Without hesitation the young lady arose and with calm and dignified composure took her place at the instrument. After a moment spent in silent prayer, she ran her fingers over the keys and then with sweetness and solemnity sang the solemn words:

"No room for mirth or trifling here, for worldly hope or worldly fear. If now the judge is at the door and all mankind must stand before the inexerable throne. Nothing is worth a thought beneath, but how I might escape the death that never dies. How make my own selection sure, and when I fail on earth, secure a mansion in the skies."

The minstrel ceased. Christianity had triumphed. The daughter was saved. The father wept aloud for the salvation of his soul and being converted he consecrated his wealth to the cause of Christ, and was ready to serve.

Be Ready to Deny

Now there are people in the world like that today and I think the words of Jesus to Nicodemus will apply to them: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Our outward pretense will not save us. We must be changed into the likeness of the Lord Jesus Christ and he will be willing to serve for the glory of the kingdom of God. Paul was not only willing to be bound, but he was willing to die if necessary in order that God might be glorified. We must suffer if we are going to do anything for the Kingdom of Jesus. We must suffer the taunts and sneers of the world. We must deny ourselves everything in order that God might be glorified. Paul was as good as his word he suffered hunger, persecution, shipwreck, was inp-rison, was in perils on land and on the sea for the Kingdom of God. It is an easy matter for people to be Christians today. They make a profession of their faith and are not called upon to suffer for it. We should be so filled with the spirit of God that we would be willing to give up friends and neighbors, if necessary, for the glory of God. Paul was ready for sacrifice He said, For I am now ready to be offered and the time of departure is at hand. Paul was one of a great multitude who was called upon to give up their lives for the sake of Jesus.

The old Bible has not lost in power. They may rail at it, they may revile it but it stands as an impregnable rock, and it has the power to save men. This was the secret of his remarkable success. He sowed the word of God and God fulfilled His promise. And this is what God wants us to do today' Go forward and sow His word among the people and he will bring the harvest. Will we do it? Will we do it?

THE COLONEL IS SAVED

The colonel is going to war, of course, and "my four sons will go and one and perhaps both of my sons-in-law;" but the rest of it is a sad tale, my mates. Right off the bat the colonel is going to "die in thousands of fever and dysentery and lung troubles in the camps." What is just as bad, the colonel is going to "be butchered needlessly in battle." We do not understand why, but apparently it is because "twenty-one months have passed since the great war began" and the United States has not yet mobilized.

The tears course down our furrowed checks when we think of this wanton sacrifice of the colonel, and we have practically decided not to let him or any of the Roosevelts go to war. We cannot spare them. They are too precious. So we have decided to keep them at home to repel William Randolph Hearst's Japanese invasion. That can be done with a typewriter, and the colonel is one of the handiest men that ever swung a typewriter into action.

Having stopped this holocaust of Roosevelts, we are sure that everything will be all right again at Oyster Bay. When the war begins, if it ever begins, the colonel can hang out his sign "Business as Usual," and catch all editions of the afternoon papers, with a specially signed statement for the morning papers. The colonel is saved.—N. Y. World.

A BUSY COUNTESS

War Work Occupies Another Beautiful Woman.

POPULAR IN DUAL EMPIRE.

Like So Many of Her European Sisters, This Fair Austrian Is Interested In Relief—London Women of Title Going In For Charity Theatricals.

In every capital in Europe women of title and social prestige are busy with war relief. Hospital ships and supplies, ambulances, workshops and actual nursing of sick soldiers are only a few of their occupations.

London society women have recently taken up charity theatricals, the Countess of Essex (nee Miss Adele Grant of New York) recently having given an extremely successful charity matinee at the Gaiety theater, with professionals and society amateurs indiscriminately mixed up. Recently Mrs. Edith Wharton, the American novelist, was decorated by the French government for her valuable relief work. Last winter the German kaiser decorated Mrs. Gerard, wife of the American ambassador, for the help given families of soldiers.

Like all the other feminine members of the Austro-Hungarian nobility, the Countess von Szapary is actively engaged in war relief work. She is connected with some of the most prominent families in the dual empire.

DON'TS FOR BUYERS.

Some Restrictions Valuable For Those on Shopping Bent.

Don't buy a suit with a plaited skirt unless you have an electric iron and lots of time or else a good maid.

Don't buy one that is a bit too small, for the present style coat, with its flaring hem, looks especially bad in a size too small.

Don't, if you're over five feet six, get up and down stripes.

Don't buy a tan suit if you are sallow. Some of the tan shades are again in fashion, and they are a pitfall for the unwary sallow woman.

Don't buy a suit trimmed with a light color if you must wear it constantly, for nothing looks worse than soiled trimming.

Don't, if the family Bible has you down for over forty—you needn't admit it—get a suit because the saleswoman tells you it's girlish. Don't be a flapper at forty.

Don't, if you're under five feet three, get round about trimming.

Don't get a jacket that has sleeves too short or too long, for misfit sleeves spoil what may otherwise be a very attractive jacket.

Baked Shad Roe.

Parboil the roe from a large shad for one minute, drain, place in a baking pan, spread with one large tablespoonful of butter, sprinkle with pepper, salt and a dash of cayenne, pour in one cupful of cream, bake covered for twenty minutes, then remove the cover, bake ten minutes longer and transfer to a heated platter. Beat the yolks of three eggs with one cupful of cream, add the strained sauce from the pan, cook and stir until slightly browned, place around the roe and garnish with watercress and crisped bacon.

Kitchen Kinks.

Never allow fresh meat to remain in paper, for it absorbs the juices.

Always allow water to run from the kitchen tap in the morning until all that has been in the pipes overnight has run out.

Never allow opened fruits or vegtables to stand in the tin can.

Never stir anything in tin if avoidable or at least use a wooden spoon.

Never keep vinegar or yeast in stone crocks or jugs, since the acid attacks the glazing.

HOW TO SECURE A GOOD LAWN, AND KEEP IT.—All lawns may be improved if there is a reasonably good turf, as it is possible to better it materially by reseeding, fertilizing and watering. In the spring many bare spots will be in evidence, and if the spots are small they can be reseeded. If they are large it is usually advisable to spade them up and reseed, doing the work early in the spring. If the grass is thin over the entire lawn the work should be started early in the spring, while the soil is loose and in condition to permit the seed to be covered with little difficulty. The whole lawn should be raked with an iron rake and seeded and rolled as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry.

The care of the lawn after it is established is important. Liberal fertilizing should be given, and one of the best fertilizers is nitrate of soda. Five pounds of nitrate of soda is sufficient for 1,000 square feet of lawn, applying this with a watering pot, then watering thoroughly with the hose. Bonemeal is one of the best commercial fertilizers to use on lawns, eight pounds being sufficient for 1,000 square feet. Any fertilizer used should be applied early in the spring, when the grass begins to grow. Bonemeal can be applied every month during the growing season excepting July and August. Prepared sheep and stable manure is also beneficial. Slacked lime can be applied with beneficial results late in the fall.

If a good lawn is wanted buy the best lawn grass seed to be had, well cleaned and free from weeds. Much of the lawn grass seed is from 25 to 50 per cent weed seed. If weeds are wanted do not bother to plant seeds; the weeds will grow without a special invitation.

DAHLIAS FROM SEED.

How They Can Be Started and Transplanted.

For several years I have had grand success raising dahlias from seed, starting them in a box or pan in the house as soon as April 1 and transplanting them in the garden as soon as the ground is warm enough—usually about the last of May, at which time they will have four or six leaves. From a packet of mixed seeds I have had as many as eight different colors, ranging from snowy white to darkest crimson, besides some beautifully striped and variegated. They were the admiration of all beholders, says a writer in Farm and Home.

Should there be a few single ones (as there probably will be) they are by no means to be despised, as they are nice for cut flowers. Set them out along the side of the house or each side of the door, where you can see them as you go about your daily vocations, and you will be more than satisfied with the results. Water them with the water from the weekly wash, as they are greatly benefited by frequent waterings in dry weather. Even if they are not a joy "forever," they will surely give much pleasure through the long hot days of summer.

How to Massage the Scalp Daily Without Making an Event of It.

Press the finger tips (fingers close together) to the scalp and with a gentle pressure rub the scalp in a circular manner, causing it to move. The object is to loosen it as much as possible and bring a warm glow to it by causing the blood to flow to the surface.

When this is accomplished move the fingers to another spot, and in this way go over the whole scalp. If the hair is very dry a very small amount of vaseline may be rubbed into the fingers and applied to the scalp only, as any grease will cause the hair to lie flat if applied to the hair itself.

Any tonic which is chosen should be applied with massage, as most of the benefit is obtained by the massage.

How to Make the Beds So That Slumber Really Refreshes.

To make up a bed so that it will be smooth tuck the clothes in, one piece at a time, at the sides, and complete the work all but tucking the clothes in at the foot. Now draw the clothes down, one piece at a time, as taut as possible and tuck them in at the foot. The bed will be far nicer looking than would be otherwise possible. If the bed is of iron or brass, which does not permit of tucking in the coverlet, tuck in the other clothes as directed, placing the coverlet over all.

How to Do the Family Mending In the Easiest Way.

To do quick, neat and strong mending take presser foot off sewing machine, stretch hole in material over embroidery hoop, hole as near to center as possible; insert under needle, cloth side down; set down the part that holds presser foot; sew back and forth slowly without letting go of hoop. Always sew further than tear each way. After filling in lengthwise of tear turn hoop and sew across. Use medium size stitch.

A Conquest In Ten Days

By ALAN HINSDALE

"Alec, I'm engaged."

"The deuce you are!"

"Yes, I became engaged the day before yesterday."

"And the reaction has set in?"

"What reaction?"

"Why, I was engaged once myself. For awhile I was in heaven. Then I began to think of what I'd done, and I was in the other place."

"That's me exactly."

"Can't you get out of it?"

"How?"

"I made the girl mad, and she shook me."

"Good plan. I'll try it on."

Alec Broadhead didn't see his friend, Andy Pelham, for a week. When they met again Pelham wore a shamefaced look.

"Well?" queried Alec.

"I tried your plan and succeeded admirably, but I couldn't stand the racket. I went back to her and told her that if she wouldn't forgive me I'd jump in the river."

"More fool you."

"Oh, you'd have done the same thing if you'd have been really in love."

"Not on your life."

Not long after Andy had been married Alec received a note from him saying that he must spend some time away from home on business and would Alec look out for his wife evenings during his absence. She would be lonely between 8 and 10 p. m. Alec replied that he supposed he would have to accommodate him.

When Mr. Broadhead called on Mrs. Pelham he found her sitting in a cozy room beside a light with a pink shade doing some fancy work. She was a pretty woman and received him with a pleasant smile. It occurred to him that perhaps his friend in marrying had not been such a fool after all. He passed a very pleasant evening and at 10 o'clock bade the lady adieu and went to his club.

Mrs. Pelham had told him to come every evening he chose during her husband's absence, but on no account to feel compelled to come. He had intended to remain away the second evening and after dining at his club tried to compose himself to spending the evening there. The effort was a failure. At ten minutes after 8 he rang the Pelham doorbell. There sat the lady beside the pink light plying her needle, and the scene was even more attractive than the evening before.

"How good of you," said the hostess, "to deprive yourself of all your bachelor pleasures to come to this dull house to oblige your friend! You men stand by one another splendidly. Women won't sacrifice themselves for a chum as men do."

"Um!" was the laconic reply.

It is quite likely that Alec Broadhead could have visited Mrs. Pelham possibly for years without disgracing himself by falling in love with his friend's wife had she behaved with the circumspection required of a married woman. But she did not. Alec by a great effort succeeded in cutting out the third evening, remaining away from her. When he called on the fourth she pouted. It isn't much to say she pouted, but it expressed a great deal to Alec. At any rate it influenced him when he left her at 11 o'clock, she giving him her hand at parting to hold it just a little bit longer than was advisable under the circumstances.

He called the very next evening and found her on a lounge covered with a silken quilt, evidently indisposed.

"I'm so glad you have come," she said, pressing the hand he gave her and looking up at him tenderly. "I'm not feeling well and would not like to be alone."

Alec's countenance was full of sympathy, and his eyes reflected the tenderness with which she had favored him. He smoothed her pillow half a dozen times during the evening, took her hand for the purpose of feeling her pulse and otherwise played the attentive nurse. Though it would seem that, invalided, she should have retired early, Alec did not leave her till the clock struck 12.

Ten days—or, rather, ten evenings—of this sort of thing may seem a short time for a man's sense of honor to his friend to be undermined, but it was enough for the purpose in this case. Alec was one evening bending down over the lady in the languishing fashion of a lover when the door was suddenly thrown open, and Andy Pelham, followed by a lady, stepped into the room.

"Well, I like that!" he said to Alec. "I leave my chum to keep my wife from being lonely, and what does he do"—

"Now, Andy," said the lady who had entered with him, "this has gone far enough. Mr. Broadhead, I'm Mrs. Pelham. This young lady is my friend Miss"—

"Madge Meriweather," interrupted Andy, "the worst flirt in America. We've put up a job on you, old man. I told these ladies how you felt about women, and she bet she could bring you down within ten days. I haven't been away at all, but upstairs every evening that you've been here spooning with Madge."

The expression on Alec's face was a study. There were shame, relief and the dawn of happiness."

"All I have to say," he finally remarked, "is that Miss Meriweather has won the bet."

This was Miss Meriweather's last conquest. She married Alec Broadhead.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Just A Matter of Comfortable Simplicity.

The time for this charming kimono is morning, place, the boudoir. It is fashioned from rice cloth trimmed with ribbon.

The style secret of this long Japanese kimono is its simplicity. It is fashioned of rice cloth, having the front and back cut in one. The sleeves are long and flowing. Among the latest designs in robes d'intimes, as these models are called, there is nothing that is more restful and dainty.

In medium size the kimono requires 4¾ yards 36-inch material, with 1⅞ yards constrasting material 18 or more inches wide for the trimming. If ribbon is used—and it may be with such a good effect—3⅝ yards will be needed.

A casual glance at the cutting guide will convince one of the simplicity of this part of the work. Section A is so laid on the material that the part marked by triple "TTT" perforations rests on the lengthwise fold, while the other section rests on a lengthwise thread. The piecing is placed along the selvage edge. Place the sleeve over a lengthwise thread as illustrated.

But a few hours are required for the making. Close the underarm seam as notched from large "O" perforation to lower edge. Close back seam of band (indicated by small "o" perforation), sew to neck edge of back, and to front, notches and center-backs even: fold band through center, fell remaining edge over seam.

To make the sleeve, close the seams as notched, leaving seam having 3 notches free between the 2 small "o" perforations. Sew in armhole as notched. Turn hem in sleeve on small "o" perforations and bring the 2 single large "O" perforations at hem in sleeves together and tack.

The straight belt illustrated is the smartest idea in kimono waist finishings.

HER SPRING FROCK.

Here Is a Hint For the Spring Bridesmaid's Attire.

This delightful frock may be put up in silk net, voile or organdie. Over a ruffled petticoat foundation is a pannlered drape, the pointed ends of which have shadow lace appliques. The simple bodice is chiefly of this lace, as are the girdle and shoulder straps. The girlishness of this design is fetching to a degree.

SO STATUESQUE.

Exactly.

"Have you dyed your hair black?"

"That isn't a fair question."—Baltimore American.

Ragged Sailors.

Materials.—Two cupfuls flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half cupful sugar, an egg, one-half teaspoonful salt, three tablespoonfuls butter, one-half cupful chopped nuts, two-thirds cupful milk.

Directions.—Sift the flour, salt and baking powder, rub the butter in; then add sugar and nuts. Mix to a soft dough with the egg and milk, roll out thin and sprinkle with sugar. Roll up with the sugar inside, cut in slices three-quarters of an inch thick, place on a greased baking tin, brush over with beaten egg and bake about fifteen minutes.

NEW WINDOW TREATMENT.

Suggestions For Renewing Your Curtains After Housecleaning.

New window treatment gives opportunity to make the most of cretonne—that most charming drapery stuff for summer rooms. There are long side curtains from rod to sill, made of flowered cretonne lined with tinted sateen in the usual manner. These hang from a brass rod, which, instead of going straight across the window, bulges up in a curve at the center, where the valance is shirred over it. This valance is very full and is in two portions, each section six inches deep at the center of the window and ten inches deep at the outer side, where it meets the side curtain. Cords are run through the lower edges of the section and left unfastened, to be pulled up when the valance is adjusted.

When curtains and valance have been shifted to the pole and the pole set in place over the window, the outer lower corners of the valance are tacked to the side curtains under rosettes of the cretonne. The edges at the center, where the valance is divided, and is only six inches deep, are tacked together. Next the cords are drawn up toward the center, tied and tucked out of sight. This draws up the sloping edges of the valance in puckered effect, and the drawn up valance brings forward the side curtain at the point of the rosette. The whole effect is dainty and graceful and suggestive of a French boudoir. Shades of the cretonne instead of ordinary window shades will complete a charming window treatment.

For the Chinese room or any other room where black and white is desirable for background effects, there is a new window curtain material of woven black and white checks in very open effect, like coarse net. Graduated black stripes in clusters cross the fabric, and smart looking curtains are arranged so that the black striping comes directly across valance and side curtains about six inches from the top of the window.

To Be Well Groomed.

The woman who is particular about her home is not always the best dressed, and it often happens that a woman whose home is untidy looks stunning in her street clothes. The points in dress that most women overlook are veilings, footwear, gloves, hats and handkerchiefs.

Be sure that your glove is properly proportioned, and when you decide on a well fitting style buy no other. Dust a little powder into your glove before you wear it, and smooth all the seams straight. Have the lines on the backs properly over the center of the hands and the fingers in the tips of the glove.

Keep your hats in their boxes until you wish to use them, and return them at once when you take them off. Always brush them, especially if they are made of black velvet or a dark material that shows the dust. Never carry a soiled or even crumpled handkerchief. It is only a little thing, but it is the little things that help toward complete beauty.

AN EMBROIDERED BLOUSE.

It Is Said That Handwork Lingerie Is Rivaling Crape.

For some time hand embroidered blouses were kept under cover. It seemed a shame, too, for the hand work on a blouse always showed to good advantage. However, there is no longer any need to lament about the matter, for once more women are privileged to wear blouses which show the results of their labor in the embroidery field. But the embroidery is applied in a different manner. Instead of decorating the front of the blouse in plastron effect, dainty little flowers hang in garlands from the shoulder line. The shoulders are outlined with a band of embroidery. One blouse showing this treatment was embroidered in blue, pink and green. It opened in the front, and the line of closing was finished with featherstitching and a few tiny white buttons embroidered in green also.

The application of the embroidery on the sleeves was quite a variation. A separate cuff finished each sleeve and was edged with green featherstitching, but where the sleeve joined the cuff garlands of the flowers embroidered in the delicate colors suggested above were embroidered up the sleeve for a space of four inches.

A turnover collar of the blouse material was edged with featherstitching, and a tiny spray of flowers was embroidered in each point in front.

The colors of embroidery cotton can be changed to suit the wearer's taste.

BATH SUITS.

Tips About the Style and Material of Your Diving Duds.

Whether you elect to wear bloomers or tights with your swimming suit this summer, whether you favor a kerchief knotted back of each ear or a cap with a shady brim, whether you like to go down into the sea stocking footed or equipped with bathing shoes, one thing you must have, and that is a pocket in your bathing dress. Two pockets will be smarter, and there may be three or even four—two on the skirt for the hands to be thrust into as you walk up the beach and two in the waist for the safe keeping of your bath house key and handkerchief. A sopping wet handkerchief is better than none at all—as every bather knows—after a wave has gone over one's head, and after a plunge under water your handkerchief will be very handy buttoned securely into a breast pocket on your waist.

Palm Beach bathing suits, which, of course, foretell what all other bathing suits are going to be later on, are stunning affairs. Most of them are of silk, and many are of silk jersey. One sees also a great number of pussy willow bathing suits. This soft, beautiful taffeta silk has proved itself in salt water. A pussy willow bathing suit worn almost every day last summer in the heavy surf on the south of Long Island shore came home in September without a tear or even a worn spot or a change in color.

Bathing suits of the most fashionable sort now are in two sections, a very short tunic, loosely belted or sashed below the waist line, and knickers or close bathing breeches to the knee. One cannot call them tights—they are rather like the close knee breeches small boys wear, and sometimes they are slashed up the outer side for a few inches and laced together with cord or silk braid.

CENSORS CO-ED GOWNS.

Some University Girls Were Sent Back to Change Dance Attire.

Bloomington, Ind.—The Indiana university authorities have established a censorship of clothes worn by the "coeds."

The censorship is in charge of Miss Ruby E. C. Mason, dean of women, who is attending all dances and inspecting the frocks and gowns. If the evening gowns of the girls do not conform to regulations as to length and style the wearers are sent back to their rooms for a change of attire. This has happened to several young women recently.

The censorship is established because of the loyalty of the Indiana "co-eds" to the prevailing styles, especially in dancing frocks. The frocks have been cut so low from the chin and so high from the ground that they have been shocking to some, the university authorities say, all during the winter.

An Eye For Beauty.

"Has he a sense of fairness?"

"Goodness, yes! He can tell them a block away."—Michigan Gargoyle.

Fillet of Bass, General Joffre.

Remove the fillets from a good sized bass, place in a well buttered saucepan and add some minced shallots and minced fresh mushrooms; poach in white wine. When done place them on a plate and thicken the sauce with some kneaded good butter, so that it will remain light. Season with salt, pepper and minced chives. Garnish with small bouquets of shrimps.

Sleepy Time Story About an Extremely Ugly Looking Fly.

DEVIL'S DARNING NEEDLE.

Many Evil Deeds Attributed to This Insect Are Without Foundation—Interesting Items For Little Folk—Puzzles to Solve.

Uncle Ben was ready with a story when bedtime came around. He told about THE DRAGON FLY.

Don't be afraid of this wicked looking insect, no matter how many fierce and wild stories you have heard told about him. He isn't half so wicked as he looks. And as for his voracious habits, the only things he eats are mosquitoes and flies and gnats, not to mention many other pests you would like the world rid of. He's called properly the dragon fly.

Maybe you know him better as the devil's darning needle. Perhaps you've been told when you were a bad boy or girl that he would get in your hair and sew your ears shut, or maybe you've been calling him snake feeder. He gets this name probably because the female dragon fly when she lays her eggs glides down on top of the stream or lake and drops them in the water, as if she were feeding water snakes.

These eggs stick fast to water plants until the larvae hatch, crawl out of the water, split up the back, and, behold—other dragon flies!

It will take more time and patience than the amateur bug collector possesses to get acquainted with the whole dragon fly family. There are something like 2,200 specimens, so authorities tell us, and 300 of these fly around in North America.

What the hawks and eagles are to birds the dragon flies are to mosquitoes and flies. Imprison a dragon fly in a room and the flies and mosquitoes will disappear. So, you see, he isn't such a bad bug after all.

A Fur Clad Boy.

The young lad here pictured is a woodcraft boy, which means that he has much knowledge of the lore of field and forest. The costume he wears is trimmed with muskrat, skunk and other furs caught by himself. He is a shrewd trapper and has learned the ways of beast and bird, and he is also an expert on trees, plants and flowers. He lives in a suburb of New York city, and all his furs were caught within twenty-five miles of the big city.

WOODCRAFT BOY IN COSTUME.

Nero a Shrewd Dog.

My Nero is very useful. He is sometimes sent on errands and brings parcels from the shops very nicely. He goes alone to the market, writes a little girl in the Iowa Homestead.

But Nero has an enemy, a fierce bulldog that lives on the road to the market. Nero is stronger than the bulldog, but the sly rascal keeps out of sight except when Nero has a basket in his mouth; then he runs at him, and Nero is too faithful to drop his burden, so he has to scamper.

One day the scamp worried Nero all the way home. He came in much excited. I set the basket on the table and took out the meat. Then Nero leaped up, seized the basket with his teeth and ran out of the house. Nero went straight to the house where the ugly dog lives. The dog saw the basket and thought he had a good chance to bite Nero, so out he rushed. What then? Why, Nero dropped the basket in a hurry, and he gave that wicked dog such a whipping that he never forgot it.

Brave Fido.

"Why, Fido, I'm surprised to see
You wear a muzzle too!
What foolish people they must be
Who are afraid of you!"

Thus cried the dancing bear one day
When he had chanced to meet
A little dog that came his way
Along the village street.

But Fido growled at Mr. Bear
And glared into his eye,
And fiercer still became his glare
When thus he made reply:

"They muzzle me, I'd have you know,
To save the likes of you!
Each day, were I not muzzled so,
I'd eat a bear or two!"

BRAN COOKIES.—Mix three cupfuls of bran, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, two-thirds cupful of milk, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, two eggs, two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and chopped raisins if desired. Cream the butter and sugar together, add the well beaten eggs, then the milk gradually. Mix baking powder with bran and flour and add gradually to the mixture. If the dough cannot be handled add a little more flour. Roll out thin, cut and bake in quick oven from seven to ten minutes.

Chocolate Blancmange.—One quart of milk, five tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, two squares of baker's chocolate, unsweetened; one teaspoonful of vanilla and a pinch of salt. Put milk, chocolate and sugar on to boil; mix the cornstarch with a little milk and make very smooth. When the milk is boiling put in the cornstarch, slowly stirring all the time; then boil five minutes. Stir constantly or it will become lumpy. Add the vanilla when you remove the mixture from the stove.

Maple Shortcake.—Mix and sift two cupfuls of flour and a level tablespoonful of baking powder. Rub in one-half cupful of shortening (butter is best) and mix to a soft dough with sweet milk. Spread the mixture evenly over two pie plates, brush with melted butter and bake in a quick oven. Put together like layer cake.

Maple Cream Filling.—Cook three-quarters of a cupful of maple sirup and a tablespoonful of butter until it spins a thread, then pour gradually into the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. When the mixture is smooth add one-half cupful of whipped cream and a few drops of vanilla. Let the cakes cool a little before using the filling.

French Crullers.—Put one cupful of boiling water, two level tablespoonfuls of sugar, a grating of orange rind and one-quarter of a cupful of butter over the fire; when boiling sift in one cupful of sifted pastry flour and stir and cook to a smooth ball of paste; turn into an earthen dish or bowl and beat in one after another three eggs. Beat the mixture smooth between each addition of an egg. Drop from a tablespoon in as smooth shape as possible into hot fat; turn often and cook until well puffed up and browned.

TODAY'S FASHION NOTE

Some of the best dressmakers of Paris interpret youth in terms of the blouse. They design it so that it can be reproduced in any seasonable material and accompany it with a skirt that is distinctive for its simplicity. A handsome braid, asserting itself above the collar, sleeves, waistline and hem of skirt leaves nothing to be desired, decoratively speaking. Six yards 40-inch material and 8 yards 4-inch braid are required fo rthis design.

Pictorial Review Blouse, No. 6603. Sizes, 15 to 20 years. Price 15 cents. Skirt No. 6438. Sizes, 14 to 20 years. Price, 15 cents.

exercises used in their daily routine, and the pupils of the Erie street school were interesting in a "Fairy Revel." The Grammar Clowns by the Walradt street pupils provoked a lot of laughter, and the Tom Thumb Wedding by the pupils of Academy street school was heartily enjoyed. Robert Jennings, as groom, and Rose Tramblay, as bride, were most interesting, and took their parts unusually well.

The Folk Dancing by the pupils of Philips street school and the Kinkey Koon Minstrels by the pupils of Oak street school were cleverly given.

The Button, a funny little skit, prepared under the direction of Mrs. Lora White Kesler, was well received. Nelson Hopkins as Dr. Bingen created a lot of fun, and was ably assisted by Mildred Shattuck in the role as his wife. John Reynolds as Dr. Blatt, and Harriet Nicholas as the cousin also displayed careful training.

Tonight the program will be repeated and as the weather conditions, in spite of a packed theatre giving other evidence, kept some people from attending it is probable no one in Fulton will miss the big show. The proceeds will be divided between the Library and the purchase of Victrolas for the schools.

PERSIA'S FIRST RAILWAY LINE

In a country like the United States, where mechanical devices play such an important part in the lives of the people, it is hard to realize that the use of such conveniences is still relatively limited. It is something of a shock to be reminded of the primitive state of the East by the announcement that the first railroad ever built in Persia has just been completed by the Russians. The opening of the road was witnessed by Henry D. Baker, American attache of the Department of Commerce in Petrograd. According to a correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, this achievement of the Russians may be the first of several steps to be taken in modernizing the ancient and sleepy nation of ePrsia.

The new road runs from Tabriz, the commercial center of Persia, to the Russian frontiers, where connection is made with Russian railway lines. The distance covered is about ninety-three miles. Not the least interesting feature of the first trip over the rails was the congregating, in rural districts along the way, of spectators who had never before seen a railroad train. At present no attempt is being made by the Russian engineers to attain high speeds, and it took the first train twelve hours to cover the ninety-three miles. While the new Persian railroad will no doubt in the future aid the commercial development of that country, it will until the close of hostilities be used for military purposes.

Tabriz is a city well known to those who are familiar with Oriental commerce. It is the largest commercial city bof Persia and is the principal carpet market of the world. There are in Tabriz miles of arcaded streets holding bazars where there is extensive traffic in carpets, cotton, dried fruits and other valuable commodities. There is a population of about 200,000.

Should the Russians as a result of the war obtain permanent possession of Persia and Armenia, the commercial development of those parts of the world would be likely to proceed with great rapidity. It is true enough that Russia, has not yet made the most of her original territory, but this is partly because of the difficulty she has had in establishing satisfactory channels of communication with other nations. If at the conclusion of hostilities Russia finds herself on the winning side, she is certain to demand a marked improvement in these conditions, as compensation for her many sacrifices.—Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

For some minutes he prevented Mr. Augustine Birrell from making a personal statement and gave notice that he would move a resolution directing attention to the shooting of "innocent men by this Hunnish government."

Mr. Birrell, when heg ot a hearing, said he would have and oportunity as a private member of taking part in the debate on the Irish rising.

GERMAN REPLY READY TONIGHT

Berlin—Mr. James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador, admits he had many conferences with the Kaiser during his stay at field headquarters in which all phases of the submarine issue were discussed. He expects events now to develop quickly. He will receive the German note tomorrow (Thursday) night upon the arrival in Berlin of Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, who left headquarters this afternoon. Thef eeling in the American colony today was more hopeful.

The German reply to the American note will not decide whether a breach will come between the United States and Germany, according to the Koelnische Volkszeitung. The decision, this newspaper says, will rest entirely with President Wilson, depending upon the answer he is expected to make to the German note.

The Volkszeitung asserts the basic principles of the German communication have been decided upon and that the question now is whether President Wilson will accept Germany's proposals as satisfactory or whether he desires "war at any price."

WE'RE AFRAID TO TRUST GOD

wholly and entirely to God, and be willing to let God use us in the way He sees fit. It would be ab lessed thing if every individual in this world could make that beautiful poem of Miss Havergals their own:

"Take my life and let it be,
Consecrated Lord to thee.
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise.
Take my hands and let them move,
At the impulse of thy love.
Take my foot and let them be,
Swift and beautiful for thee.
Take my voice and let me sing,
Always only for my King.
Take my lips and let them be,
Filled with messages from thee.
Take my silver and my gold;
Not a mite would I withhold.
Take my intellect, and use
Every power as thou shalt choose.
Take my will and make it Thine,
It shall be no longer mine.
Take my heart; it is Thine own;
It shall be thy Royal Throne.
Take my love; my Lord, I pour,
At Thy feet it's treasure store.
Take myself, and I will be,
Ever only all for Thee."

The trouble with a great majority of people is this, they are not willing to let God use them in His service. They are unwilling to make sacrifices for the one who has done so much for them. With their talents and energy they will push the business of the world, but when it comes to the work of God they are like the old man seated under the shade tree. A traveler finding him seated under a shade tree, thep icture of ease and contentment, said: "Well how are the times?" "Well," said the old man, "pretty tolerable, pretty tolerable. I had some trees to cut down, but a cyclone came along and felled th m and saved me the work." "Good," said the traveler. "Then the lighting struck the brush piles and burned them up and saved me the trouble, and now I am just waiting for an earthquake to come along and shake these potatoes out of the ground."

Now, my friends, that is an excellent picture of many people in the service of God. They are waiting for some person or something to come along and do the work they ought to do in the Kingdom of Jesus Christ, in place of using the talents God has given to them. The thing for us to do is to make use of the talent we have in our hand, and God will give us the blessing. If we can speak, we should speak. If we can sing, we should sing. If we can pray, we should pray. If we can work, we should be willing to work. We should be willing to do everything in our power to make the work of the Lord Jesus Christ a success. Let us consecrate everything we have to the service of God and be able to say: "Take myself and I will be ever only all for Thee."

GERMAN CRAFT SANK SUSSEX, ADMITS THE OUTLINE OF NOTE

The International News Service furnishes The Evening Times with the following interpretation of the note from the German Government:

"The German Government has arrived, by investigation of the facts, at the conclusion that, as to the case of the Sussex, there was an oversight on the part of the commander of the submarine. The Government is ready to give satisfaction and compensation.

"The commanders of the submarinesalways have had, and still have, an order NOT TO ATTACK ANY UNARMED VESSEL WITHOUT WARNING. In cases like that of the Arabic and others, where a mistake by the commander of the submarine in question occurred, the German Government was ready to give compensation. In other cases, the mistake was on the part of the captains of the steamers, who either tried to escape or attacked the submarine by shooting first.

"THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT CANNOT AGREE TO THE DECLARATION THAT STEAMERS ARMED WITH GUNS ARE TO BE REGARDED AS PEACEFUL MERCHANT VESSELS, BUT IS WILLING TO SUBMIT THIS QUESTION TO A COURT OF ARBITRATION."

French Curtain of Fire Blocks Attack

The curtain of fire of the French has set at naught another German attack launched against trenches which the French recently captured at Le Mort Homme. This engagement, which is characterized by Paris as a small one, has been the only fighting by infantry on the French and Belgian fronts. The big guns, however, have not ceased their activity on various sectors. A violent bombardment is reported in the region of Hill No. 304, northeast of Verdun.

The Germans are still throwing shells in great numbers against the Ikskull bridgehead of the Russians on the Eastern front. There also has been a heavy artillery duel between the Germans and Russians in the region south of Krevo.

The usual bombardments and isolated infantry attacks are in progress on the Austro-Italian front.

The Turks started two offensive movements against the Russians, one in the region of Baiburt and the other near Erzingan. Both were repulsed, according to Petrograd. The German General, Liman von Sanders, is superintending the concentration of Turkish troops in North Smyrna and defense measures for Turkey's Asiatic coast.

MOTORCYCLISTS' TAGS NOT FORTHCOMING

Albany— Forty thousand license plates for distribution among motorcyclists are held up on account of the dye shortage. Frank A. Wenzell, of Watertown, chief of the automobile department in this district, stated today that the plates would be received within two weeks, according to advices from manufacturers. The plates had been promised several months ago, but the manufacturers have been unsuccessful in getting the proper pigments.

The plates will be six by three inches in size and will be affixed to the rear mud-guard of the machines. They will be of the same color as the auto license plates, blue numbers on a white blackground. The American pigments, say the manufacturers, have not given good results, and only aftes repeated trials a satisfactory enamel has been secured.

Saratoga—A movement to prevent "star chamber" sessions of the Committee on Episcopacy, the most powerful sub-body of the Methodist General Conference, failed of adoption this morning after Dr. Thomas Nicholson, of New York city, chairman of the committee, had insisted that secret sessions were necessary to "protect some of the most delicate business of the Conferness."

A definite step toward thep roposed union of the Methodist churches in the North and South was taken by the appointment of a special committee of sixty, which will receive all proposals for the suggested union and report back to the Conference by May 15th.

Everybody Showed Friendship for Army at the Tabernacle

When Chorister Warth at the tabernacle, last night, requested the members of the Salvation Army to rise, extending the same invitation to the Army's friends, every one of the 2,000 persons in the big building arose. This pleasing indicident had one significance, and indication of the standing of the Salvation Army in this community. Including the de[illegible]ccompanying the Army numbered 600 persons, entered the building following the Corps band. Tere were 125 persons present from Mt. Pleasant, Volney and the Hawks District. This delegation was under the leadership of Rev. T. J. Williams. Granby Center sent 10[illegible] residents. There were 200 business women in line. They had first enjoyed a supper at the Presbyterian church, and a delegation of 150 persons were there from Baldwinsville.

The Rev. John M. MacInnis of the South Presbyterian church, Syracuse, offered prayer. Prior to the sermon Miss Painter and Mr. Warth sang "He Knows it all." The evening collections were $78.80. Yesterday afternoon there was an attendance of 200 and the collections totalled $3.03.

After the school session yesterday afternoon Miss Speer met 80 high school girls in the tabernacle, extending an invitation to them to join her Bible class. The girls will meet again with Miss Speer next Thursday afternoon.

Instead of the preaching service this afternoon, Mr. Warth conducted his Bible study class at the regular preaching hour. There will be a meeting for the business women at the Presbyterian church next Tuesday noon with Miss Speer and Miss Painter in charge. Next Thursday at noon there will be a box-luncheon and meeting at the Congregational church, but coffee will be furnished by the women of the different churches. The business women last night extended a vote of thanks to Mr. Charles H. Sage for a present of a banner which they carried to the tabernacle. On the banner was inscribed, "Our Business Girls for Christ."

A meeting for children will occur at the tabernacle tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

On Sunday morning the members of the G. A. R. and allied organizations will attend the services in a body.

Wonderful Power of the Gospel Explained By Evangelist Peacock

Last night's sermon at the tabernacle was one of the best so far delivered by Dr. Peacock. He said in part as follows:

Acts 24: 24-25. And after certain days, When Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

And as he reasoned of rightousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

The gospel of Jesus Christ seems to be attrar'ive even to the worst characters in the world. It seems to have a peculiar power over men and women. And I think one reason the gospel is so attractive and has such a power is because it saves men and women from sin. Even the worst of sinners have been rescued by the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. No matter how low men and women descend in the scale of living, they never get so far down that they lose the desire to be saved. Sometime we get the idea into our heads that such and such individuals are beyond redemption, but my friends the trouble with us is this, we do not know how to touch the heart string that will respond to our pleading. A minister was once called to visit a dying Scotchman who, so far as the people could see, had lost all respect for Christ and His gospel and was living without God and without hope in the world. The minister tried in every way to interest the dying man in the salvation of his soul, but failed. At last the thought dawned upon him that by repeating certain parts of Gods holy book he might interest the dying man in the word of God. He began by repeating a part of the 103rd Psalm: Well He knows our frame, remembering we are dust. Our days like grass. Man is like the flower blooming till the hot winds o'er it pass. Then tis gone and is remembered by its former place no more; but on them that fear Jehovah, rest His mercy evermore." He noted the man was interested and was all attention. Then he repeated a part of the 23rd psalm, when the man broke down and said his mother had taught him that psalm when he was a little boy. His heart was melted and he accepted Christ as his savior and died in peace. This is the case with many people. They live lives of sin and so far as we can see outwardly, they have lost all interest in spiritual things, but inwardly such individu-

FULTON UNGRATEFUL

The spirit of giving is a gladsome quality in individuals, but when it radiates from groups of individuals it is little short of inspiring. The giving of money, or any material thing as a gift we are told is really the lesser gift. The real gifts are those of kindly deeds.

The teachers of our city's schools have within the past few days nobly expressed the art of giving to Fulton people. Hours of unselfish labor found expression in the performances of two evenings at the Quirk Theatre. The busy days near the close of the school year were filled with extra responsibilities for the teachers, and only those who have been teachers can appreciate this "last straw." Too often a community fails to note or appreciate the fact that its teachers do some things for the community for which they are not paid. No community should be so unwise, so unseeing, as to fail to voice its appreciation for unselfish service rendered from this or any other quarter. While it is not probable that our teachers expect the community's thanks, or that they will sulk if it is not forthcoming, yet it is the community's opportunity to express itself. The opportunity should not be lost.

If a kindly service be rendered individuals and no thanks expressed the donor, either ignorance or lack of appreciation is the reason—and lack of appreciation is primiarily ignorance, so there you are.

Fulton as a progressive city cannot afford to ignore its responsibility. Thruout the length and breadth of our land every wide-awake village and city gives to its teachers at least once during the school year a reception. As a mark of civilization no city, not even Fulton, should do less. There should be some individuals, some club or organization to take the lead in this matter.

Fulton must not exhibit the ear marks of ungraciousness, unappreciation—or ignorance. She is neither, but is just snoozing a bit by the way. Wake-up Mother Fulton!

NEWSPAPER ETHICS

Would that all who are or have been in the habit of sneering at newspaper ethics—or, rather, at what they are pleased to consider a lack of it—could have been in the congregation at the Park Avenue M. E. church in New York on Sunday morning and listened to the masterful address delivered on this subject by Dr. James Methvin Lee, director of the department of journalism of New York university. The point was made by the speaker that ethics with newspapers, as with men, is largely a personal matter. "Gentlemen are not exempt from wrongdoing," said Dr. Lee, "but they are always ready to make amends when they discover that they have done wrong." He declared that there is one sermon that is preached over and over every day by the newspapers of the country, and it is based on the text, "The Wages of Sin is Publicity." That newspaper men are not so eager to publish sensational news as some people believe he illustrated by recounting the story of a Chicago city editor who, upon receiving details of the misdeeds of a prominent local clergyman, decided to withhold the story and avoid creating a sensation on obtaining the clergyman's promise to retire quietly to a farm and stay out of the pulpit. The story, to his certain knowledge, has never appeared in print from that day to this, said Dr. Lee.

A great problem now facing the editors of the country is whether to publish what the people want or what they ought to have. There are dangers attending either course. The editor who gives space to the salacious and nauseating stories that are so eagerly drunk in by an amazingly large number of persons will get a large street circulation temporarily, but he will find, when too late, that he has lost the patronage and friendship of right thinking, self-respecting men and women. On the other hand, the editor who is guided by straightlaced Puritanical standards in passing on what "copy" should be allowed access to the composing room is running the risk of turning out a dull, uninteresting, prosy sheet that few will take the trouble to read. The only safe rule is to seek out the golden mean of which Horace sang. The man who edits a newspaper should be neither a prude nor a rake. A saint would make as big a fizzle of the business as a devil. He who would succeed in fullest measure in the task of making a newspaper that will win and hold the favor of the great masses of the people must be a man of the strictest integrity, yet broad enough to understand and sympathize with the many who suffer from one or another of the many forms of human frailty to which man is heir.

Those whose habit it is to decry what they term the sensationalism of the press would do well to remember that the great majority of the fourth estate are imbued with a sincere desire and purpose to do their work conscientiously and faithfully and to strive diligently to get at the exact facts, that they may do no man an injustice. The power of thep ress is great, but, to their credit be it said, there is on the part of most of the men who make up the staffs of American newspapers no disposition whatever to abuse it. The ethics of the newspaper craft will stand comparison with those of any other in the land.—Roanoke (Va.) Times.

GOOD-FOR-NOTHING TRIFLES

Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Jones used to be intimate friends, seeking and taking a delight in each other's company and really profiting thru their friendship. It was a union which promoted a closer relationship between their whole families and brought a degree of happiness into the lives of others besides themselves.

Then Mrs. Jones heard that Mrs. Smith said so-and-so. She did not ask Mrs. Smith, who, as a matter fact, had not said it. But she called up the next day and said, tartly, "I can't go down town with you this afternoon, because of thus-and-so." And then they drifted apart. Finally they stopped speaking. Now they meet at social affairs and aparently hate each other with all the fury of which women are capable. The breach has caused an awkward feeling between their husbands. Their children never play together again. Their friends are often embarrassed by the situation.

Mr. Brown and Mr. Black are friends. They belong to the same lodge, think alike on various subjects, like each other splendidly, and go together often. Then Brown borrows some money of Black, intending to repay it shortly. Black, in better financial circumstances, is glad to lend it—really, wouldn't care if the loan was never repaid. But he would appreciate it if Brown remembered it. Brown, embarrassed at his inability to cancel the obligation as soon as he had anticipated, feels a diffidence in the presence of his friend. He is wondering if Black is thinking about that loan. He soon avoids Black. He doesn't call him up, he doesn't propose pleasure jaunts, he doesn't ask business advice. And Black, fearing that any forwardness on his part will cause his friend to think that he is pushing him for the money, also hangs back.

And the breach between them widens until it becomes a chasm, too wide, too deep, ever to be bridged. The men pass as strangers, and the estrangement involves their wives, perhaps.

"Ah! how seriously I have thought of the terrible folly of ever quarreling with a true friend on good-for-nothing trifles," wrote Charles Dickens.

It is a grievous misfortune when friends permit the course of a real friendship to be diverted by some slight trifle. There is nothing more precious, with the single exception of love, than friendship. It should be prized as a jewel, but kept more closely, guarded more zealously, rated more valuable, than any jewel. We do ourselves, our friends and mankind in general an injustice if we permit a friendship to be despoiled, particularly if we allow it to be wrecked by trifles.—Macon (Ga.) News.

Proof that the Stephens standard price bill would not increase prices of commodities sold under its provisions is found in the development of the automobile business in recent years. All motor cars have been sold at standard and uniform prices established and maintained by their manufacturers, and as a result of this policy the automobile business has grown amazingly. Prices have been lowered and quality has been raised until today a few hundred dollars will buy a better car than could have been bought ten years ago for as many thousands.

The Stephens standard price bill will enable a child to buy as safely as a grown person. When producers are able to sell their goods at a uniform price they will, from business prudence, maintain quality and the customer who asks for an article by name will know just what he is getting.

STEPHENS BILL PROTECTS PUBLIC

Aimed at Dishonest Advertising and False Pretenses.

TO AID HONEST BUSINESS.

Measure Will Prevent Injury to Smaller Cities and Towns From Cutthroat Monopolistic Methods of Mail Order Houses and Big City Stores—Will Insure Uniform Prices and High Quality.

By W. BOB HOLLAND.

"A bill to protect the public against dishonest advertising and false pretenses in advertising."

This is the comprehensive title of a measure introduced in the present congress by Representative Dan V. Stephens of Nebraska. A similar bill has been introduced in the senate by Senator Ashurst of Arizona. No one can find fault with legislation that will achieve the objects stated in the titles of the Stephens-Ashurst bill. The public certainly needs protection "against dishonest advertising and false pretenses in merchandising."

The bill now under consideration is the successor of the Stevens bill, a measure introduced in the last congress by Representative Stevens of New Hampshire. It was widely discussed and died in committee after several public hearings, at which its merits and demerits were considered. The Stephens bill embodies the changes that seemed advisable after these hearings and discussions, and it is believed that in its present form it safeguards the producer, the merchant and the consumer.

For many years the right of a producer to contract with merchants for the resale of his products at standard, uniform prices was generally recognized and its legality was not questioned. Then the supreme court of the United States held that such a contract was "in restraint of trade" and "against public policy." The court divided on the question, 5 to 4, and the majority found no specific law forbidding the practice that had long been common, but held that congress had intended the Sherman law to prohibit such business methods.

Agency System Is Legal.

This court made law upset long established custom, but it does not prevent the end sought from being reached by other means. Producers who wish to have no discrimination shown to favored individuals can insure uniform prices for their goods by establishing branch establishments or by appointing agents. This is the method followed by manufacturers of automobiles. Bakers who sell their products within a restricted area can also regulate their prices by making grocers their agents and thereby retaining title to their bread and rolls until they reach the consumer.

Producers of other articles, goods sold in small quantities and which must depend on established merchants for their distribution, are denied the right that men in other lines have. The Stephens-Ashurst bill is designed to restore to these producers a protection they had before it was taken away from them by the supreme court.

Cut rate department stores, so called "chain" drug and grocery stores in the large cities, and mail order houses use cut prices on standard, well known articles to draw trade away from small stores and small towns. The loss they may suffer on these standard articles is more than made up by the high profits on anonymous goods or goods put up under their own brands. In this way the producer is injured because the reputation of his product is ruined; the retail merchant is damaged because he cannot afford to advertise widely a special bargain "bait" to attract customers to whom other goods may be sold at a profit; the consumer is damaged because producers are not encouraged to maintain quality and because inferior articles are substituted.

Ample Protection Afforded.

The Stephens-Ashurst bill is not compulsory. To take advantage of its provisions the producer must register his trademark or special brand with the bureau of corporations in Washington and must pay a fee of $10. He must not have a monopoly of articles belonging to the same general class of merchandise, and he must not agree with any competitor to control prices.

The producer must also file a schedule giving the prices at which his listed article is sold to wholesalers, to retailers and to the consumer. This schedule of prices becomes a public document. The prices scheduled must be uniform to buyers under similar circumstances. This permits reduction in prices for quantity purchases and allowances to equalize freight rates.

A merchant who decides to quit business, who wishes to discontinue any line of listed goods or who becomes bankrupt must first offer such listed articles to the manufacturers for redemption at the full price paid. Should the manufacturers neglect or refuse to redeem the goods then the dealer can sell them at any price he desires or can get. Damaged goods must also be offered for exchange or redemption, and if later offered for sale at reduced prices the reason for the reduction must be made known to purchasers. There is also a clause permitting seasonable sales.

TIME LOST IN STRIKES

While strikes and lockouts in this state for the twelve months ending September 30, the figures of which are now available, were fewer than in any similar period in recent years, they yet show an astonishing amount of time lost.

Reduced to the labor of one man and assuming he works 313 days a year the idleness resulting from the causes named stretched back toward the beginning of recorded human history would cover twenty-three centuries. Another way of visualizing the time squandered is to imagine one of the workmen on the Parthenon throwing down his tools and refusing to labor. He could have continued idle almost until today, or about twenty-three centuries, before wasting as much time as was dissipated in differences between employer and employe in the trades of this state in the twelve months mentioned.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

PARADERS MUST CARRY THE FLAG

Governor Signs New Law Relating to Marriage Licenses, Junk Dealers, Etc.

Paraders in every city in the State must hereafter carry one or more American flags, and more than that, the new law signed by the Governor specifies that flags carried in parades must be at least five feet and six inches long, attached to a staff and "Conspicuously displayed."

These provisions are made in the Marsh bill, which has just been signed by Governor Whitman. The bill provides:

"No parade or procession, except of the police or fire department, or the military or naval forces of the United States or the National Guard, shall occupy or march in any street of a city to the exclusion or interruption of other citizens in their individual rights thereof, with or without a permit or license from thel ocal authorities, unless a standard flag of the United States is carried."

It is further provided in the bill that permits for parades or processions which have been obtained are to be deemed void unless a flag of the above specified nature is carried.

There have been many instances it is said, where organizations and societies have paraded and displayed the banners and emblems of the order parading exclusively and it was intended by Mr. Marsh to pass some law that would make it illegal for any demonstration necessitating marching unless an American flag was carried.

The measure has a direct bearing on all parades in all cities, towns and villages of the State.

Another bill just signed by the Governor is one which will settle a question among city clerks which has been a mooted one since the Marriage License law went into effect.

The amendment provides that affidavits and other documents in connection with marriage licenses shall be indexed by the city and town clerks and that they shall become public records.

While a few city clerks have always allowed the examination of these records by anyone who desired to see them and the newspapers, the city clerks generally have not made them public, the City Clerks' Association of the State having decided that for various reasons it would be better not to do so.

Other amendments signed by the Governor follow:

Amending the Penal law by providing that a person who criminally receives stolen property, such as wire, copper, cable, etc., belonging to a railroad, telephone, telegraph or electric company, shall be subject to punishment for first degree if the property is valued for more than $50, and the second degree if worth less than $50.

Amending the Penal law by making it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $250 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both, for depositing anything but money in slot machines.

Making it a misdemeanor for a person to solemnize a marriage unless authorized by the laws of this State to perform the marriage ceremony.

Providing that the fact that a city official is interested in a corporation shall not prohibit the acceptance by such corporation of a city contract.

The Governor has also approved legislative acts raising the requirements of study for the profession of medicine, pharmacy and dentistry, which were commended by the Regents of the University in regular session recently.

Under these laws candidates for entrance to medical schools in New York after January 1st, 1917, must have had one year's work in an approved college subsequent to the successful completion of an approved four years' high school course or its equivalent before he will be admitted to study for a physicians' degree, and candidates for licenses to practice pharmacy after January 1st next must have had thirty Regents' counts or the equivalent prior to the beginning of the first year of study in a pharmacy school.

Opinions

LAYMEN ARE PARTICIPATING

One of the significant features of the meeting of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at Saratoga Springs is that one-half of the delegates to this great legislative body are laymen. Up to 1872 only clergymen, duly elected by the annual conferences, participated in the deliberations of the greater body. In that year the General Conference, at Brooklyn, as the culmination of efforts extending through several years, voted to admit lay delegates.

Although opposition to the change was strong, and was reluctantly given up by many of the prominent clergymen of the denomination, the wisdom of the step is no longer a matter of doubt. That the denomination has steadily grown stronger during the nearly forty-five years which have elapsed, is shown in many ways. For in many respects, the influences of the denomination, in everything which makes the betterment of the world, is to an appreciable extent due to the increased influence and responsibility of the laiety.

The present conference has 800 delegates, from 133 annual conferences, representing a membership of 4,000,000. The General Conference meets but once in four years and this year, as usual, it is confronted with an accumulation of business of importance to the denomination. The session will occupy four weeks. —Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

THE NAVY'S MANAGEMENT

The way the government does business in contrast with the way a private concern would do it, is evidenced by the way it puts worn-out government ships on the bargain counter for the benefit of junk dealers. From time to time the government has wornout ships to sell, which have been discarded as useless by the navy. It has several of these in the market at present and one was sold a short time ago in the Norfolk navy yard for $16,700 to a firm of dealers, who spent less than $2,000 in making the ship seaworthy enough to float it to their yards, where they took more than $55,000 worth of copper from its hull and had all the rest of the junk with the ship left besides. This copper will now be sold to the government, which needs it. The substance of the transaction is that the government sold the vessel for $16,700 and now buys back the copper which it owned for $55,000. A private concern would have salvaged its copper before it sold the boat. This is a matter of wasting $35,000 by the naval department in a single transaction and it is only one of many such bargains that are continually being made. No wonder our navy, which is one of the smallest, has cost more than any other navy in the world. Its business management has been thoroughly bad. —Watertown Times.

SMART WRAPS FOR ALL PLACES

New York—Whatever else a woman foregoes this Spring, she is sure to want one of the new Spring top coats that are irresistibly smart and becoming, besides being so practically useful that they appeal to everyone in one form or another.

Day and Evening Wear

Perhaps the newest development in the coat for evening wear that will go equally well at an afternoon affair, is the coat of satin trimmed with marabout which promises soon to be over popular.

This comes in flaming pink, pearl gray and other light shades, but meets a more practical demand in taupe lined with turquoise blue, Amethyst with pearl lining, black with white, and stone with buttercup yellow or coral for contrast. Natural marabout or black forms the collar, cuffs and bottom trimming and the waist is defined with shirrings that emphasize the flare at the foot. Usually these coats are three quarter length but sometimes a shorter or longer length is worn with good effect.

Very Elaborate

For the wrap that is designed only for light evening wear, very full fussy cape styles in taffeta in changeables of delicate tints are first favorites. There is no pretense of fit in these garments, their smartness depending altogether on their voluminous and luxurious fullness and becomingness of color. Later we shall see smaller affairs in bertha and pelerine shapes to top summer frocks becomingly and little odd vestees and Russian blouses of taffeta, gros-de-Londre and similar weaves.

Velours Coats

The very last word in smart coats for day wear, is the class developed in handsome wool velours, lined with matching silk. These come in all the browns, and run into sulphur yellows and pastel tints in a few instances. A mouse gray is an especially stylish and practical choice, since the color goes with any costume. Wide adjustable sport collars are a feature of these wraps, both in the plain tones and in the blocks and fancy mixtures which are in good style though not as new as the plain colors.

Rain Coats

For touring, or automobile use the colored oil-skin coat introduced last year continues a favorite, but there are no end of rainproof cloths made up into top coats that are excellent for general wear. Convertible collars patch pockets, odd belts and cape effects all serve to smarten such garments and the few buttons used are selected to set off the cloth and design. VERONA CLARKE.

Cleveland.—"Twelve Golden Rules For Young Ladies" was the subject of the sermon delivered by Rev. Thomas Hughes, pastor of the Rocky River Methodist church. The twelve rules are:

"Always remember to be a lady.

"Don't be loud and boisterous.

"Be modest and virtuous.

"Choose carefully your company of both sexes.

"Open your eyes and ears, but keep your heart closed to the gush and nonsense from the so called lovers.

"Be careful about your dress. Have it becoming and tasteful.

"Be more careful about what is in your head than what is in your heart.

"Don't be self conceited.

"Don't keep company with a sinful young man.

"Think carefully and prayerfully about your wedding day.

"Be considerate about the time and money of your gentlemen friends.

"Be true to the best ideals of womanhood."

TIRES WITHSTAND PACE FASTER THAN A GALE

Daytona, Fla.—My! the things that the wild waves are saying! They are still foaming and lashing with excitement over the speed that a Hudson "Super-Six" stock chassis on Goodrich Silvertown Tires made along the Ormond-Daytona beach. It was a new record—a mile in 35 12-100 seconds, or 102 1-2 miles per hour. Faster than the fiercest gale the waves have ever witnessed.

The Hudson is rated at 29-4 h. p., and develops 77 h. p. at about 2500 r. p. m. Some traveling for a stock chassis, is the surf gossip. The mermaids all want to go joy-riding in it now. No more slow, poky old torpedoes for them. And they're all just head over tails in love with those beautiful black treaded Silvertown Tires that help the Hudson make such record-breaking headway.

MILK VENDERS UNDER INSPECTORS'S EYES TODAY

Consumers of milk would have rejoiced in the appearance of their vendors had they been at the City Hall at 7 o'clock this morning when eleven purveyors lined up for an official inspection by Dr. W. W. Kennedy, inspector, assisted by City Health Officer, Dr. A. L. Hall. The officials eyed the wagons and secured samples of the milk which has to be subjected to a bacteriological test.

It was not expected of the men that they would prepare themselves for the inspection, but that they would appear as usual. However, they gave the officials a most agreeable surprise when they stepped forward neatly attired in white duck coats and hands encased in white cotton gloves.

The wagons they were driving were spick and span after receiving baths, and the horses looked as fine as though they were to draw a wedding party.

The officials are not yet prepared to announce the result of the milk testing.

WHY DID DOBBIN LEAVE HIS MOORINGS?

It may have been noise produced by "flat" wheels on an Empire United car that caused a horse standing in front of the Clark House to make use of its liberty yesterday afternoon; or it may have been that Officer Fox who stood at Cayuga street held a lump of sweetness in his hand as a sedative for nervous animals that enticed somebody's Dobbin to make a bee line for the popular Patrolman. At any rate, if Dobbin had an objective point he was frustrated by a pedestrian, who gathered him in by grabbing his briddle. The street was traffic-filled at the time and the grabber of the bridle may have saved collisions.

Woodmen Had Lead in Series That Maccabees Could Not Overcome. Match Games Ended.

The Maccabee pool players made a clean sweep of the last set of games in the series of matches played with the Woodmen's lodge, winning all three games last night on their own table. Last night's victory, for the Maccabees was not sufficient to give them the series, the Woodmen winning by 23 points.

At the conclusion of the preceding match, the Woodmen held the lead by 82 points, which margin practically clinched the winning of the series. The work of the Maccabees last night was a distinct surprise, especially Tyler's victory over Walsh, one of the was a distinct surprise, especially Ty- reached the 50 point mark with Walsh able to obtain but 31 points. H. Ingamells defeated Miller 50 to 26, and W. Ingamells scored a victory over Watson 50 to 34.

The series of pool games between the two organizations has been interesting one and has gone a long way towards cementing friendly relations between the Maccabees and Woodmen. The games which were played on alternating Thursday nights were largely attended and there was much interest shown by the followers of the contending teams. Getting away to a good start, the Maccabees piled up a good lead in the first few games of the series but afterwards took a bad slump. The Maccabees finished strong in the last two games.

PLUCKY BULL KILLED BIG BULL

Came Here a Stranger Aboard An Engine Pilot, Fought and Lives to Continue His Adventures.

A battle royal was waged in Broadway today, between two bulldogs, unevenly matched in size, as the belligerents. The witnesses of the fray and who made unsuccessful attempts to end the fight were agreed that the smaller dog possessed "the most pep" The witnesses were unaware, however, of the small dog's identity, as it arrived in the city recently unheralded.

The officials at the O. and W. station remember its arrival here late one night from Oswego perched on the cowcatcher of a passenger train. Its adoption by a youngster who spends a lot of his time assisting the baggagemen is merely a prelude to the incidents connected with the fight in Broadway.

The pup was taking a ride in Will Hall's baggage wagon. Espying the other bulldog in the street. Hall's passenger made one leap from the rear of the wagon and hostilities ensued. The result of the "scrap" can best be told in the words of a youngster who witnessed the proceedings. "The little dog, after the fight had one ear almost chewed off and a lot of bad wounds on its face," he said. "How did the big dog come out," he was asked. "Oh! He's dead."

DRIVEN INSANE BY 100 CIGARETTES A DAY

Sent to an Asylum Upon Saloonkeeper's Complaint and Doctor's Testimony.

Detroit, Mich.—Frank Winters, the man who smoked a hundred cigarettes a day, was committed to the Pontiac asylum by Judge Hulbert recently in the probate court.

The incessant use of the cigarettes was declared by Dr. S. L. Layton, who examined Winters, to have affected his mind. Frequenting a saloon at the corner of Chamberlain and Lawndale avenues, Winters smoked until his supply gave out and his money too. After that he begged smokes from the customers of the saloon, according to Joseph Berman, the proprietor of the place.

Berman petitioned the court to have Winters taken to an asylum. A German by birth, Winters was getting along well in this country until the cigarette habit got the upper hand. Given jobs by Berman, Winters even lost his power of application to simple work.

"No more work for me," he would say as he would sit down on the job, Berman told investigators.

The nicotine undoubtedly had a deteriorating effect on his mentality, Dr. Layton declared.

PEACOCK TELLS OF GOSPEL POWER

uals long for the comfort and joy the gospel or Christ is able to give to men and women. And if we can, by the help of God's spirit, touch the right chord, oftentimes they are brought into the kingdom of Jesus and are saved. We see this quite frequently. Men and women cease living lives of sin and wickedness and live lives of positive holiness. The gospel of Christ has the power to change God's worst enemies and make them His friends. This is revealed to us in the life of Paul. At one time Paul was the worst foe Christianity had in the world. He was bitterly opposed to the Kingdom of Christ in every sense of the word. But after his conversion he was the most powerful preacher of righteousness and temperance and judgment to come. When the gospel of Christ had gained an entrance into the heart of Paul, nothing in this world could drown it out. For the sake of the truth he had espoused he suffered the loss of all things, yes in the maintenance of its, he counted not his life dear unto him. To spread this truth he encountered hardships, shipwrecks, perils on land and on the sea, persecutions followed persecutions, bonds and imprisonments, but no matter what were the circumstances in which he was placed, the one prominent passion of his soul was to preach Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And on one occasion he wrote: I am determined to know nothing among ye save Christ and Him crucified. Put Paul where you may, view him from all points, after his conversion and you will find that the master passion of his soul was to preach Jesus Christ, He seemed to be like John Bunyan, who said; If you let me out of prison today, I will preach the gospel of Jesus Christ again tomorrow, by the grace of God. Hear him as he stands before this wicked couple reasoning of righteousness and temperance and judgment to come. In place of trying to entertain and please this man and woman who had sent for him to hear him concerning the faith in Christ. He went straight at their sins, until Felix trembled and dismissed him from his presence. At this time Paul was a prisoner at Caserea. Felix occupied the position of a favorite slave of the emperor, and had gained great power in the court. For five or six years he had been procurator of the Roman province of Judea. The historian, Tacitue, gives us an idea of how he used his power in one sentence. He says "He wielded his kingly authority with the spirit Drusilla to leave her husband and become his wife and that his court recked with blood and debauchery. It was before such a character the apostle Paul had been arraigned. When Paul was brought the first time, Felix could see no good reason to conclude that the Roman empire was in any great danger from this one Jew whom his countrymen were charging with sedition, therefore he allowed Paul many liberties and gave orders to the centurion that Paul should be kept in charge and should have indulgence, and not to forbid any of his friends to minister unto him. After a few days Felix and his wife sent for Paul and heard him concerning the faith in Jesus Christ. Why they sent for Paul on this occasion we do not exactly know. But one thing we do know and that is this, that they got a good deal more than they bargained for. When Paul came before this wicked couple, he did not speak to them as a Greek philosopher, anxious to make a good impression, but he went straight at their sins. He reasoned of righteousness and self-control, and the judgment to come. This was a stinging blow to this wicked couple, who thought they could do anything they liked with impunity. Some times Christianity must be very plain in order to show men and women the folly of sin. Christ was not slow to denounce sin and we find that His apostles were not afraid to denounce the evil deeds of men and women. As Paul was speaking of righteousness and of the judgment to come, Felix was terrified. He was alarmed. He had been given a picture of his own life, and as he looked into that picture a strange feeling came over him and his own concience condemned him, and he realized that he was guilty in the sight or God and man. He had been brought to the point where he had to make a decision for right or wrong. Which will he choose? What will he do? Every thing depends upon the decision he makes. He has only a few moments to decide. The balance trembles and then slowly the wrong scale goes down, and he says: Go thy way for this time, and when I have a convenient season I will call thee unto me.

Now my friends, I desire to speak to you for a short time regarding the lessons contained in thisp assage of scripture. This man is an example and there are many other sin the world at the present that furnish just such examples. Oftentimes men and women are touched by thew ord of God, and their coinciences are aroused and condemns them, but they lull them to sleep and excuse delay in deciding for Christ by half honest promises to attend to religion at some future time. I remember not so long since of a minister preaching a sermon on excuses offere d by men and women for remaining outside of the Kingdom of God. On that occasion, a certain individual wasp resent who had not given himself to Christ. He seemed to be impressed and in the course of conversation with the minister a few days after said he had no excuse to offer for his position, but intended some time in the future to become a member of the church of Jesus Christ. To the best of my knowledge, that individual was honest and sincere in his remarks, but he was not quite ready tom ake the decision. He wanted more time. He was like Felix who said: "Go thy way, for this time. When I am ready to make this decision, I will let you know." And so far as I now, that individual has reached the point where he feels that he doesn't need the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, my friends, what he was really anxious about, and what Felix was really anxious about was to get rid of this disturbing message, for the present. Felix wanted to get rid of Paul, because Paul was pouring in too much truth, and he couldn't stand it. It was disturbing him. And this is the way a great many people do at the present time. They can't stand the truth, so they stay away from the house of God, and when the minister of God speaks to them about salvation, they say: "Not this time. Probably by the next time I will be ready. When I am ready I will let you know." They don't want to shut the door altogether. They know they are on the wrong road but they don't want to acknowledge it and turn around and come back to God. They try to get their consciences quiet by saying: "Not now, some time in the future."

The majority of people outside the Kingdom of Christ, hoodwink themselves by think ing by and by we will settle this matter and come into the Kingdom of God. Now I know from observation that many people are doing this, and the point I wish to impress upon you is, that you should settle the question for the future as to which God you are going to follow. I know that the message of God's love in Jesus Christ is beautiful and gracious and tender and full of love and mercy and good tidings, but I know that there is another side also. I know that God's gospel was intended to wake men out of sleep and to awaken Jesus within them and make them realize their lost condition without Christ. This was the reason Paul spoke of righteousness and temperance and judgment to come and it had the right kind of effect. It frightened Felix. His conscience condemned him, because he knew he had been living in direct opposition to the commandments oof God. And when a man realizes he will be crushed under God's laws, itm akes a difference in his life. Then the gospel of God's love in Jesus Christ comes to him and offers a way of escape and this is good news to the troubled soul.

Aaron Burr tells us that at the age of nineteen he saw that a decision must be made between thew orld and God. He went into the country for a week to consider the matter. He then made a resolution never again to trouble himself about the soul's salvation. From that time he threw himself recklessly into sin, sinking lower and lower into depravity and unrighteousness. It is one of the strangest things in the world the way the majority of people look upon religion. You can talk to men for hours about business and politics, and they will be interested, but when you mention the subject of religion they are a ssilent as Egyptian mummies, or become offended because you have mentioned the subject. So many of us do not like the thoughts contained in God's word about righteousness and temperance and judgment to come and we make a strenuous effort to get our minds away from this subject, because it is painful and unpleasant. Do you think it would be a wise thing for a man, if he began to suspect that he was insolvent to refuse to look into his books, or to take stock, and let things drift, till there was not a cent for ayn person. Would you consider him wise or honest? What would his creditors say? I think I can hear every person in this building saying, He was not wise, he was not honest. Then, my friends, is it the part of wisdom and honesty for men and women to dismiss this matter of accepting Christ because it is disagreeable and think they will wait until it becomes agreeable? Why, such an idea is the height of foolishness, and if such persons wait until they are entirely reconciled to Christ, they will never find a convenient season.

Another reason for indecision and

MILK VENDERS UNDER INSPECTORS'S EYES TODAY

Consumers of milk would have rejoiced in the appearance of their vendors had they been at the City Hall at 7 o'clock this morning when eleven purveyors lined up for an official inspection by Dr. W. W. Kennedy, inspector, assisted by City Health Officer, Dr. A. L. Hall. The officials eyed the wagons and secured samples of the milk which has to be subjected to a bacteriological test.

It was not expected of the men that they would prepare themselves for the inspection, but that they would appear as usual. However, they gave the officials a most agreeable surprise when they stepped forward neatly attired in white duck coats and hands encased in white cotton gloves..

The wagons they were driving were spick and span after receiving baths, and the horses looked as fine as though they were to draw a wedding party.

The officials are not yet prepared to announce the result of the milk testing.

WHY DID DOBBIN LEAVE HIS MOORINGS?

It may have been noise produced by "flat" wheels on an Empire United car that caused a horse standing in front of the Clark House to make use of its liberty yesterday afternoon; or it may have been that Officer Fox who stood at Cayuga street held a lump of sweetness in his band as a sedative for nervous animals that enticed somebody's Dobbin to make a bee line for the popular Patrolman. At any rate, if Dobbin had an objective point he was frustrated by a pedestrian, who gathered him in by grabbing his briddle. The street was traffic-filled at the time and the grabber of the bridle may have saved collisions.

Woodmen Had Lead in Series That Maccabees Could Not Overcome. Match Games Ended.

The Maccabee pool players made a clean sweep of the last set of games in the series of matches played with the Woodmen's lodge, winning all three games last night on their own table. Last night's victory, for the Maccabees was not sufficient to give them the series, the Woodmen winning by 23 points.

At the conclusion of the preceding match, the Woodmen held the lead by 82 points, which margin practically clinched the winning of the series. The work of the Maccabees last night was a distince surprise, especially Tyler's victory over Walsh, one of the was a distinct surprise, especially Ty- reached the 50 point mark with Walsh able to obtain but 31 points. H. Ingamells defeated Miller 50 to 26, and W. Ingamells scored a victory over Watson 50 to 34.

The series of pool games between the two organization s has been interesting one and has gone a long way towards cementing friendly relations between the Maccabees and Woodmen. The games which were played on alternating Thursday nights were largely attended and there was much interest shown by the followers of the contending teams. Getting away to a good start, the Maccabees piled up a good lead in the first few games of the series but afterwards took a bad slump. The Maccabees finished strong in the last two games.

PLUCKY BULL KILLED BIG BULL

Came Here a Stranger Aboard An Engine Pilot, Fought and Lives to Continue His Adventures.

A battle royal was waged in Broadway today, between two bulldogs, unevenly matched in size, as the belligerants. The witnesses of the fray and who made unsuccessful attempts to end the fight were agreed that the smaller dog possessed "the most pep" The witnesses were unaware, however, of the small dog's identity, as it arrived in the city recently unberalded.

The officials at the O. and W. station remember its arrival here late one night from Oswego perched on the cowcatcher of a passenger train. Its adoption by a youngster who spends a lot of his time assisting the baggagemen is merely a prelude to the incidents connected with the fight in Broadway.

The pup wastaking a ride in Will Hall's baggage wagon. Espying the other bulldog in the street. Hall's passenger made one leap from the rear of the wagon and hostilities ensued. The result of the "scrap" can best be told in the words of a youngster who witnessed the proceedings. "The little dog, after the ight had one ear almost chewed off and a lot of bad wounds on its face," he said. "How did the big dog come out," he was asked. "Oh! He's dead."

When Paul was brought the first time, Felix could see no good reason to conclude that the Roman empire was in any great danger from this one Jew whom his countrymen were charging with sedition, therefore he allowed Paul many liberties and gave orders to the centurion that Paul should be kept in charge and should have indulgence, and not to forbid any of his friends to minister unto him. After a few days Felix and his wife sent for Paul and heard him concerning the faith in Jesus Christ. Why they sent for Paul on this occasion we do not exactly know. But one thing we do know and that is this, that they got a good deal more than they bargained for. When Paul came before this wicked couple, he did not speak to them as a Greek philosopher, anxious to make a good impression, but he went straight at their sins. He reasoned of righteousness and self-control, and the judgment to come. This was a stinging blow to this wicked couple, who thought they could do anything they liked with impunity. Some times Christianity must be very plain in order to show men and women the folly of sin. Christ was not slow to denounce sin and we find that His apostles were not afraid to denounce the evil deeds of men and women. As Paul was speaking of righteousness and of the judgment to come, Felix was terrified. He was alarmed. He had been given a picture of his own life, and as he looked into that picture a strange feeling came over him and his own concience condemned him, and he realized that he was guilty in the sight or God and man. He had been brought to the point where he had to make a decision for right or wrong. Which will he choose? What will he do? Everything depends upon the decision he makes. He has only a few moments to decide. The balanee trembles and then slowly the wrong scale goes down, and he says: Go thy way for this time, and when I have a convenient season I will call thee unto me.

Now my friends, I desire to speak to you for a short time regarding the lessons contained in thisp assage of scripture. This man is an example and there are many other sin the world at the present, that furnish just such examples. Oftentimes men and women are touched by thew ord of God, and their coinciences are aroused and condemns them, but they lull them to sleep and excuse delay in deciding for Christ by half honest promises to attend to religion at some future time. I remember not so long since of a minister preaching a sermon on excuses offere d by men and women for remaining outside of the Kingdom of God. On that occasion, a certain individual wasp resent who had not given himself to Christ. He seemed to be impressed and in the course of conversation with the minister a few days after said he had no excuse to offer for his position, but intended some time in the future to become a member of the church of Jesus Christ. To the best of my knowledge, that individual was honest and sincere in his remarks, but he was not quite ready tom ake the decision. He wanted more time. He was like Felix, who said: "Go thy way, for this time. When I am ready to make this decision, I will let you know." And so far as I now, that individual has reached the point where he feels that he doesn't need the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, my friends, what he was really anxious about, and what Felix was really anxious about was to get rid of this disturbing message, for the present. Felix wanted to get rid of Paul, because Paul was pouring in too much truth, and he couldn't stand it. It was disturbing him. And this is the way a great many people do at the present time. They can't stand the truth, so they stay away from the house of God, and when the minister of God speaks to them about salvation, they say: "Not this time. Probably by the next time I will be ready. When I am ready I will let you know." They don't want to shut the door altogether. They know they are on the wrong road but they don't want to acknowledge it and turn around and come back to God. They try to get their consciences quiet by saying: "Not now, some time in the future."

The majority of people outside the Kingdom of Christ, hoodwink themselves by think ing by and by we will settle this matter and come into the Kingdom of God. Now I know from observation that many people are doing this, and the point I wish to impress upon you is, that you should settle the question for the future as to which God you are going to follow. I know that the message of God's love in Jesus Christ is beautiful and gracious and tender and full of love and mercy and good tidings, but I know that there is another side also. I know that God's gospel was intended to wake men out of sleep and to awaken Jesus within them and make them realize their lost condition without Christ. This was the reason Paul spoke of righteousness and temperance and judgment to come and it had the right kind of effect. It frightened Felix. His conscience condemned him, because he knew he had been living in direct opposition to the commandments oof God. And when a man realizes he will be crushed under God's laws, itm akes a difference in his life. Then the gospel of God's love in Jesus Christ comes to him and offers a way of escape and this is good news to the troubled soul.

Aaron Burr tells us that at the age of nineteen he saw that a decision must be made between thew orld and God. He went into the country for a week to consider the matter. He then made a resolution never again to trouble himself about the soul's salvation. From that time he threw himself recklessly into sin, sinking lower and lower into depravity and unrighteousness. It is one of the strangest things in the world the way the majority of people look upon religion. You can talk to men for hours about business and politics, and they will be interested, but when you mention the subject of religion they are a ssilent as Egyptian mummies, or become offended because you have mentioned the subject. So many of us do not like the thoughts contained in God's word about righteousness and temperance and judgment to come and we make a strenuous effort to get our minds away from this subject, because it is painful and unpleasant. Do you think it would be a wise thing for a man, if he began to suspect that he was insolvent to refuse to look into his books, or to take stock, and let things drift, till there was not a cent for ayn person. Would you consider him wise or honest? What would his creditors say? I think I can hear every person in this building saying, He was not wise, he was not honest. Then, my friends, is it the part of wisdom and honesty for men and women to dismiss this matter of accepting Christ because it is disagreeable and think they will wait until it becomes agreeable? Why, such an idea is the height of foolishness, and if such persons wait until they are entirely reconciled to Christ, they will never find a convenient season.

CITY TRAFFIC AND TRANSPORTATION

Electric Traction Is Superior to Other Systems.

THE LOOP OR BELT LINE.

Modern Methods of Carrying Passengers In Cities Have Released the City From the Bondage of Slow Travel and Have Stimulated Urban Growth.

By FRANK KOESTER, author of "Modern City Planning and Maintenance," etc.

Electric traction has superseded both the cable and horse car road. It has made surface travel as speedy as is consistent with safety, and it has enabled business to be concentrated in the centers of cities and homes to be located in the outlying districts. Electric traction has in a few decades released the city from the bondage of slow transportation and has stimulated urban growth in a way that would never have been possible under other conditions.

The only rival of electric traction is the automobile, for the most part a gasoline engine driven vehicle. In the form of coaches or busses it is used to a great extent in London and to a lesser degree in other cities, but it seems quite unlikely that it will ever become a serious rival of electric traction in the form of cars on rails.

As a civic problem, therefore, transportation reduces itself to the best method of laying out street car routes and the proper regulation of vehicular traffic.

The transportation system of a city should be so arranged as to furnish as direct a means of transportation as can be obtained from every point in the city to every other point at a single fare and to furnish ample facilities without congestion.

A highly desirable object in the transportation system of a city is to have the cars reasonably filled at all times, since this reduces the cost. In cities in which the residential districts are at one end and the business and manufacturing districts at another this cannot be accomplished, as the cars must run empty away from the business districts in the morning and empty toward them in the afternoon. If, however, the business district is in the center of the city the street car traffic may be arranged to much better advantage, as routes of cars may be laid out to traverse the city from end to end, passing through the business districts or transferring to lines that do.

One of the best systems of transfers is that in which a loop or belt line runs around and just outside of the civic center, with all cars passing over the loop or portions of it and transferring to all other cars. For example, in a city laid out on the radial plan eight lines double tracked will serve to traverse sixteen of the radial avenues, each line on reaching the loop passing around half of it in a semicircle and continuing on out the radial avenue directly opposite the one by which it entered the loop. Each line would thus have seven transfer points, from each of which the passengers could proceed in either direction over the seven other lines covering the other fourteen radial avenues. A number of transfer points serve to distribute the traffic with less congestion than if the transferring were all done at a single point.

If the traffic of the city is heavy it is advisable to have the loop constituted of several sets of tracks in parallel in order that the cars of the different lines will not be subject to delay by those of others. An example of the necessity of ample loop facilities is seen in the Brooklyn bridge terminal in New York, where eight loops are needed to handle the cars which stream across the bridge over a single track.

In connection with such a system of radiating car lines or lines intersecting at the center of the city, circumferential or belt lines at different distances from the center of the city, transferring to all the lines intersected, will serve to make the transportation facilities complete.

NEW USE FOR TOWN MARSHAL

Kansas Town Solves a Municipal Problem by Means of Advertising.

Luray, Kan., has solved the paramount problem of the country town, says the Chicago Tribune. The resourcefulness of O. I. Stevenson, city clerk; members of the city council and a want ad. did it. Luray wanted a town marshal, but there was no one there who would fill the bill, and so City Clerk Stevenson put an ad. in a Kansas City paper. Forty men answered. One of them, George H. Armstrong of Newton, Kan., was selected for the place. He is an experienced police officer and is making good not only by way of keeping the peace intact, but by the satisfactory performance of many other and varied duties. He virtually is city manager.

The life of city marshal in Luray is no sinecure. Luray was confronted with the same difficulty that thrusts itself into the life of every other country town—the enforcement of town ordinances and finding a man to perform the many municipal tasks, no one of which is of sufficient volume to require all of his time, but which in the aggregate make up an important and responsible position. The former marshal was born on the town site, and he knew everybody, and everybody knew him. How could he arrest anybody for a violation of the town ordinances? Why, the idea!

The town never gets particularly good, nor does it get particularly bad. It moves along at the same old pace, regardless of city ordinances that affect the personal atmosphere of the old home town. Luray was up against that very proposition. Describing its solution, O. I. Stevenson, city clerk, said:

"Here we are—a small country town of 500, situated in the wheat belt of west central Kansas. Luray probably is no better nor no worse than the average country town of its size with the same natural surroundings. Of course, out here everybody knows everybody else, and all are neighbors.

"There is almost no social distinction. But, as is the case in every town, large or small, there are two elements. One is known as the 'roughnecks' and the other usually as the law and order element.

"In our little town we have always had some difficulty in enforcing our ordinances, owing to the fact that our marshal has been one of our own townsmen, and everybody knew him. As all were his neighbors, he wouldn't do anything unless they got pretty bad. We found that some of the people would go further in even little things if they had no officer except a neighbor whom they called by his first name because he would be slow in taking any action against them.

"Then we tried getting along without a marshal, but that didn't work at all. Finally we thought of advertising for a man. We put a little want ad. in the Sunday edition of the Kansas City Star, and I received forty replies. We selected a man who came here personally and applied for the position. We pay him $65 a month. He has had experience in police work and in the secret service department of railways.

"His duties are many and varied. We have a municipal water system, and he looks after that and collects the water rent. He acts as street commissioner, tax collector and peace officer. The job takes up so much of his time that he doesn't have opportunity to pitch horseshoes or go fishing.

"In other words, we plan that this one man shall do about all the actual work the town requires—except the team work on the streets. If he is versatile enough to do all these in a satisfactory manner we will have found the solution to the problem that has troubled the town council."

Efficient Civic Survey.

The civic survey made not long ago by the Washington (Pa.) board of trade through the boy scouts of that city resulted in securing more than 3,000 detailed reports on the sanitary condition throughout the city, says the American City.

A boy scout captain was assigned to each city ward. The captains divided the wards into sections and placed four boys in each section, with a squad leader in charge of them. The offer of circus tickets to the boys in each squad who returned the most complete and accurate reports formed some incentive to them to do good work. A civic service medal was given to the ward captain who conducted the most systematic survey in the city.

Prior to the day of inspection considerable publicity was given to the fact that such a survey would be made. Insanitary and unhealthful conditions were in each case reported to the board of health, but there was much cleaning up the day before because of the fear of being reported. The total cost of the survey to the board of trade was $10, and its results were most satisfactory.

Running From a Fortune

By EDWARD T. STEWART

"John," said the chief of the detective bureau to which I was attached, "here is a very singular case. I have a letter from a party in London asking me to discover a man who is hiding not because he is a criminal, but because he is wanted to enter upon the possession of a fine estate."

It was indeed a singular case. Ralph Thornton, a son of John Thornton, a wealthy manufacturer of Birmingham, England, had come to America in flight from justice, or, rather, injustice. A crime had been committed which had been fixed on him. The circumstantial evidence against him was so strong that his attorney advised him to vanish. He accepted the advice and, though absolutely innocent, sailed in disguise for New York and never made known to any one in England into what part of the country he had drifted. The real criminal had been tried and convicted for another offense and had confessed that he was the guilty one in the crime of which Ralph Thornton had been accused. Ralph's father had meanwhile died and left him all his property.

The trouble in finding Thornton was that he would naturally suppose that any one looking for him would arrest him. Therefore it was necessary to approach him not by ordinary detective methods. I was furnished with a description of his person and informed that he was a university graduate and a scholarly man. I was also given the letter from London stating that he had been exonerated.

I spent a long while in finding out that he had gone to Colorado and engaged in mining there. On leaving England his father had given him £2,000, so I judged he was in fairly easy circumstances and expected to find him, if indeed I did find him, operating a mine.

Proceeding to Denver, I went from there up into the gold mining country on Clear creek, stopping at Empire, where there were a number of stamp mills. There I procured a list of all the men who had invested capital in mining interests and made inquiries concerning every one of them, satisfying myself that my man was not among them. However, I secured information of an Englishman who had been at Georgetown, farther up in the mountains, about the time Thornton came to America and who had sunk all his money in mines. He called himself Thomas Gregory.

Proceeding to Georgetown, I made inquiry for Gregory and learned that the last known of him he had turned wandering prospector. There seemed nothing to do but hunt him up, but it would be like looking for a needle in a haystack, and even if I found him I had no assurance that he was my quarry.

While considering what to do I was sitting one morning on the porch of the hotel reading a local paper. At that time the Venezuela matter with England that was handled so resolutely by President Cleveland was attracting attention, and I read in the paper an article written with a view to giving the British side. There were several Latin quotations in it, and it seemed to me rather the work of a scholar than a statesman. Without any definite object in view, I went to the office of the journal and asked who wrote the article. I was told that it had been sent in from a mining camp in the vicinity, but that was all the editor knew about it. I went to the camp and found there a man working with a pick and shovel whose appearance belied his calling. His accent was that of a well bred Englishman. He called himself Bill Anderson.

I talked about the article I had read in the Georgetown paper, condemning it bitterly as a British argument against the Monroe doctrine, watching Anderson to observe the effect my tirade had upon him. I could see that I was riling him, but he maintained silence.

"I've been told," I said, "that some one in this camp wrote that article."

Anderson shot a suspicious glance at me.

"Whoever wrote it is a university man," I continued. "Miners don't quote Latin."

Anderson turned and was stalking away through a thick growth of trees. I was not sure that he was my man, but I was sure he wished to escape me. I feared that if I let him go I might not get him again. It would be impossible to get in the fact that I wanted him for his advantage. I must take him by proceeding as if he were a criminal.

"You! Anderson!" I shouted. "I want you."

He turned, drew a revolver from his hip and fired at me, the bullet singing near my ear, then turned and ran like a deer. I followed him and saw him go into a cabin. I called to the others who were following me to help me capture him without bloodshed. They consented to surround the cabin on condition that I would make good my claim to him under the law. I promised. When the circle had been completed I sent one of the men to him with the letter that had been received from England. Then I waited to learn if I had the right or the wrong man.

Presently the two came out of the cabin, Anderson's, or, rather, Thornton's, face aglow with a pleasurable excitement. He advanced to me with a "Thank God I missed you," extended his hand and acknowledged himself to be Ralph Thornton.

He went east with me and sailed on the next steamer for England.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

Plain Blue Gingham Well Handled.

For a design that is neat and practical, nothing excels this frock of plain blue gingham. Its cost can easily be limited to half a dollar.

Here is a convincing argument that the material need not be expensive if it is well handled. Three and a quarter yards of plain blue gingham at fifteen cents a yard, make this dress. The yoke and pockets may be omitted, if desired, but they add wonderfully tto the smart effect of the design. The long one-piece sleeves are gathered tot a pointed cuff, while the four-piece skirt closes at the left front under one of its box plaits.

The work of putting the dress together has been minimized to the utmost, as the construction guide will show. If pockets are used, first stitch on the front of the waist, upper edges along crossline of small "o" perforations. Next sew strap to lower edge of yoke, notches and small "o" perforations even. Adjust yoke to position on front, corresponding edges even, and fasten with a button and buttonhole. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem in front at notches. Plait lower edge of front and back placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations. Adjust 1 inch belting to position underneath lower edge of waist for a stay.

Finish the neck with the round collar, sewing to the edge, single large "O" perforations and center-backs even.

Next, close the sleeve seam as notched. Close seam of cuff as notched, line and sew to sleeveband as notched, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeveband. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing any fulness.

To make the skirt, slash the front gore to the left of center-front along double "oo" perforations for opening. Join gores as notched. Turn hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations. From box-plaits, creasing on slot perforations, bring folded edges to corresponding small "o" perforations and press. Sew to lower edge of front and back, center-fronts and center-backs even.

Adjust the belt to position as illustrated and finish with pearl buttons.

A LONDON SPEAKER

The Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell in Relief Work.

DAUGHTER OF A QUAKERESS.

Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell has left her English work, schools for mothers, in the hands of the Duchess of Marlborough in order to make a two months' flying trip to the United States on behalf of the suffering women and children of Europe. Mrs. Russell is at present speaking in Atlantic seaboard cities about "Why English Women Need the Vote In Time of War."

She has been a lifelong suffrage worker and made her first speech in the Yellowstone National park when she was only sixteen. For, in spite of her present English position, Mrs. Russell is an American woman, the daughter of a famous Quakeress of Pennsylvania, Hannah Whitall Smith, one of the great suffrage pioneers of America and friend of Frances Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Hannah Whitall Smith was well known to the last generation as a religious writer and social reformer. Mrs. Russell entered Bryn Mawr in its first class in 1885, the year it opened. After her graduation she worked for temperance under the training of her mother's two friends, the latter training coming after her marriage in England to Hon. Bertrand Russell, the philosopher.

THE HON. MRS. BERTRAND RUSSELL.

Mrs. Russell began the schools for mothers, for which she is widely known, in 1907, after she had studied similar social experiments in Ghent. She and a group of Englishwomen have carried on this training of mothers before and after the birth of their children, in order to decrease the great infant mortality in the congested parts of London.

At the outbreak of the war the suffrage societies of the British isles turned themselves into relief agencies, the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies being the society with which Mrs. Russell has worked. It has maintained hospital units, cottage homes for babies and help for toiling mothers, establishing labor bureaus through England and teaching efficiency to girls who have been called upon to fill new posts.

CUTS OF MEAT.

It Is Necessary to Know Muscle Structure.

DIFFERENT PARTS NAMED.

Some Expert Help For Young Housewives Who Have Not Yet Learned How to Cook Cheap Meats In the Most Nourishing, Tempting Way.

It would seem that the last word had been said on cheaper cuts of meat. But the increase in the high cost of living makes the meat problem still as tough (no pun) as ever.

What are the much maligned and equally much praised cuts called "cheaper?" To know this we must know the architecture of the animal in question. First, the most tender pieces are the less exposed parts of the animal. Whatever portions are subjected to muscular exercise (thus the loin) are tougher because the muscles have been used more. This does not mean that there is not as much nourishment in tough muscles as in tender ones. The cheaper cuts have tougher fibers, and the whole problem is to prepare and soften the fibers and thus put them on a par with more tender parts. The muscles of the abdomen are also tender, but give a very coarse meat.

The structure of the muscle fiber must be studied in order to apply the best methods of cooking. Each fiber is like a thin section of orange, being surrounded with a firm tissue and containing juice within. If we cut the fiber across the juice will escape. If we heat the fiber in a high temperature we will harden it still more and prevent the escape of juices. If we cut it and soak it in water the juices again will escape. But if we pour scalding water or liquid on the fiber it will have much the same effect as heating it rapidly to a high point.

Now, the ideal in handling all cheaper cuts is first to harden the fiber either by pouring on boiling water or by heating it to a high degree in order to avoid the escape of the juices, and second, to cook it slowly so that the fiber will eventually be very soft, the juices dissolved and the flavor as much as possible retained. None of these meats should be covered at first with cold liquid or cooked slowly before the outside fiber is seared.

What are some of these cuts by name? Perhaps this partial list will give suggestions which your butcher can help you carry out:

Cheaper cuts of beef:

Rump.—Roasts, braising, a la mode, stewing.

Chuck Ribs (1 and 2).—Roast, steak.

Chuck Ribs (last 3).—Stewing, braising.

"Plate."—Soup, stew, rolled pieces.

Brisket.—Corned and pot roast.

"Skirt" Steak.—Rolled, stew.

Plank Steak. — Boiled, stew, a la mode, soup.

Cross Ribs.—Pot roast.

Short Ribs.—Soup, stew, sliced cold.

Cheaper cuts of mutton:

Breast.—Stew, braising, soup.

Neck. — Soup, stew, meat for croquettes, etc.

Veal:

Breast.—Soup, stew, made dishes, veal loaf.

A slow oven, which is also used in cooking other foods, can be used, or, above all, the "fireless cooker," which cooks without heat. Here, too, the fireproof or earthenware dishes can be used to best advantage, for them the food may be cooked and served in the same dish.

SPRING NECKWEAR.

Fichus and Frills Are Coming to the Fore Now.

With a plain satin shirt waist are worn this roll collar and vestee of white georgette crape, down the front of which drapes crisp white net daintily inserted and edged with fine val. The effect is fresh and springy.

A NEW COMBINATION.

Chicken With Peanuts.

Cut a young chicken into small pieces, roll in flour and fry brown in lard or butter. When the chicken is done pour over it a cupful of sweet cream and sprinkle liberally with roasted peanuts put through a meat grinder.

A SPRING DECALOGUE.

Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the Kansas board of health, has just issued a new decalogue, spring of 1916 model. Here it is:

First. Thou shouldst cease thy hibernation and come out in the open, for it is now spring.

Second. Thou shouldst remember the springtime is a good time to clear away the rubbish and waste.

Third.—Thou shalt not permit any fly breeding places on thy premises.

Fourth. — Remember cleanup week and keep it wholly.

Fifth.—Remember thy friends the rake and the hoe, for though they produce weariness of the flesh they also produce strength of arm and good red blood.

Sixth.—Thou shalt dress thyself according to the weather and not according to the almanac.

Seventh.—Thou shalt eat greens and drink an abundance of water to thin the blood, thereby saving thy money usually spent for blood purifiers.

Eighth.—Fret not thyself because of the smudge your neighbor is making in burning his trash.

Ninth.—Thou shalt swat the fly, bat the rat and "raus mit" the mouse.

Tenth.—As the people are so shall the community be. Keep clean.

A WOMAN CIVIC WORKER.

Miss Blanche Geary Labors to Better Living Conditions of Working Girls.

The woman who is doing the most for housing conditions of women and girls in industry in America today is not an American. She is an Englishwoman, Miss Blanche Geary, who gave up a musical career in London because she felt that teaching music to a sort of after dinner society set of pupils wasn't a big enough field for one's whole and best effort. The problem of properly housing the members of society in less fortunate circumstances forced to live in undesirable tenements seemed to her a better service. After four years' volunteer training and experience in managing certain model tenement buildings in London, she heard from an American woman of a homes company in New York and decided to come to America and see what opportunities lay in that field here. It took her some time to convince the company that a woman could take charge of that kind of work, but she succeeded. When she began there were exactly 150 tenants, and in eight years under her management, which included the repairing, hiring of employees, choosing of tenants and the collection of rents, the number had increased to 2,864.

It was in this work that the national board of the Young Women's Christian association found her and came to her for advice on new buildings which they were about to erect. When the national board was ready to add an economic and buildings specialist to its staff Miss Geary was offered that position, and because she saw in it an opportunity for doing for girls throughout the whole country what she had wanted her firm to do in New York city Miss Geary accepted. She is now the consulting specialist for the 976 associations on all matters pertaining to her particular work.

She is called on to help select sites for buildings, to go over all blue print plans, making such changes as she deems advisable for the work to be done, to advise on building materials, cafeteria equipment and management and everything pertaining to the economic status of the association. Her office at headquarters looks like that of the busiest business man. She has the regulation architect's cabinets for materials and plans, and from the blue prints always spread out on her large work table one might call her office an architect's laboratory.

Miss Geary says the association wants to demonstrate the ideal family life, as far as it can be made possible, with large numbers under one roof; it wants to develop a spirit of independence and self government and to grant to the utmost possible extent the freedom which stops short of license—that is, freedom plus standards.

A Safety Forum.

The Portland (Ore.) chamber of commerce has organized the first safety forum to be established in the United States. It is a combination of delegates from the safety commission, employers and employees, and started with a membership of 147. The first meeting was attended by members of firms, foremen and workmen in many of the factories of the city, the department stores and from transportation companies.

The forum will hold quarterly meetings and will discuss and plan safety measures that may be practical and which may conserve life, limbs and property everywhere. Between meetings strong committees will be at work in all occupations where danger exists.

It is considered proper that the first forum in the United States should be organized in Portland, the home of R. F. Boynton, who is universally recognized as the father of safety first. Mr. Boynton was the first to begin a campaign of education along these lines, and from his effort has come the world-wide movement.—Town Development Magazine.

Fish For Lent.

BROILED SMOKED FISH.—Rinse the fish with hot water, dry with a piece of cheesecloth, brush with a little melted butter or olive oil, place in broiler over fire or put in pan in hot oven fifteen minutes, turn two or three times. Dust with a little pepper and chopped parsley and serve very hot.

Smoked Herring or Bloaters.—Scrape the bloater or herring, remove the head and tail, split down the back and remove the entrails. Place fish on buttered pan and put in hot oven fifteen minutes, remove and place on hot platter. Melt a teaspoonful butter with a little onion juice and pour over the fish, or they can be broiled.

Finnan Haddie.—Put into pan, cover with cold water and place on back of range (or simmer) until it comes to a boiling point. Remove the haddie to platter (that can be put in oven), dust with salt and pepper and put a little butter over; put in moderate oven twenty minutes. Garnish with parsley and serve.

Pigs In Blankets.—Take large oysters (allowing four to each person); drain and wrap each one in a very thin slice of bacon and fasten with toothpick through the hard part of oyster. Place in shallow pan in hot oven and bake until the bacon is brown. Have bran bread cut thin and oblong just the size to hold four oysters. Toast in oven and when oysters are done lay them evenly on the bread. Garnish with thin slice of lemon that has been dipped in very finely chopped parsley. A sprig or two of watercress adds to the appearance of the dish. Sauce can be served around the bread.

The sauce can be made by adding a little flour to the pan in which the oysters are baked. Mix well and add a cupful cold milk. Mix and season to taste.

Oyster and Cod Pie.—Flake and remove the bones from cold fresh cooked cod and to each cupful of fish allow six oysters and half a cupful of stock mixed with a tablespoonful oyster juice. After seasoning to taste pour into a dish and bake, with a thin crust of paste on top. In place of the crust a layer of mashed potatoes may be used.

Another good fish salad can be made with one salt herring and six Bermuda potatoes. Boil the potatoes in their skins, let them get cold and slice fine. Then wash off the herring, peel it of skin and shred it in fine, short strips. Mix the fish and potato and then dress with olive oil, vinegar, salt, pepper, adding a tablespoonful of finely chopped chives.

The Red Geranium City.

Waterloo, Ia., will soon be known as "the red geranium city of the world." Beds of red geraniums are being planted on each electrolier post in the downtown district of the city, and a campaign has been instigated to induce business men generally to have window boxes of red geraniums in their store and office windows. To further the idea it is proposed to adopt the red geranium as an insignia for business and private stationery.

Carranza Delays End of Mexican Crisis

El Paso—Last Monday night the United States was on the very brink of war with Mexico. Today there is every reason to believe that the crisis has been averted and that the two governments will, within twenty-four hours, reach an agreement involving loss of dignity or prestige to neither.

This metamorphosis is the direct result of the meeting last Tuesday between General Alvaro Obregon, General Hugh L. Scott and Arthur J. McQuatters, president of the Alvarado Mining Company. A plain, friendly talk seems to have accomplished what weeks of diplomatic exchanges could not bring about.

The United States has accepted the tentative terms reached by the conferrees. General Carranza, nominal head of the de facto government of Mexico, has sent word to General Obregon that the agreement is in the main satisfactory to him, but asking for more light on certain points. This additional information was sent to him last night and there is no reason to believe that he will obstruct the negotiations.

As a matter of fact, American officials are satisfied with the acceptance of General Obregon and the military leaders who are loyal to him. It is fully appreciated that they are the real power [illegible] today and that what they say goes.

As a matter of form General Carranza's consent must be obtained to anything that finally is settled on, but it is unlikely that in the present condition of things in Mexico he will run counter to the military. His final answer is expected tomorrow. There then will be a formal meeting with General Scott and General Funston, representing the United States, and General Obregon, General Trevino and Andreas Garcia, Mexican Consul, representing Mexico.

The agreement will be worked into shape and signed. General Scott will then return to Washington, General Funston will go back to San Antonio, Texas, and General Obregon and the members of his staff will start south.

For a time, it is hoped, the Mexican situation will remain quiet. There is constant danger, however, of an uprising led by hotheads, who cannot be convinced that the United States is not in the mortal fear of Mexico's military prowess.

WOULDN'T SPOIL HIS FINGERS

Artistic Hands, Out of a Job, Refuses to Shovel Coal.

Montclair, N. J.—If a man has "piano fingers" and is offered a job on a coal wagon should he accept the job to support his wife and six children, or should a philanthropic society place him in some position where his digital refinement would not be affected by manual labor?

This is one of the questions propounded in the annual report of Mrs. Nettie E. Patterson, superintendent of the Altruist society. Mrs. Patterson mentions the case in referring to the difficulties that confront the society. She said that a man when offered a place on the coal wagon refused, saying he had been told he had "piano fingers" and did not wish to spoil them.

UNABLE TO FIND A WIFE.

Farmer Has Been Searching Sixteen Years, but So Far Has Failed.

Bridgeport, Conn.—Joseph Cronan, a farmer of Derby, announced that he had searched forty-two states and two countries of Europe and that, while in a receptive mood, he had not found a girl suitable to be his spouse.

"I am strictly temperate, a healthy and strong farmer, and I have been searching sixteen years for the right kind of a wife," he declared. "I have yet to find the woman, and I wish the newspapers would help me."

MUNICIPAL FLAGS IN UNITED STATES

The gradual adoption of municipal flags by American cities is one of the expressions of a growing civic spirit. The municipal flag has sprung into use through the need for appropriate and uniform decorations of streets and buildings on public ceremonial occasions. It has usually been adopted at that period in the city's history when municipal life has assumed something of a triumphal aspect. New and dormant energies as well as new ambitions are stimulated at such a time into active forces.

Between thirty and forty American cities of over 30,000 population are listed as possessing municipal flags. The usual method of obtaining a suitable design for a flag has been by open competition. The judgment of the municipal art commission is frequently sought before the design is finally accepted.

The occasion for the adoption of a municipal flag by the city of Wilkesbarre was the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the incorporation of the city as a borough in 1806. The adoption of a municipal flag in Kansas City was an outward manifestation of civic pride after the building of its new Union station. In Baltimore Mayor Preston signed the ordinance adopting a municipal flag in order that the city might have some emblem representative of its power and achievement on the occasion of the centennial celebration of the composition of the "Star Spangled Banner," which was held in Baltimore in 1914. The municipal flag of New York city was dedicated on June 24, 1915, at a public celebration in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of municipal government under the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of New York as successors in office of the burgomasters and schepens of the city of New Amsterdam.

The ordinance establishing a city flag for Baltimore provides that it shall be of the black and gold colors of Lord Baltimore, the founder of Maryland. These colors "were brought ashore with much solemnitie" by the first settlers of Maryland upon their landing 280 years ago and were continually used in the province of Maryland until the Revolutionary war. Upon these colors of the flag is superimposed a shield showing Battle monument, erected in memory of the defenders of the city of Baltimore against the British during the war of 1812.

The cities possessing municipal flags in most instances have their respective city seals or coats of arms emblazoned upon the colors. Philadelphia requires that the city arms which appear upon the city seal shall be placed upon the civic flag or standard and that they shall also appear upon the city ensign, the city pennant and the city streamer.

The seal upon Camden's city flag contains the coat of arms of Lord Camden.

The Harrisburg city flag bears upon its center a white keystone, the state emblem of Pennsylvania, the keystone having upon it the dome of the new state capitol rising from the clouds.

The seal of New York city appears upon the flag of that city.

The city seal appears also on the flags of Boston, New Rochelle, Richmond, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, Atlantic City, Schenectady, Reading, San Francisco, Toledo, Erie, Buffalo, Providence, Springfield, Mass.; York, Pa., and New Haven.—American City.

STANDARD PRICES AID COMPETITION

The Stephens Bill Encourages Rivalry in Quality.

REAL BENEFIT TO PUBLIC.

False Pretense In Merchandising as Practiced by Big City Stores Is Method Used to Injure Small Dealers and to Destroy Small Towns—Dishonesty Can't Benefit Consumers.

The true competition is between rival articles, a competition in excellence, which can never be maintained if, through the perfidy of the retailer who cuts prices for his own ulterior purposes, the manufacturer is forced to compete in prices with goods of his own production, while the retailer recoups his losses on the cut price by the sale of other articles at, or above, their reasonable price. IT IS A FALLACY TO ASSUME THAT THE PRICE CUTTER POCKETS THE LOSS. THE PUBLIC MAKES IT UP ON OTHER PURCHASES. Fixing the price on all brands of high grade flour is a very different thing from fixing the price on one brand of high grade flour. The one means destruction of all competition and of all incentive to increased excellence. The other means heightened competition and intensified incentive to increased excellence.

This language, used by the supreme court of the state of Washington in a unanimous decision of the case of the Fisher Flouring Mills Co. versus C. A. Swanson, clearly sets forth the interest the consumer has in maintaining the highest form of competition—that of quality. Competition in price results in inferior quality and the evil of substitution. Dishonest advertisers use cut prices on standard and widely known merchandise to lure customers into their establishments, where an effort will be made to sell anonymous goods.

The genuine bargain is used as "bait" to spread the impression that all merchandise is sold at the same low margin of profit. If this impression can be created the cut rate merchant can sell unknown goods at as high a figure as his conscience will permit him to charge—and his conscience is elastic. Nearly every man's is more or less so where profits are concerned.

A Bill to Protect the Public.

Representative Dan V. Stephens of Nebraska and Senator William F. Ashurst of Arizona have introduced in congress "a bill to protect the public against dishonest advertising and false pretenses in merchandising." A similar measure was introduced in the last congress by Representative Stevens of New Hampshire.

It ought to be axiomatic that the public cannot profit through dishonesty or through false pretenses. The individual may make a pecuniary gain; thieves, burglars and confidence men occasionally escape paying the penalty of their crimes and are pecuniarily better off. But the public, the victims of the successful criminals, loses.

The Stephens-Ashurst bill provides for standard and uniform prices on articles sold under a trademark or special brand, with the widest possible publicity for buyers and sellers. Opponents of the bill—adherents of dishonest advertising and users of false pretenses in merchandising—have declared that it will encourage monopoly and prevent competition. They have tried to make consumers believe that it will increase the cost of living, that it will raise the price of everything sold in any sort of store.

No Monopoly Possible.

The bill does not encourage monopoly, because producers who have a monopoly of any particular line or who make an agreement with a competitor to maintain prices are barred from taking advantage of the privilege of preventing discrimination by contracting for the resale of their goods at uniform prices. A monopoly, no matter how it is gained, cannot do business under the terms of the Stephens bill.

On the other hand, cutthroat competition in price has always been the chief weapon of monopoly.

The bill will not raise prices and increase the cost of living. Producers already have the right to sell their goods at wholesale at any price they can get, at what they are worth. The proposed legislation merely permits the producer to control the retail price, and if he puts this too high—higher than the public is willing to pay—then his goods will not be sold and he loses.

The cut price storekeeper that sells goods at a loss does not stand the loss; he passes it on to his customers. What he loses on one article is made up, or more than made up, on another. The use of cut prices on standard articles for the purpose of drawing customers into the store with the intention of selling them something else, that is where "dishonest advertising" is found and where "false pretenses in merchandising" injures the public.

Cut rates by big department stores enable them to kill off the small store and the small towns. Those residents of rural communities, villages and the lesser cities who want to see their home folks injured that the large cities may grow richer and larger should naturally oppose the Stephens bill. Those who desire to see their own vicinities prosper should support the principle of uniform standard prices.

delay is because we imagine we have plenty of time in the future. We need not think about serious things and be religious until we grow older. And many people seem to imagine that God intended religion only for the old people. But Solomon tells us, a man who had seen the world, and had given up the world for God, that youth is the time to become a christian. Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them.

Some people think that the only time we should think about God, is when we are lying upon a bed of sickness, or when the shadows of death begin to fall cold and damp on our path. And this is the only time some people think about God. wWhen they are sick they want the minister to pray for them and visit them and comfort them, but if they get well they never darken a church door or have anything to do with religion. Sometimes we hear the remark. Well if we are going to have a good time we must have it when we are young. My dear friend, What do you consider a good time- What is happiness? Sowing wild oats? Going places you could not take Christ with you, doing things you would not like your parents to know about? If this is the height of your ambition, I have nothing to say. But I beseech you in the name of Christ, be not deceived. God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. If we sow to the esh, we shall reap corruption. But if we sow to the spirit, we shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.

Now, my friends, there are some reasons why we should make this decision, and take Christ as our Savior and Master. One reason for accepting Christ is because He is our redeemer, our friend, our helper, our commander and our God. Christ is our only hope of forgiveness and acceptance and we should yield ourselves to Him and live in His service. There is nothing to wait for. No season will be more convenient than the present season. And every time is the right time to do the right thing. Do it now because delay will rob you of blessings, and if you feel that you will accept Christ sometime, it is foolishness for you to wait. You need Christ and you know it. During this past week I heard of a conversion that was rather peculiarf. A man in a certain community had scoffed at the church and ridiculed the religion of Jesus Christ. He would have nothing to do with these things. A few weeks ago, God laid that man upon a bed of sickness. His views were changed and one week ago he sent a message to the church asking the pastor and elders to come to his home and help him to find Jesus. He realized his lost condition without Christ, and he knew Jesus was essential to his salvation. And so Christ is essential to the salvation of every individual in this world. Come now my friends, this is thec onvenient season. Christ died to save. The angel of God will rejoice when you come, and now is the apointed time. Today if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts,

"THE YELLOW PASSPORT" AT THE QUIRK TODAY

From its first scenes depicting a fassacre at Kiev, Russia, by the dread "Black Hundreds," the story of "The Yellow Passport'.' grips the spectators with tense fingers.

Her family destroyed in the massacre and herself persecuted by the leader of the murderous bandn, Sonia Sokoloff, in desperation, obtains from the police a license such as is issued to the Russian women of the night. With this license as her protection she endures the ignominy of living as a supposedly immoral woman, while in reality leading a pure life.

At last she succeeds in escaping the vigilance of her arch-persecutor and comes to America to pursue her operatic ambitions.

Success, wealth and love come to her hand, but just as her figers are about to close upon her happiness the long arm of circumstance stretches forth to snatch it away. Her lover and his family discover the secret of the "Yellow Passport."

In the end Sonia triumphs, but not until her soul has been racked with the torture of suspicion and false assucation.

Cut prices were used to establish the Oil and Tobacco trusts, and they are being used now to establish merchandise trusts, to enable Big Business to control all retail trade. The Stephens standard price bill will protect the consumer by preventing such a condition. It will protect the smaller cities and towns from cut-throat competition of the big city dishonest advertisers.

Charities Department Without Funds--Commissioner Must Turn Applicants Away; $1500 Appropriation Inherited to Fill Demands of $6000

The city department presided over by James R. Somers as Commisioner of Charities, is without funds to continue its work. The Commissioner was approached yesterday for aid by persons whom he deemed deserving. At the present time there are about forty persons dependent upon the city for their living, and these, in the opinion of the Commissioner, may so far as the city is concerned, starve.

It may be that the Commissioner takes the worst view possible of the situation, forgetting that, in this land of "milk and honey" there is enough sustenance for all and then some, provided we have faith. At any rate, the Commissioner deems the present situation serious, and that no time should be lost in coming to the rescue of his department—at once. If the needed relief cannot be made to appear permanent, then temporary measures should be taken, says the official, to prevent actual suffering.

Mr. Somers issues the following statement concerning the situation:

"To the Citizens of the City of Fulton:—

"The Charity Department of the city of Fulton has the munificent balance of $2.58 to its credit, to conduct business and dispense charity in the city of Fulton until the month of October, 1916, when considerable revenue will then be obtained from the moneys due by operation of the Excise Law.

"This state of affairs has been occasioned by the management of prior administrations, instituting and providing a budget of $1500 to cover the expense of that department for the entire year of 1916. That sum is entirely out of proportion to the ever-increasing necessities of the poor, which are incident to the lack of work and the prevailing high rents and the increased cost of the bare necessities of life.

"The Charities Department is therefore obliged to suspend giving aid to poor persons and the Commissioner requests those, who are recipients of the city's bounty, to seek elsewhere for aid and sustenance.

"This intolerable and lamentable condition is ascribed to the loose and uncertain methods of previous administrations, in the conduct of the business surrounding this department, in that, when the funds in that department were in need of replenishing, the method of transferring funds from other departments was resorted to, and the Poor Fund thereby increased to make up any shortage or deficit.

"This condition does not obtain with the present administration, as each department is operated with its own funds, present or accruing. The foresight of the prior administration is amazing and evidently was somewhat dimmed, when no precaution was made for the constant outlay and no provision made to supply additional money to take care of the poor. Whether this parsimonious treatment accorded the present administration by those in power at some prior time, was a deliberate effort to stifle and cripple their successors and the Charity Department is a matter of conjecture. The Charity Department has no income and the purpose of the Department is to expend money for laudable purposes hence the necessity of an increased Budget.

"Each and every budget, particularly the school and lighting, were amply provided for and it is apparent, that the prior administrations had in view, the fact, that education and light were more important, than the silly notion of eating and sustaining life.

"The importance of this department should not and cannot be overlooked as regards money to operate the same, because the very existence of the poor and decrepit depend upon the judgment and charity of the persons who have it within their power to grant the money necessary to sustain life, when occasion demands that imperative necessity.

"Money has been indiscriminately used for other purposes, and to deny ample funds for a department with no income and constant outlay, would seem to be the height of folly and indicate an inferior order of political intelligence.

"How long this moneyless condition will continue is speculative and the charitable public are advised to use the most unlimited benevolence and personally aid those persons who may apply for assistance.

"All persons who were and expect hereafter to be the recipients of bounty of the Charities Department of this city are likewise advised not to depend upon aid from the Department on account of the exhaustion of funds sufficient to meet the demands of the department. (Signed)

JAMES R. SOMERS,
Commissioner of Charities.

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

People's views are as numerous as the sands of the seashore, and there are no two alike, and the unlikeness in every case is made of some little physical circumstance of experience. A man thinks out of the fullness of his own heart, and out of the intimacy of his own experience, all of which is perfectly natural; but it probably does not touch the universal heart or the universal experience. The world may exercise better judgment than he himself does in determining what of himself is worth while, and what is not. What is truth to one is not truth to another.

People's opinions are as varied as their forms or their faces, and are formed of the same logic that created these. Take a company of, say, twenty-five people, and it will soon be found that they all hold divergent views upon almost any topic that is suggested. But if that divergence were closely analyzed, it would be found to be the creation of varied circumstances, incidents, predictions, sympathies or antipathies, that are quite distinct from the bottom truth involved in the discussion. Now, if all these incidental things were brushed aside, and the company would get down to the basic truth concerning the matter, there would be a substantial agreement. There is no disagreement about the truth when it is reached, for the truth is the fact of the soul, that is recognized by every sincere person.

It is a most humiliating thing for a company, a community, a nation, to be torn up by futile controversy, when it is absolutely known that the whole fight is over temperament and glimpses of things. The divine spirit is outside of every controversy in forum, in court, in pulpit, in society. The more animated the argument, the more earnest the contestant the farther away he is from the truth. This supreme fact mankind has been ignoring from the beginning. It doesn't try to find out what God tells the soul. He will tell it as soon as we throw aside our tempers and biases and become friends. The law of all truth is love, not hate. No two people can see things exactly the same.

You who read this little talk have things locked up in your brain that nobody else on earth has or ever has had, and you hold the key too. Out of the millions of human beings that God has created, nobody has ever yet discovered a duplicate human being. Every human being is an original.

It is a good thing to get out of the tangled underbrush of thought which is so common in the thinking of today.

We dislike to make excuses; we of course, know that they are the verbal salves our consciences demand for some neglected duty. When they count for so little beside admission of our back-sliding why do we persist, not only in making them, but in making them necessary?

And when we think of excuses let us consider not only those we make other people but those we make ourselves. We are constantly deluding ourselves with them, our laziness, tardiness, forgetfulness, carelessness all have a liberal coating of excuses. And while we do not actually fool ourselves, any more than we fool others, we do in time benumb our senses of right and unless we are aroused to a full realization of what a drug the excuse habit is, we will become absolute slaves. Let us resolve to "cut out" excuses and when our first failure to come to time tempts us to revert to the old washy apology let us grit our teeth, withhold the world and make a mighty effort to make the need of excuses few and far between.

"FOLLOW CHRIST AND ALL THINGS WILL BE ADDED UNTO US"–Peacock

Last night the evangelist took his text from Mark 10:21. The sermon was in part as follows:

Mark 10:21—Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest; go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in Heaven; and come, take up the cross, and follow me.

Jesus and this rich young ruler were standing face to face. There was distinction about both of them, the one with a great question in his heart and face and attitude, and the other offering a great opportunity. The one was rich, and well dressed, and carried in his face those unmistakable marks of culture and refinement, and clean living. The other wa a man great and strong, a man of the open air, with a face of strength, with lines in it that men love to see in the face of the man they would follow, the face of a man with a great heart, full of love, strong, gentle, patient and overflowing with love. The one was rich in this world's goods, and possessed everything his heart could wish so far as temporal blessings are concerned, while the other did not place his trust in earthly possessions, but relied upon the spiritual side of life for his happiness and enjoyment.

What Lack I Yet

This rich young man had been reared in a palace, surrounded with all the luxuries thisw orld could afford. He had everything his heart all the luxuries this world could af- with it all, and was seeking something higher and more noble. In all probability his parents were Godly people, and had given him instructions in thew ord of God. He seems to be acquainted with the old testament Prophets, and understood the laws of Moses. But he does not know the secret of finding eternal life. He no doubt had heard Jesus preaching to the multitudes that thronged about Him, and there was a longing desire within him to ask Jesus the way to find life. Gathering all the courage he could muster, he came running, and fell down at the feet of Jesus and said: Good Master, What must I do that I might inherit eternal life? Christ's answer was, Thou knowest the commandments. Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and thy mother. And he answered Him: Master, all these have I observed from my youth, implying the question, What lack I yet?

The Strength of Love

Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest. Go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hadst, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in Heaven, and come, take up the cross, and follow me. And he was sad at the saying, and went away grieved, for he had great earthly possessions.

Jesus had offered this young man three things: A cross, a career, and a character, and He offers the same thing to every young man and woman in the world today. There is no limitation to this glorious offer. High and low, rich and poor, old and young the highly educated, the poorly educated, all have the opportunity to accept. There is no barrier to keep us from entering the Kingdom of Christ, and becoming heirs of His Kingdom, but sin. This may present itself in many different forms, and come to us in many different ways.

We may imagine that we are almost perfect, having made every preparation necessary, having fulfilled every condition, having all the equipment to live the Christ life, but Jesus comes to us and says: One thing thou lackest. He tells us we lack one thing because He loves us, and desires us to be fully prepared. Probably it may seem like a strange thing for Jesus to offes this young man a cross. According to our way of thinking, and of presenting Jesus to men, this would be ab arrier in the way. We would be afraid of driving men and women away from Jesus by

Headed by Phillips' band of Oswego, 300 Odd Fellows marched to the Tabernacle last night, thereby swelling the attendance to 1800 persons, which is considered exceptionally good considering weather conditions. The collections totalled $56.03. The Rebekahs had fifty of its members in line. The Lysander delegation failed to appear because of the bad weather. Forty-six persons hit the trail and Mr. Warth and Miss Painter delighted the audience by singing "The Heart That Was Broken for Me."

Three services will occur tomorrow, the G. A. R. and allied organizations attending in the forenoon. The afternoon meeting, at 2:30, will be for men only. A special sermon, "Chickens Come Home to Roost," will be the feature. There will be a meeting at 2:30 o'clock in the Presbyterian Church for women only, with Miss Speer and Miss Painter in charge. Another meeting will be held at the Tabernacle Wednesday night for women only.

ASQUITH TO FALL IN FOUR MONTHS.

Washington—Officials of this Government have received from London information, that within four months there will be a new Ministry in Great Britain.

David Lloyd George, it was declared, will be the new Premier, and Mr. Asquith will not be included in the new Ministry. Lloyd George, according to the information received here, will associate with himself principally Tories.

The reason for dropping Mr. Asquith was said to be a "purpose to substitute statemanship for politics during the remainder of the war, and to have a statesman at the head of the Government when the peace conference is held."

MEN'S BODIES DIE; THEIR SOULS LIVE ON

One hundred and thirteen years ago there occurred an uprising in Ireland strikingly similar in its plan and its result to that which has just ended.

Instead of voyaging by stealth from Germany to Ireland the leader of that other uprising voyaged by stealth from France. Instead of encouragement and arms supplied by Germany encouragement and arms were supplied to the United Irishmen in 1803 by France. But otherwise the two undertakings were extraordinarily alike in plan and purpose.

Arms had been gathered secretly, and it was agreed that the Dublin contingent should seize the English Viceroy, the Castle and the public buildings. At the same moment the men o fthe secret society were to rise in the counties and march upon Dublin.

The expected help failed to come from France, the contingents from the counties were misled by false reports of informers and secret agents, the uprising in Dublin was quickly put down, and eight weeks later the young leader of the rebellion was given a mock trial, in which he had been betrayed in advance by his counsel, the infamous and adhorred Leonard MacNally, and was hanged as a felon upon the common gallows.

Men said then, as men say now, that rebellion was crushed forever, and the base and mean and cowardly in spirit exulted with abusive words and insulting cartoons above the dead then, even as the base and mean and cowardly in spirit exult above the dead today.

But Robert Emmet did not die that day his body was hanged upon the gallows tree.

He lives yet, and will live forever while there beats a manly heart or dwells an intrepid soul in the breast of a free man anywhere in all the wide world.

Still his courageous voice speaks hope to the oppressed and defiance to tyranny.

Though his body has long mouldered in theg rave, his soul goes marching on.

And now the hands of the executioners have given Ireland other names to link with that of Emmet, have sent other souls to march with Emmet's soul, have added others to the bright list of the brave and hapless who have died for freedom's dear and holy sake.

Surely the oppressors and tyrants of this world must some time learn that the surest way to feed the flame of liberty burning on the hidden altars of an oppressed people's hearts and souls is to pour upon that flame the blood of martyrs.

If we mistake not the teachings and verdicts of history, the executions which seem to have smothered in blood the aspirations of Irishmen for the liberty and independence of Ireland have made that liberty and that independence as certain to come as is the rising of tomorrow's sun.

All the conciliatory and mediatory work of enlightened statesmanship for forty years past has been overthrown at a single blow.

The execution of the captive rebel leaders automatically and inevitably defeated its own revengeful purpose.

In the very instant of their deaths rebellion was crowded and glorified with the halo of martyrdom.

These plain men, but yesterday nameless and unknown, suddenly put on the immortality of heroes and entered into the company of the deathless ones who in all ages have been chosen to die for their people.

Magnanimity and mercy would have gone far to heal the empire's wound. Every dictate of sound sense and wise statesmanship counselled such a course. Instead, a few captives who could do no possible harm in prison are shot dead, and the very name of England is henceforth abhorrent to millions of the empire's unwilling subjects.

We doubt that all the humiliations, disasters and defeats of twenty inglorious months have so emphasized the lack of wise and far-sighted leadership in England as has this stupid and fatally harmful execution of the captive leaders of poor Ireland's desperate and hopeless effort to achieve liberty and independence.

The conquerors have crowned the vanquished with victory and made of these poor prisoners an invisible army that can never be beaten—a moral force which in the long run will be invincible.

So these dead, who so wholly failed of their purpose living, will command success from their graves.

Peace to their ashes!

Let that be their benediction until, in a happier time, Ireland writes with pride and rejoicing another and a more triumphant epitaph above their mortal dust.—N. Y. American.

DO YOU KNOW THE MAN?

Gilbert Murray, in one of his beautiful writings says: "Life becomes, as the stoics more than once tell us, like a play which is acted or a game played with counters. Viewed from the outside, these counters are valueless; but to those engaged in the game their importance is paramount. What really and ultimately matters is that the game shall be played as it should be played. God, the eternal dramatist, has cast you for some part in his drama and hands you the role. It may turn out that you are cast for a triumphant king * * *."

Murray's beautiful language is called to mind by the news of an incident in real life—right at home. It is that of a business man who is today a king triumphant, and whose action that won for him this modest recognition recalls to mind the deeds of valiant princes. We regret our inability to publish his name, but after all, what would be the use, as deeds such as his cannot be hidden, no matter how much one may try. No one need go abroad telling the story, it will carry on the wings of the wind.

This man, this prince of men, was handed his role through the adversity of a neighbor. He accepted it and he performed it well. In doing so he increased the membership of the Big Brotherhood. It was the action of his free and conscious will that led him to proffer the hand of sympathy and a willingness to help his former competitor in distress.

God bless this one of Fulton's princes.

Opinions

OR, PERHAPS, THAT THEY DO KNOW

Just about the most ludicrous feature of the present political situation is that presented by the cry that Mr. Justice Hughes is unknown. This cry is raised in democratic circles where there exists a wholesome fear of Mr. Hughes—not because he is unknown but because he is too well known—and by a little handful of republicans whose purposes are just as clear as are those of their democratic collaborators in the cachinnatory chorus. These are old time republican "bosses," few in number, but capable of making much noise.

For these busy persons the unknown quantity in the Hughes situation is not the Americanism of Mr. Hughes, not the republicanism of Mr. Hughes, not how Mr. Hughes stands on any of the issues before the people. It is that they do not know where they stand with Mr. Hughes. —N. Y. Herald.

BACK TO THE EAST MOVEMENT

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican declares that less is now heard than formerly about abandoned farms in Massachusetts and other Eastern states Something like a definite "back from the West" movement has set in, and the socalled abandoned farms of New England are rapidly being taken up by people who find profit in their cultivation under modern methods. The Republican also pays this deserved compliment to Empire State farms:

Over in New York State there would appear to be more farm land available for purchase. A statement by the Commissioner of Agriculture shows an increasing demand for farms, and that the inquiries come largely from the West, where agricultural opportunities are supposed to be most inviting. We are told that improved roadways, good markets, advanced methods of cultivation and of treating the soil, promising larger returns to the farmer, are among the influences that are turning attention to agriculture in the Empire State. The Commissioner reports that inquiries about New York farms come from prospective buyers in Wisconsin, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Nebraska, Indiana, South Dakota, and Washington. The new interest in rural life which is manifested in that state, as well as in Massachusetts, is a good deal responsible for the growing appreciation of the fact that there are excellent chances for profitable living on the farms. People who have grown weary of the flat country of the West can be made to look longingly upon the hills and streams that easterners tend to undervalue.

This view of land conditions and agricultural opportunities, in the rehabilitation of long-used farm lands in the state of New York, is abundantly sustained by the practical tests in the self-restoration of depleted soils, in all parts of the state, carried on during thep ast five years by Frederick MacNair, an experienced farmer of Elmira.— Rochester Chronicle and Democrat.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In San Diego, a mass meeting at the Panama California International Exposition adopted resolutions condemning the "unfair action" of the House of Representatives' Judiciary Committee in blocking the passage of the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment.

In Bergen County, New Jersey, the month of April beheld the strange spectacle of a sheriff distanced in a race to recapture, an escaped prisoner by his under-sheriff, a woman, who not only jumped into the Hackensack River to make her capture, but proved anew the efficiency of woman in political office.

In the last five presidential elections not one equal suffrage state has gone steadily for any party; a change of 9 per cent of the total vote would have thrown the election to the other party as far back as 1896; these and similar facts form the data with which the Congressional Union equipped its speakers sent out on the Suffrage Special to address mass meetings in all the equal suffrage states.

The object of this trip is to arouse the western women voters to a sense of the political power of even a small group working together. The formation of a Woman Voters Party in Chicago in June will be the visible symbol of the success of the mission.

"The arrogance with which men assert that women have a sphere to which they must be confined must be irritating to women of thought and action," said Senator Shafroth in his speech urging the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment in the Senate.

In rebutting the military argument he told the incident of Elisabeth Cady Stanton, who was asked by Horace Greely what she would do in time of war. Her reply was, "I would do exactly as you did in the Civil War, Mr. Greely:. "I would hire a substitute." "I do not believe," added Senator Shafroth, "that the right to vote should depend on the right to kill. No such distinction is made among the men of the nation."

"Since the women in three states seek the franchise at the hands of the voters this year," says the New York Post,"it is of interest to examine the qualifications for voters in the different states. Such a study provides an argument for the suffrage cause." The argument lies in the fact, as noted by the Post that in Indiana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Alabama and Texas an alien by merely declaring his intention to become a citizen can vote at any election. If voting is made so easy for aliens, why make it so difficult for native American women?

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS

President American Society for Thrift

The thing man values most is his freedom—freedom to shape his own career. Yet it is only by the saving of his time or his money today for the wants of tomorrow that he can be free and independent. Civilization is the result of saving. The primitive man did not save. He lived in caves and ate wild fruits, after a time he learned to cultivate the ground and raise grains and vegetables. Then he saw that it would be well to save seed for the next harvest. Thus it came about that men saved and passed on their accumulations and the results of their savings to the next generation and so man became civilized. That is why it is said that a spend thrift is continually a savage and a generation of spendthrifts would throw society back into barbarism.

We as individuals, and, therefore, as a nation, have been woefully extravagant. Our governmental expenditures have increased 400 per cent in the last thirty years. Yet the campaign for thrift is now being carried on so vigorously that thrift is in a fair way to become popular.

People are beginning to realize that if the time should ever come when we could not spend beyond the necessities, when we would have to eat and drink less and curtail our amusements we would be poorly trained for the ordeal, for ordeal it would be to a people, who spend as they go.

Systematic savings is what counts. Ten young men in Kiron, Iowa, who are employed have made a compact to lay aside $5 each Monday morning for a year. This they expect to do by practicing small economies. At the end of the year each will have $260 to his credit. If he invests it wisely it will earn each year the equivalent to a week's salary without his working for it. For such money always earns money and it starts a young man on the road to success.

Children of Cook County, Illinois, schools are learning industry and thrift from their truck gardens. Many of the boys and girls in the rural schools can teach their fathers how to grow vegetables, how to improve the growth and prepare the land, and, what is still more interesting, how to make money on a small patch of ground, worked after school hours. One little girl, Matilda Meyer, last season raised enough beans, tomatoes, carrots and other garden stuff to bring her $146.65. Her total expenses were $4.15; therefore she made clear profit of $142.50 on her garden plot of 44 square rods of land.

The subject of thrift thus becomes interesting to the children who are improving their time and their opportunities.

CHAUTAUQUA ENTERS NEW PHASE

Permanence of Parent Institution of Chautauqua Movement Now Definitely Established.

Over Quarter Million Dollars Being Spent on Plant at Chautauqua, N. Y., This Year, Making Largest Single Year's Development In History of the Movement Since 1874—New Entrances, Public Buildings, and Residences, All of Permanent Construction. City of Tents No Longer the Type to Represent the Chautauqua Idea.

NEW developments which are going on at Chautauqua, N. Y., in buildings, approaches and transportation facilities differ greatly from the prevailing notion of a chautauqua as a transitory thing. Brick paved highways, double track interurban car lines, entrances of brick and concrete in good architectural design, landscape treatment on a broad scale, educational buildings in comprehensive groups, hotel rooms with steam heat and other like conveniences, private residences costing a fortune to build do not grow up around an enterprise of fleeting character, yet all these things are taking shape this spring at Chautauqua. The fact is that the parent institution of the Chautauqua movement, on Chautauqua Lake, has within a decade passed into a wholly new phase, the "city of tents" giving way very fast to a city that "has foundations." Electric light and power plants, gas mains, water supply and sewage systems, paved sidewalks, year-round office buildings of fire proof or slow burning construction are among the things that one by one have supplanted the earlier makeshifts. Over a quarter of a million dollars is just now being expended to present the assembly to 1916 visitors in its new character as a permanent institution, definitely come to stay.

The Chautauqua assembly at Chautauqua, N. Y., will this summer offer to the visitor's view two important and striking improvements in two approaches—the water gate or pier, where will enter the visitor coming by steamboat from other points on Lake Chautauqua, and the land gate, where will enter the visitor coming by trolley from any direction or by motorcar over the excellent highway which connects with the great east and west thoroughfare at Westfield, N. Y.

Chautauqua's New Land Gate.

The general highway improvement is the most extensive enterprise now under way at Chautauqua, N. Y. This has been secured by generous co-operation with Chautauqua Institution on the part of the State of New York, the county of Chautauqua and the Chautauqua Traction Company operating the electric railroad from Jamestown to Westfield. It comprises a modern passenger station, double tracking of the trolley line, a new brick paved highway and important changes in the boundaries of the Assembly enclosure.

Plans were made in 1913 by the State for the improvement of the highway. A magnificent new state road is now open through Mayville to Westfield, connecting with the great roadway east and west, known to all automobilists. The line of the highway at Chautauqua was changed and straightened and paved with brick. This change has made possible the addition of a considerable acreage to the lot and park space of the Institution. It involves also the double tracking of the trolley line, the laying of needed switches and the construction of a new and complete station. The plans for the station building are by Freeburg & Fidler, architects, of Jamestown, N. Y.

There will be a double track in front and a switch to the rear for freight, baggage and express. The building will be 56 by 225, built of red brick, stone and concrete. The design will harmonize with the present permanent Institution buildings, with red tile roof and wide, projecting eaves. The outside passenger platform will be 28 by 72, so arranged that outgoing and incoming traffic may be separated. On the inside will be the Institution ticket office with incoming and outgoing passes, the exchange office, news and candy stands and the rest room for ladies. Toilet rooms, inside and outside, will be provided for both sexes. Adjoining the traction ticket office will be the baggage department with checking and transfer offices, the freight department and the express department, all to have ample platform space for loading and unloading. Work has already been begun so as to assure completion before the season opens. The cost of the structure will be some $30,000 and incidental improvements by the Traction Company perhaps $10,000 additional.

The Institution has expended for land and buildings and for the improvements made over $40,000. The special piece of brick highway has cost the state and county $17,000, while the Traction Company expenditures, as just indicated, will aggregate at least $40,000.

For a quarter of a century the water gate was the principal and almost the only entrance to Chautauqua, and it will be remembered for its natural picturesque beauty by every one who has visited the assembly during the past forty-two years. More recently, since the development of the electric railway and since the automobile has become so important a factor, the roadgate has received the larger share of visitors, yet it has had nothing to suggest the real character of Chautauqua. It has been like the railroad approach to many a town, a back door entrance, crowded and comfortless, without character or convenience.

The change in the highway and trolley line has made available to the Institution a tract about 4,000 feet long, varying in width from 10 to 300 feet, or nearly thirteen acres, and brings the total area within the enclosure up to about 200 acres. The new section is laid out into eighty-eight lots and into parking. The lots thus made available for lease are somewhat larger than the older Chautauqua lots. Two of the new streets formed are named Harper and Massey avenues, to commemorate services to Chautauqua by Dr. William R. Harper of the University of Chicago and the Massey family of Toronto. In this extension about two acres have been added to the present playground park, and the natural beauty of a stream and ravine at that point will be enhanced by planting trees and shrubs. A plaza near the station has also been reserved for park use. The planning of this addition has been done by George Y. Skinner, a specialist connected with the New York firm of Samuel Parsons & Co., landscape architects.

The Chautauqua High School, the Institution Garage and car parking place, the excellent Chautauqua golf links and the industrial center comprising repair shops of various kinds are located west of the Chautauqua enclosure on the highway and trolley line.

Chautauqua's New Water Gate.

Second in importance to the improvements of the land gate at Chautauqua, now under way, is the construction of the new pier building, on the site of the old wooden structure, which was torn down last fall. The Miller Memorial Bell Tower, erected in memory of the late Lewis Miller of Akron, O., co-founder with Bishop John H. Vincent of Chautauqua Assembly, is an impressive enhancement of the natural charm of "the point." The new pier building, which will cost about $10,000, will be another added ornament.

The new pier building will be a two story structure of 40 by 100 feet, with concrete columns and red tile roofing. The first floor will contain the Institution ticket office, steamboat ticket office, waiting rooms, check room, baggage room and refreshment booth. The second floor will be entirely devoted to a covered promenade. A most attractive building is promised by Green & Wicks of Buffalo, the Institution architects.

For the past two years there has been a marked improvement in this entire section of Chautauqua, in ground, park and cottage betterments, to which the new boat landing and water entrance will give final emphasis.

Summer Schools Growing.

The growth of summer schools throughout the country is being largely shared by the pioneer summer schools at Chautauqua, N. Y. This year's addition to the Chautauqua Summer Schools on College Hill will be in the form of two sixty foot ends added to the sides of the rectangle already well defined. When completed all the classes, comprising 3,000 students, will be provided for in this building, with the open end of the quadrangle toward the lake and "the old chestnut tree" a venerable Chautauqua landmark in the center.

It is to be hoped that friends of popular education will come forward to make possible in the immediate future the completion of this unique group of buildings which will serve as classrooms, laboratories and dormitories.

The Chautauqua Summer Schools themselves are unique in having always been self supporting. They are the oldest summer schools in the country and serve as a place for study on broad lines at a small expense.

New Music Studio at Chautauqua.

The interest in orchestral and choral music at Chautauqua which has made the Chautauqua Music Week one of the annual music events of America affects also the Chautauqua Summer School of Music. Each year sees some improvement in the facilities for music study at Chautauqua, and this year a new practice studio will supply a greatly demanded addition to the plant of the music department.

The new building will occupy a position on the slope south of the Sherwood Memorial building, which all visitors remember, and will conform in style to the architecture of the College Hill group.

The Packard Estate at Chautauqua.

The first really pretentious country estate to be built on Chautauqua Lake has been laid out by Mr. William D. Packard of Warren, O., a member of the Packard Car Company, on a large tract adjoining the Institution grounds on the north. Landscape work has been under way all winter. Mr. Packard is the son of the late Warren D. Packard, one of the pioneer summer residents of Chautauqua Lake and one of those influential in the development of Lakewood several years ago.

The property which Mr. Packard has bought lies between the Chautauqua Traction Company's line and the lake and along the north boundary of the Chautauqua Institution enclosure. From this particular point there is an unexcelled view from Mayville on the north to Long Point on the south, and it is undoubtedly one of the most desirable residence sites of the entire lake region.

The house is to be three stories high, of brick, stone and steel construction, red tile roof, absolutely fireproof. It is set in a grove of elms, which surround it on all sides but one, that facing the lake.

Directly to the south of the residence gardens are planned, terminating in a wild growth of shrubbery, threaded with trails leading to the docks and boathouse, to an artificial waterfall, a lily pond, tennis courts and vegetable gardens.

A cottage for the gatekeeper and tenants is now under construction, and other buildings will adjoin this cottage.

The landscape work has been done under the direction of Mr. H. L. Avery of Cleveland. Eighty-four full grown trees, mostly elms, have been transplanted by Mr. Herbert L. Hyatt of Cleveland, forester, who has transformed an uninteresting, bare hillside into a well wooded slope. A great quantity of small planting is also being done.

The Packard residence when completed will probably represent an expenditure close to $175,000.

Larger Hotel Accommodations at Chautauqua.

Among the many excellent boarding houses at Chautauqua, that erected this winter by Mrs. A. J. Lewis and known as the St. Elmo will command attention. It is a handsome and commodious new structure and by its artistic blending into the general architectural scheme of the central plaza is a real ornament to the place. It will contain many steam heated rooms with private baths. Mrs. Lewis has shown very positive faith in the future of Chautauqua.

Hotel Athenaeum is building an addition to its service equipment. Several boarding houses and private cottages are being built or enlarged.

Fenton Home For Methodist Deaconesses.

In addition to projects already well under way at Chautauqua, N. Y., such as a new pier building, new traction station, new school buildings and boarding houses, there are expectations concerning a home for Methodist Deaconesses provided for in the will of the late James Fenton of Buffalo, N. Y. This his executor hopes to build this spring at an approximate cost of $25,000 to $30,000. The construction will be of brick and stone and will be a most desirable addition to the new Chautauqua buildings of permanent type. The year 1916 is clearly to go down as extraordinary for physical growth at Chautauqua.

CHAUTAUQUA A GREAT POPULAR EDUCATOR

Impartial Discussion of Vital Subjects In World Crisis.

Chautauqua Institution, the pioneer in summer assemblies, summer schools and home reading courses, maintains its leadership in popular education by a rare combination of intellectual training, stimulating platform events and healthful recreation. Its public program again offers at a time of world crisis impartial discussion of vital subjects by authoritative leaders of public opinion.

More significant even than the individual addresses by notable men are the series of one week each on current political, social, economic and religious problems. Topics for such discussion are the defense of the nation, the Americanization of our foreign inhabitants, the church in its task of remaking a war cursed world, the elevation of American business to a profession, with professional breadth of training and professional loftiness of ethics; the messages of art and antiquity to modern practical life and taxation in the light of wisdom and justice. Each of the eight weeks from June 29 to Aug. 27 is devoted to some one major interest, that of Aug. 7-12 being music, with the well known Russian Symphony Orchestra engaged to supplement the regular musical resources of the Institution. The names of many educators and public men of the first rank appear in announcements just issued. Eight preachers of national reputation will give the eight Sunday morning sermons, and there are many other religious exercises.

The Chautauqua Summer Schools offer something over 200 courses in their catalog, just issued, and list over a hundred instructors, many of them prominently connected with great universities during the college months.

With its altitude of 1,400 feet, its twenty mile lake and the climate for which the region is famous, there has always been at Chautauqua the greatest variety of outdoor sports and recreations. The list now includes golf, motoring, tennis, roque, bowling, gymnastics, track athletics, sailing, rowing and fishing. Somewhat amusing to note, the prospectus for the year, just issued, indicates the pitching of horseshoes as one of the pastimes that arouse most enthusiasm among substantial business men and dignified members of the professions. It is only a step back to boyhood after all. Under almost ideal conditions for health, convenience and enjoyment, at a place like Chautauqua every member of the family finds a satisfying home for the summer.

CUPID'S LITTLE BOW HIT TWO FULTONIANS.

"In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to tho'ts of love" thus lightly sing the poets, and it seems to be true in one case at least. The romance reads thusly.

Miss Genevieve E. Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Smith of Oneida street and Mr. Ray Dexter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Dexter of Ingalls Crossing both have been employed by the same business concern in Syracuse. They have been in the habit of making week-end trips to this city. To-day they followed custom but went instead to the First M. E. Church parsonage and were made man and wife by the Rev. J. W. LEADER NEWTON REFUTES CHARGES

Informs Times Readers That His Bank Account is Not Swelled by Leading the Orchestra.

People who do not, will not and therefore cannot, understand, are the quickest to bear tales and provide gossip for willing ears. How different things would be were they to follow the advice of a wise woman of former times, by asking the bearer of false tales to step with her over to the subject under discussion. In that way the woman always dissolved the troubled situation.

The latest case to engage the bearer of false tales is reported by Mr. F. Jess Newton, leader of the Fulton Symphony Orchestra, whose hard work in behalf of that organization should need no further commendation. Not only has his work been arduous, but it has been unselfishly given that the people of this city may have an asset invaluable. His success is wonderful, and the music lovers are proud of him, proud of the personnel of the organization, and prouder of the city because of the results so far seen.

Mr. Newton takes the stage in defence of himself as follows:

"I have been told there is an impression abroad in effect that I have received at least $50 for my work in Fulton Symphony Orchestra. I wish to contradict the error through your excellent paper, by making public the following facts:

"After the first concert I paid out of my own pocket, in cash, for extra music and a C clarinet to take oboe parts, $37.40. This was necessary, as we them had only one oboe player.

"I aranged some special numbers for the orchestra, and orchestra parts for all of Mrs. Newton's songs, which represented work worth at least $25. That is not all, for Mrs. Newton gave without any recompense her services at the first concert. For my work in connection with the first concert I drew a check for $3.75, the same as the other members of the orchestra.

"In organizing the Symphony Orchestra, we did it for the love of the better class of music, believing it would be a fine thing, musically, for all of us, and a splendid asset for the city of Fulton. We did not expect any financial returns—at least during the present season, but with the Chamber of Commerce back of the organization, and the city of Fulton back of the Chamber of Commerce, the orchestra should ultimately become, if not a big financial success, then at least self-supporting.

"F. JESS NEWTON."

SCARS PROVE MAN'S IDENTITY

The inquest conducted by Coroner Cusack to determine the identity of the man whose body was found entangled in the branches of a tree on the bank of the river, on May 3rd, ended yesterday, and resulted in finding that the man was Jerry Gurrie.

George Merritt and Dr. E. J. Drury, of Phoenix, were the witnesses who succeeded in identifying the body, the last named man claimin gthat scars around the left eye of the drowned man proved beyond a doubt that his deduction was correct. He had treated Gurrie four years ago for burns on the face.

F. H. Barnum of Three Rivers, was another witness, who said that Gurrie had left his hotel about Thanksgiving Day, and that the clothing on the drowned man tallied with that worn by Gurrie on the day of his disappearance.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY WILL ELECT OFFICERS MONDAY

Mrs. J. W. Barrett will entertain the members of the Foreign Missionary Society of the First M. E. church on Monday afternoon, at the parsonage at 3 o'clock. An interesting meeting is promised. Election of officers will occur.

A THRIFT POINTER

A dollar saved now will give larger returns than a dollar saved two or three years ago, and more probably than a dollar saved two or three years in the future. Money saved now can be invested with as much safety as is humanly achievable so as to bring in 5 per cen of more. A few years ago savings invested in securities of similar strength yielded only 3 ped cent. When this war is over the world is going to be very poor. Persons who have any money at all are going to be relatively rich. Those who save now will possess the world later on.—Collier's Weekly.

If you want to know whether you are distined to be a success or a failure in life, you can easily find out. The test is very simple, and it is infallible: Are you able to save money? If not, drop out. You will lose. You may think not, but you will lose as sure as you live. The seed of success is not in you.—James J. Hill.

MISSION BEGINS HERE TOMORROW

Will Last Two Weeks at Father Lindsman's Church, to Be Attended By Visiting Priests.

Tomorrow morning will usher in another movement for the religious and moral uplift of this city, when will begin a two weeks' mission at the Church of the Immaculate Conception. The work of the fathers up on such occasions corresponds in its character to what is known in other churches as a revival of interest among the members.

The mission proper will open at High mass Sunday morning. After the gospel of the mass and the singing of Come, Holy Ghost, the opening sermon, will be delivered. The evening service will consist of the rosary, instructions on points of doctrine, sermon and the benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

The mission will be conducted by the Rev. Fathers Austin, O. M. C., and Stephen, O. M. C., of the Church of the Assumption, Syracuse, and there is a possibility of securing the Rev. Father Bede, O. M. C., also of Syracuse.

These missionaries are the brightest men in the Franciscan Order and have taken special courses at the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., to properly lt themselves for this work.

The meetings for the first week are for women only, while those of the second week are for men only.

At 5 a. m. daily there will be mass and short instruction; at 8 a. m., mass and sermon; at 7:45 p. m., rosary, sermon and benediction of the Blessed Sacrament

The children's mission will start on Monday morning and close with general communion in their mass on Wednesday following. Instructions at 11 a. m. and 3 p. m.

Regular mission confessions will commence on Wednesday. The hours for confessions are as follows: In the morning before masses; in the afternoon from 3 to 5:45, and in the evening after services.

In addition to the Fulton mission, another similar series of meetings will be held at St. Stephen's Church, Phoenix, on May 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th, and communion services will be held on the last day of the mission.

During the two weeks mission here and at Phoenix. Father Lindsman will assist the missionaries and have general charge of the special season.

During the month of April Father Lindsman heard over 1,000 confessions and gave communion to an equal number of his parishioners.

THE RIGHT TO REFUSE TO WORK

"Plans to confer on the interstate commerce commission the right to consider the wages paid railroad employes as well as the rates that may be charged railroad customers are gaining in popular favor," remarks the Richmond Times-Dispatch, and it says further;

"Certainly there is much to commend the proposed extension of the commission's powers. If railroad rates are reduced while wages steadily climb there will come a time when nothing will be left for investors. There is the further danger that an undeserved share of the railroads outlay for labor will be appropriated by those capable of enforcing their demands, while equally deserving employes suffer."

The proposition is logical, but it is not workable. Of course the Interstate Commerce Commission may receive and exercise the right to consider wages of railroad employes, but it cannot have the right and authority to control them in the same way in which it controls rates.

Because the railroad corporations are creatures of law—"artificial persons" they are sometimes called—their activities may be regulated and controlled by law. It is properly within the power of government to limit the charges that they may make for transportation. * * *

No such control can be exercised over the employes. When they decide that the pay which they receive is not enough, and therefore demand more, and refuse to work if their demand is rejected, there is no power of law that can compel them to continue to work. The right to refuse to work, for any reason that seems good and sufficient, is part of the freedom of the individual in this country, which may not be restricted.—Albany Evening Journal.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

Mayor Smith of Philadelphia recently said, in a talk to homeless and jobless men at the fifth aniversary of the Inasmuch Mission: "Any man or boy who determines to let strong drink alone and applies himself will rise in the world." "All I have today I made myself," he continued, "I long ago decided that rum is a man's worst enemy, for I have seen many good lives wrecked by it. I have made my own fight, and I have no regret."

The Lansing (Mich.) Life Underwriters' Association, an organization of the insurance men of the city, recently endorsed prohibition in line with the aims and efforts of the insurance companies. "Our association is against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor for a beverage," says the resolution, "for the sale of this product not only encourages the useless spending of money, but breaks up homes and leaves widows and orphans homeless and without provision. Besides this, it greatly reduces the earning power of workers in every class, and is destructive to life itself, causing the mortality to be twice the normal rate."

FOLLOW CHRIST, SAYS PEACOCK

presenting the cross to them first. We always tell men about the love of Christ, about the home He has gone to prepare, where if they accept Jesus they can spend an eternity of happiness with Jesus and His redeemed, but this is not the way Christ presented Himself to man.

When that young man came to Him, earnest, and enthusiastic, and said: Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest, Christ's answer was, The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay his head. Tonight I will sleep on yonder mountain side with the wild beasts. Probably the night after I will spend upon the sea amidst the storms and tempests, If you follow me you follow a homeless man. He would have the young man understand at the beginning, if he were going to reach his best, and come and company Him, then he must prepare to live and walk as He lived and walked, and to be as He was, a poor homeless man.

Fruits of Unselfishness

We should accept Jesus with the determination that we will take up the cross of Christ, and follow Him, and use every means in our power to broaden the Kingdom of God, and to tell others about Christ. Nothing should be permitted to stand in the way. Christ said to the young man. Go, sell all that thou hast. It was not because Jesus hated money that He desired this young man to part with it. It was because He knew that this young man's wealth would keep him from following Jesus at all times.

This young man would have looked out of place with his fine apparel among the other disciples. They were called from the lowest walks in life, and had given up all, for Christ's sake. Jesus looking upon this young man loved him, and desired him to be one of His disciples, but it is an impossibility to make exceptions in his case. He could not do this and be the true Savior of the world. All classes must enter the Kingdom of God in the same way. When Jesus asks a man to follow Him he wants a man who will not think of anything else when he is following Jesus. Have as much money as you like if you have gained it honestly. Have noble ambitions, high aims, keep these things in your heart, but when Jesus wants you, and you give him, not yourself, your whole heart, and, if you do not consider all that you have as belonging to Him to be freely laid aside at His bidding, you cannot follow Him.

"Follow Me," the Command

The second thing Jesus offered this young man was a career. Jesus said, Sell all these houses and all the land you possess and give to the poor, and come with me. Everyone desires to make the most out of life. Unless we are lazy and careless we will try to do our best, and this is what Jesus desired this young man to do. The career was hidden in these words Follow me.

If you have read your Bibles carefully you will notice that these words were frequently on the lips of Jesus. He found a man counting his money, the tax gatherer, and said to him, Matthew follow me. He found Peter fishing and said to him, follow me. He seemed to have the power to win men from other callings in life to be His followers. And this was the test by which He tried this young man's love. But when the young man was weighed in the balances he was found wanting, and he went away sad at heart because his possessions were dearer to him than the salvation of his own soul. If he had been obedient to Christ's command, his life would have been a noble one, spent in trying to do good to his fellow man.

What Jesus desired him to do was to go with Him to the next village where they would heal the sick, give sight to the blind, comfort those in mourning, and bring the glad tidings of salvation to a sin cursed world. Come, He said to the young man, follow me. Have you no concern about the people of the world, all the men and women and little children in the world who need a Savior? Are you concerned only about yourself, about your success, about your wealth? Having no sympathy for the sinning, sorrowing, broken-hearted people? Follow me. I will bring you where there is work to do that will make your heart fill with pity, and with joy.

The Real Refuge

Young man, young woman, and those of you who have passed on to middle life and old age, do you hear Jesus calling you, Follow me? Do you feel entirely safe in your Christian homes with your Godly parents, and your churches and your Sabbath schools about you? Do yo feel that you are entirely free from all danger? And do you parents feel that your son or daughter is entirely safe in this world of sin? If you do there are many parents in this world today with sad hearts because of the sin in the world. They are lonely for something better for their children, but they do not know how to find it. Go to them as you would go to your best friend, if in danger and tell them about Christ—and His love. Jesus wants you to do this, and He is today knocking at the door of your heart for admittance. Won't you be kind enough to open the door and let Him in that you may always have joy and happiness? If you follow Him, you enter the highest calling known to mankind in this world.

The next thing Jesus offered this young man was a character. The character is the foundation of the whole man. Without character we are of no value to any one. We are worthless and despised by all men. Everyone desires to have a clean character, a character without spot or blemish, free from pollution, and right in the sight of all men. The farmer cultivates his soil, tills his fields, and looks after the manifold duties of his occupation, but this is not all that he is doing. At the same time he is making character of some kind, building up the fabric of his own manhood. The carpenter is working in wood, but he is also working on life, his own life. The mason is hewing stones, and setting them in the wall, but he is also quarrying out blocks for the temple of character, which he is building in himself. Men in all callings and occupations are continually producing a double set of results in that on which they work, and in their own lives.

We are in this world to make character, and every hour we leave some mark, some impression on the life within us. An impression which shall endure when all the work of our hands has perished. The smallest things have their influence upon character and upon the beauty and the helpfulness of a life.

There are occupations which in like manner affect the life and character injuriously, hinder the growth of spirituality, or make one less effective in work upon the life and character of others. We need to deal with ourselves very firmly and very heroically. Anything that unfits us for doing our work in the best way possible we should firmly and conscientiously avoid. If a certain form of amusement dissipates spiritually, we would better not indulge in it. We must seek always to be at our best, ready for whatever duty or service is required of us. We should see to it that our life always yields fruits that are luscious and sweet, and whatever unfavorably affects the quality of our spirit, our disposition, or our service, should be avoided. Jesus offers us everything to make a good character.

Follow me, says Christ, and all other things will be added to us. Jesus never offers to us anything that will hinder or mar our growth spiritually. By keeping near to Jesus our spiritual life will be strengthened, and our character will be built upon the rock Christ Jesus. My christian friends, don't be like this foolish young man, do not turn away from Jesus. After Christ had offered him all these things he went back, he went away grieved and sorrowful and Jesus stood and looked at him with pitying love. So when we turn away from Christ and follow Satan, He pities us. His heart is pierced and He longs to have us with Him. Don't turn away from Christ. You may have everything this world can afford, but without Jesus all these things are vanity and vextation of spirit. Do not be content with anything short of being yourself good and worthy of your manhood, and worthy of God.

GRAND JURY RETURNS THIRTY INDICTMENTS.

Pulaski,—The Grand Jury rose yesterday at 9:30 and presented a list of thirty indictments of which all but eight were sealed. District Attorney Culkin was not present when the report was made and Assistant District Attorney Colony refused to give out any statement regarding the Oswego Mercantile Company, which has been under investigation. It is currently reported, however, that an indictment was returned against this concern for practicing law and it is also believed that charges of larceny may also be preferred. It is highly improbable that there will be any definite statement regarding this until next week.

Mr. Colony, on the presentation of the indictments, moved that the arraignments and trials be remitted to the County Court, which was immediately granted. It is expected that the arraignments will be held in Oswego on Thursday of next week.

The following were the open indictments: Earl Scott, Pulaski, criminally receiving stolen property; Lyman Lyons, burglary third degree and petit larceny (these indictments followed the robbery of the Damon and Peach stores in Pulaski several weeks ago); William Pecoy, Oswego, unlawfully damaging railroad car; Andrew Simons, destroying real property; Orvie Bloodgood, incest and criminal as sault, second degree; Edward Pecoy and William Knapp, Oswego, burglary third degree and petit larceny.

The grand jury was thanked by Justice Hubbs and complimented on the manner in which they had performed their labors and were then discharged. Court was then adjourned until 10 o'clock, Monday morning. It is expected that the case of Martha E. Hunter, James M. and John J. Hart will go on trial Tuesday.

WAR TEACHES MEN LESSON OF THRIFT

Insurance Man Sees One Blessing In European Struggle.

MILLIONS GOING TO WASTE

Those Who Conserve Their Own Resources Must Aid the Helpless, He Asserts—Points Out Vast Riches of the United States and the Number of Dependents.

The present war will be a benefit to [illegible] will increase the total efficiency and saving power of the people in the various nations, both those at war and those on this continent, according to a recent statement made by Edward A. Woods, president of the National Life Underwriters' association.

Mr. Woods declared that the United States, with national wealth three times that of France and nearly double that of either Great Britain or Germany, was a shame to the world in the prodigality with which it wasted its substance. Lack of thrift, he asserted, was a menace to the continued prosperity of the country just as surely as the same characteristics displayed in Rome destroyed her world empire.

"We have a wealth of $150,000,000,000 as compared with $85,000,000,000 for England and $80,000,000,000 for Germany," said Mr. Woods. "Moreover, our income of $35,000,000,000 a year is larger in proportion to this wealth than that of any other nation. Not only have we therefore the greatest amount of wealth and the greatest income, but the greatest proportionate income, 23 1-3 per cent, comparing with 14 per cent of Great Britain, 12½ per cent of Germany and 12 per cent of France. We are increasing our wealth $20,000,000 a day, or $7,000,000,000 a year, our annual increase equaling the entire combined wealth of Holland and Portugal.

Too Many Dependents Here.

"And yet in this great, wealthy country Robert Hunter says that there are 10,000,000 and probably 15,000,000 in poverty. One-third of the population of New York apply for charity in seven years. One person in ten who dies in our large cities is buried in a pauper's grave. There are 1,250,000 dependent wage earners costing this country $220,000,000 a year for their support who should have laid by enough to support themselves.

"There are 1,990,225 children, ten to fifteen years of age, making a living who ought to be in school. We are supporting about 1,000,000 dependents and delinquents in institutions. There are 18,000,000 wage earners in this country.

"Out of a commerce of the astounding total of nearly $500,000,000,000 we are probably losing $900,000,000 a year by bad credit and paying $3,000,000,000 in interest, this total alone nearly equaling the wealth of thrifty Switzerland.

"What is true of America as a nation is true of many Americans as individuals. We have large incomes, we have great wealth, but we are forgetting that thrift and progress mean the saving of money, and that saving is largely regardless of wealth. It is by no means those of large incomes who comprise the thrifty, frugal, saving portion of our population. It is often the large numbers of persons of moderate means who by their saving and the character building resulting from the saving compose the real bone and sinew of a nation. Why is it that, with all our income, America should rank fifteenth in the proportion of our population carrying savings bank accounts?

"The so called 'American plan' hotel is an illustration of American thriftlessness and waste. We are probably wasting from American tables today enough to feed the entire population of Belgium. It is the thrifty of the country who support its institutions, who give its benefactions, who are supporting not only their own families, but the hospitals, the churches, the colleges or the institutions of the state, who are paying its taxes, who are the citizens upon whom the state, society and the church must rely.

"It is a curious fact that such a destructive process as war is sometimes a benefit to nations. The entire world at the beginning of the present struggle in Europe started to save money. You see war increases the total efficiency and it increases the total saving.

"Let America be not too free to cast criticism upon our foreign warring sister nations. It may be that the increased thrift and the increased efficiency and the increased strength of character brought about by this great crisis so affecting the nations of Europe will do for them as they did for us in our civil war—produce characteristics and produce men and women that in the years following the war may offset the enormous waste and destruction brought about by it.

"Also there are millions of saving Americans. We are not all thriftless. Of the 20,255,555 homes occupied in the United States 9,083,711 are owned, 45.8 per cent of the total, and of these 5,984,284 are unencumbered. There are more Pennsylvanians who own their own homes than citizens of any other state in the Union, New York ranking second, and there are more unencumbered homes in Pennsylvania than in any other state in the Union, Ohio ranking second, Illinois third and New York fourth."

HOMESTEAD COLONIES ARE FOUNDED IN GEORGIA

Families From Crowded Cities Sent to Small Fertile Farms.

During the last half dozen years there have been many forms of encouragement to people from other sections to go to the south and settle, where large tracts of fertile but undeveloped territory are available, but it appears that the work of the Southern Settlement and Development organization of Baltimore, which has branches in other southern points, is meeting with more success than any movement to this end which has yet been attempted.

This organization has already brought a large number of homesteaders to Dixie and in each instance has been successful in getting the newcomers well located and satisfied.

A good example of this work is that recently done near Albany, Ga., in the southern portion of that state. The establishment of the colony of homesteaders at Albany has proved a decidedly greater success than was at first anticipated, and plans are now on foot to send an additional lot of colonists to Georgia from the middle west.

The purpose of the organization is to settle and develop southern farm areas by sending homesteaders from the crowded western and eastern cities The 3,000 acre plantation of H. W. Johnson, one of the community's biggest planters, was subdivided into forty acre lots. Nineteen families were transported from Chicago and as many homes provided for them on nineteen of the forty subdivisions. Each home and forty acre farm was provided with mules, cows, seeds and a model country residence. The terms are long time deferred payments.

The farm land is fertile. Even some of the most inexperienced farmers among the settlers have found the soil surprisingly productive. Most of them are Russian born American citizens, progressive, ambitious and energetic. They have been in Georgia since November, 1915, and there has not been a note of dissension or dissatisfaction in the entire colony.

The educational features of the settlement promise to set a new epoch in Georgia's agricultural progress. The settlers are being interested in stock growing and diversified farming. The leaders of the colony are looking forward to the time when they can purchase live stock and make their newly acquired interests productive of cattle as well as general crops.

HELD IN COAL SIX HOURS.

Victim Was Released When Hole Was Sawed In Elevator.

Elkhart, Ind.—Clarence Eddy, aged fifty-six, yard manager for Godfrey & Son, coal dealers, was held in a perilous position in the vortex of a big coal bin for six hours.

He was freed when a hole twelve feet square was sawed in the siding of the elevator, permitting the coal to drop out and relieve the pressure on one of his legs, which had been held knee deep in the constantly shifting coal.

Eddy then climbed up a ladder to safety. He complained only of cold. The temperature was 20 above zero. During his "imprisonment" Eddy had been supplied with hot coffee from time to time.

Eddy and Walter Lehman had been working at the gate at the bottom of the sixteen foot bin which contained 200 tons of finely crushed coal. Because a crust of ice had formed on the top the coal did not drop as fast as desired, and Eddy went to the top and struck the crust with an iron bar. The "roof" collapsed, and he went down with the mass ten feet and within six feet of the gate.

BOY HAS 14 GRANDPARENTS.

Unusual Wealth of Relatives Claimed For Indiana Youth.

Delphi, Ind.—Dean Overholser, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Overholser, who live in the eastern part of Carroll county, has fourteen grandparents, ten of them blood relatives and four grandparents by marriage.

Following is the list: Grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Overholser, George McManama and Mrs. James Bridge; great-grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Overholser, Mr. and Mrs. William McManama, Isaac Wagoner and Mrs. Rachel Richardson. George McManama and his first wife, who is now Mrs. James Bridge, separated, and each married again. Thus the little Overholser is entitled to four more grandparents because of the fact that one's grandfather's wife is his grandmother and one grandmother's husband is his grandfather. The second Mrs. George McManama, who was Orpha Johnson, and the second husband of Mrs. Bridge are also grandparents. Mrs. Bridge's mother, Mrs. Margaret Bridge, is living as well as the mother of Orpha Johnson, which gives Dean Overholser fourteen grandparents.

After her graduation she worked for temperance under the training of her mother's two friends, the latter training coming after her marriage in England to Hon. Bertrand Russell, the philosopher.

SUMMER STORAGE

How to Care For Your Pet Furs and Woolens.

MOTH BALLS TO THE FORE.

Although We Can't See Our White Winged Enemies Flying About, Their Larvae May Even Now Be Boring Into Our Ermine Stoles and Sables.

Now is the time to lay away all woolens, furs and similar articles which must be stored during the summer.

The time when the moth does most damage is not when we see him flying around. The mischief has been done by the biting of the little larva or worm from which he came.

The first thing to do in laying clothes away is to see that they are perfectly clean. Everything woolen, like bath robes, blankets and underwear, should be brushed with a whisk broom, if it cannot be washed first, and exposed to the sun and air.

If the garment cannot be washed in water and we do not care to send it to the cleaner it should never be laid away dirty with spots of grease and food, because these are just the things that will attract the moth worm first.

The little spot on the lapel of the overcoat, the slight dirt on the shield of a child's flannel suit, these are the places that Mr. Moth Worm goes for first. Materials which are not thoroughly washable in water should be given a bath in gasoline and thoroughly aired.

Dresses trimmed with fur should never be laid away with the fur on them, but have the fur ripped off, cleaned in gasoline, brushed and placed in separate packages. In fact, all fur must be thoroughly cleaned, brushed and aired before being laid away.

Moth balls and camphor paper have been used for a long time and are still used, but we have modifications of these now in the tar paper bag and camphor bag, which are more efficient in many ways.

These bags come in various sizes, some very small for children's coats and sweaters, others half length and others even full length for evening dresses or for overcoats.

Another cheap way of putting clothes away is to put them into the paper boxes, such as come with underwear and other articles and seal the covers firmly with strips of gum paper.

There are many other articles which we perhaps cannot lay away, such as tufted furniture, cushions, etc. The best plan is to spray them with gasoline or benzine, using a small atomizer or hand spray, or they can be very carefully sponged with a diluted solution of corrosive sublimate in alcohol made just strong enough to leave a white stain.

Light, air, low temperature and frequent inspection are the things necessary for perfect storage.

two rosettes finished with a chic little rubber cord and tassel. These caps come in extremely gay shades to tone up somber bath suits.

Fish Bisque.

A fish bisque is made from one cupful of cold fish minced very fine, one cupful of hot milk and a cupful of any white stock. The carcass of a chicken cooked slowly will yield an excellent stock for this purpose. The seasoning consists of a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, salt, a dash of cayenne and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley.

Put fish, seasoning and stock together in a pan. Mix one tablespoonful of flour and the same quantity of butter together and stir into the fish mixture. Cook and then stir in the boiling milk, adding a tablespoonful of cracker crumbs.

For Easter Week.

In the Easter parade this year silk waists will be prominent. Taffeta will probably predominate, but there will be suits of faille, silk poplin and gros de Londres. The checked and striped silks are popular. The silk suit is freely trimmed and is usually in demi-tailored or dressy effects. The skirt may be in tiers or have cascade draperies. Bandings of velvet give a rich finish, and the ruchings are especially adaptable to silks.

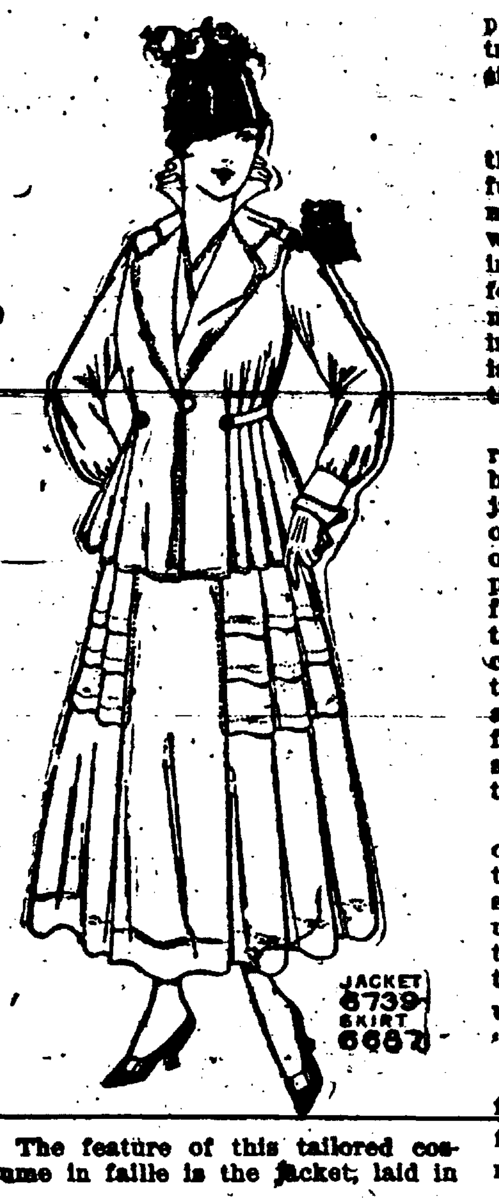
The Tailored Suit in Faille.



The feature of this tailored costume in faille is the jacket, laid in plaits at the raised waistline and trimmed with a fancy collar of white silk.

The subject of today's lesson is the silk tailored costume. It truthfully can be styled the all-around model, for it is used for morning wear, and if a dressy blouse is added in the afternoon, it takes on semi-formal importance. This design, in medium size requires 6¾ yards 4-inch material. The circular collar is of white faille, with plaited section standing high at the back.

The jacket is laid in plaits at the raised waistline, but the front and back hang in flat effect. To cut the jacket, place the back and the cape on the fold of material first. Then opposite these, on the upper row, place the sleeve, the front, the underfacing and rever. Now, going back to the bottom row, place the cuff, collar and second cape into the position, the first on a lengthwise thread and the last two of the lengthwise fold of the faille. Opposite the second cape lays the back skirt section, on a lengthwise thread.

If the jacket be desired with deep open front, cut off the front edge of the front, ⅝ inch forward of line of small "o" perforations and omit underfacing. If desired pointed at the sides, cut off the lower parts of the front, back, skirt section and underfacing along indicating small "o" perforations.

The front of the jacket may be finished simple with revers and a flat collar, if this be preferred to the more elaborate effect.

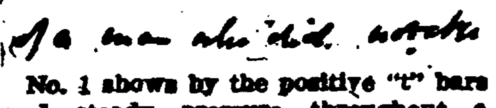
Your Handwriting Shows What You Are

By WILLIAM LESLIE FRENCH

I.—Strong Will, Weak Will, Etc.

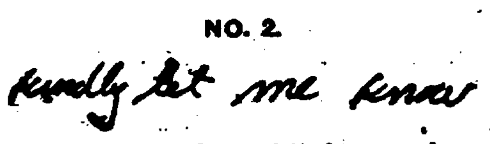
THE science of interpreting character and tendencies from handwriting, six hundred odd years old, has during the present century been shown to be of practical value to human beings in all walks of life. The reason is simple. When you write, apart from your thoughts, education or training, you unconsciously reveal to those who understand this science your entire character, talents and possibilities in one direction or another. You show whether you are strong or weak, honest, fickle and numerous other traits. Because your mind and brain work through the nervous system to the hand the various strokes become a sort of register of your personality. And it is found by an examination of writing of people who write alike that in common they possess similar characteristics.

NO. 1.



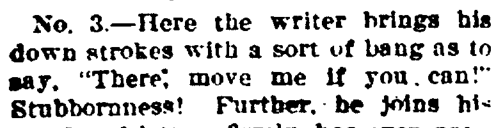
No. 1 shows by the positive "t" bars and steady pressure throughout a strong will. The upward swing of the script to the right, combined with sharpened form, indicates that will power forces the writer to his ambition without weakening. Well made connecting strokes and small low letters give good reasoning ability and an intellect capable of intense application. All handwritings revealing these signs show like traits.

NO. 2.



No. 2, on the face of it, has nowhere near the same degree of strength. The wabbly, uncertain shaded strokes, weak formations and changeable "t" crossings are the signs of a will which works unsteadily, while the mental vigor is lower. As the strokes of one line interfere with the others, it indicates a person who does not think clearly and hence cannot use his will to sure results. People exhibiting such signs are not well balanced.

NO. 3.

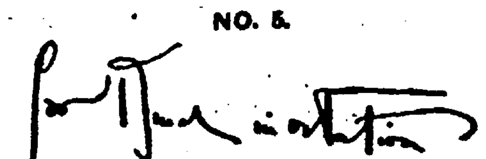


No. 3.—Here the writer brings his down strokes with a sort of bang as to say, "There, move me if you can!" Stubbornness! Further, he joins his word and letters firmly, has even pressure and thus uses his brains with force to make his ideas work.

NO. 4.

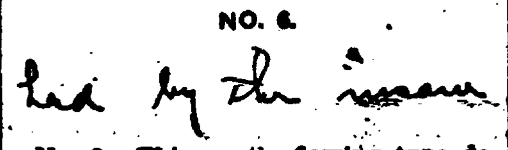
No. 4.—Swift, alert handwriting, flowing right ahead, without breaks and decisive "t" crossings, betrays rapid mental and physical action. The well connected letters say that such writers mean business. Energy!

NO. 5.



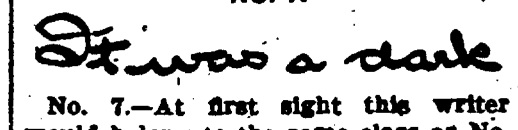
No. 5.—Any writer who throws so many unexpected curves into his script as this one, who extends his long letters so far above the lines, shows so much originality, is erratic, not well poised and irresponsible. Imagination and emotion are overdeveloped.

NO. 6.



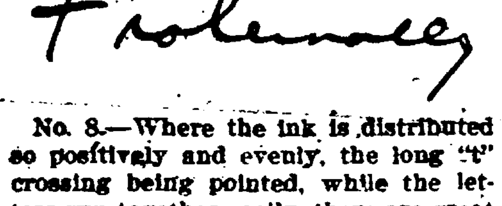
No. 6.—This gentle flowing type denotes little power of resolution and not much fighting capacity. Note the delicate form and easy way of barring the "t."

NO. 7.



No. 7.—At first sight this writer would belong to the same class as No. 4, for there are like signs. But the round formation and the easy way of ambling across the page show laziness and a disposition to take things as they come. The upright script betokens truly mental poise, for vertical writing generally has this significance, but when the writing is also inclining to left—then extreme laziness.

NO. 8.



No. 8.—Where the ink is distributed so positively and evenly, the long "t" crossing being pointed, while the letters run together easily, there are great determination and persistence. Energy appears all the way through. You would never accuse a writer of laziness who showed such signs. You would never say that vacillation and fickleness were traits.

These few suggestions will give the reader an idea of how to judge of strength or weakness.

Directions: Combine the rice, celery and beets. Mix with a French dressing.

Celery and Oyster Salad.—Materials: A pint of oysters, celery, lettuce, olive oil, vinegar, salt and pepper.

A more delicate way of fixing the orange is to remove the membrane from each section. Arrange these on lettuce leaves.

Waldorf Salad.—Two cupfuls of diced apples, a cupful of hickory nut meats, a cupful of celery, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, half a cupful of sweet cream. Celery can be omitted if not handy. Mayonnaise dressing can be used instead of the sweet cream.

YOUNG MAN, BEWARE OF THE VASSAR GIRL!

Firm Advocate, She, of the Rule That the Wife Is the Boss Around Home.

Poughkeepsie.—The young men who keep on their dressers framed pictures of fair Vassar students and dream dreams of steam heated flats when they gaze at them will do well to note the fact that fifty of these students heartily applauded the assertion of a witness in the supreme court that his wife was boss around their house.

It was the spontaneous sort of applause that makes even a thoughtless man thoughtful, and it persisted despite the raps for order which Supreme Court Justice Young sounded, while he grinned behind a magisterial hand.

The young women, members of the political science class under Professor E. D. Fite, were in court learning something of judicial procedure when the witness on the stand, in answer to a question whether he had consulted his wife regarding a certain action, said:

"No, sir; I don't have to. My wife is boss in the house."

Patter, patter, patter went white gloved hands in earnest applause of the witness' honest attitude, and the young women nodded approvingly at one another.

FEWER KANSAS FARMERS.

There Are Not So Many Now as Ten Years Ago.

Abilene, Kan.—Fewer people are engaged in agricultural pursuits in Kansas now than ten years ago, according to J. C. Mohler, secretary of the state board of agriculture.

"In 1895 of those engaged in all occupations 50 per cent were in agriculture," he declared, "and in 1905 50 per cent and in 1915 46 per cent. It is a very discouraging sign in a state like Kansas, where agriculture is the overshadowing industry, that fewer instead of more people are engaging in it."

Some of the serious problems that must be solved in Kansas are those of the home seeker, the ownership of lands, employment of capital, better farming and the improvement of conditions of rural life, Mr. Mohler asserted.

New Sandwich Fillings.

AGUACATE, OR ALLIGATOR PEAR FILLING.—Halve, pare and stone a large alligator pear. Mash fine with a silver fork, season with pepper, salt and lemon juice; then spread thin on silver bread rounds lightly buttered and lay up the sandwiches.

Cocoanut Filling.—Add to a full half cupful of freshly grated cocoanut a half cupful of whipped cream, a tablespoonful of chutney sirup and a teaspoonful of chopped tarragon leaves. Mix lightly and lay up the sandwiches with thin rye bread slices.

Nasturtium Filling.—A small bottle of pickled nasturtium seeds, drain and chop; then add them to a small can of tuna fish that have been flaked. Add mayonnaise enough to make a spreading paste and lay up the sandwiches on whole wheat slices cut thin and sparingly buttered.

Brazil Nut Filling.—Peel and then steam three ripe bananas, mash them and add six salted Brazil nuts finely chopped, a tablespoonful of chutney sirup and a tablespoonful of whipped cream. If the paste is not quite soft enough add a little more cream; then lay on thinly sliced brown bread rounds.

Onion Filling.—Spread thinly with pate de foie gras slices of whole wheat bread, then cover with thinly sliced Spanish onion, dust with red pepper and lay up the sandwiches. The spreading paste takes the place of the butter and makes the sandwiches very tasty.

Cranberry Spread.—Boil two cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of cranberry juice five minutes, add one tablespoonful of butter, the strained juice of one lemon and a grating of nutmeg. Boil down till the consistency of jelly and serve between slices of whole wheat bread.

White Linen Is Effective Made This Way.

An ideal design for a linen frock, in white or cream, with an underblouse of colored organdie.

The many demands for semi-dressy models for white linen brings out this frock, which may have an underblouse of contrasting material, say, delicate blue or pink organdie. The neck orf the blouse may be finished in high or V effect. There is a removable jumper, made with or without a large collar and circular peplum. The attached two-piece skirt closes at the left side of the front and is shirred.

In medium size the dress requires 5¼ yards 44-inch linen. Much work is saved in seam-sewing by placing the sections marked by tripple "TTT" perforations on the lengthwise fold of material as shown in the cutting guide. There are five of these sections, namely, the front and back gores of the skirt, back of the underblouse and jumper and collar section. Both the flat and standing collar are laid on the lengthwise fold. The piecing for the front and back gores of the skirt are laid along the selvage edge of the linen, then along the upper row are arranged the jumper front, underblouse front and sleeve. The peplum is laid into position between the back of the underblouse and collar sections.

Narrow linen braid with a fancy edge makes an effective trimming for the front of the waist, while buttons finish the ends of the belt.

Without the peplum, the dress is quite effective, if the front is extended below the waistline.

Linetta is a sort of batiste glace; one of the threads of the woof is white and the next of some color. The material is exceedingly dainty and is to take the place of linen, which was made in the north where the great flax fields are now held by the invaders.

BOARDS APPROVE BOND ISSUE

It Was An Evening of Double-Headers in Behalf of New Bond Issue.

Special meetings were held last night by the Common Council and Board of Works, to complete preliminary arrangements incident to the paving of East First street. The occasion was intended to afford the public an opportunity to object or approve of the proposition, but as no one appeared to oppose the resolution authorizing the work, the report of the Board of Works was approved.

The leading feature of the meeting of the Council was to give final hearing on the question of adding to the city's bonded indebtedness the sum of $15,000, which will be used in the main to liquidate debts incurred by former administrations. Authorization of this bond issue was made in Albany recently.

It developed during the evening that the Board of Works had exceeded its authority in granting to a business man permission to erect a sign. The City Charter provides that actions of that nature must come through the Common Council.

Mayor Lewis was advised by Commissioner of Charities Somers that the "No funds" sign would be hung on the door of the Charities Department today. Mr. Lewis called the Board's attention to the matter, and City Attorney Hillick said that he could see no means by which the situation may be changed. Suggestions were made that there be a "tag day" or some other public movement to raise funds with which to supply the needy. Mayor Lewis stated that he would write immediately to the State Department of Charities explaining the situation in its entirety.

FUNSTON HEARS VILLA IS LOCATED.

El Paso—Pancho Villa, the bandit, the pursuit of whom the Washington government is willing to abandon, assumed his rightful place in the Mexican news to-day.

General Funston gave out an official report from General Pershing which surrounded the information from Mexican sources with an atmosphere of authenticity. Pershing announced that he had received definite information of Villa's whereabouts and would make an effort to surround him. The location was not given.

BRITAIN ADMITS ITS WRONG TO NEUTRALS.

London—Great Britain has announced a relaxation of her rigorous blockade in four important cases.

This action, taken on the very day the German note calls upon the United States to bring as much pressure to bear on England as on Germany for the observation of international law, is considered highly significant.

CROPS AND SOILS SHOW THEIR NEEDS

Each Type of Crop and Soil Has Characteristics and Special Requirements.

Low and decreasing yields, spindly growth of stalk, low quality products, small, pale, insipid fruit, poorly filled kernels of wheat and large ears of unsound corn are among the crop indications of the need of fertilizers. If the tendency of the soil is to produce too much stalk growth, a fertilizer which carries a small amount of ammonia and a liberal amount of phosphoric acid and potash should be used. If stalk or straw is poor and too weak to stand storms, then a complete fertilizer high in ammonia and potash should be used. If the crops of previous seasons have not matured early enough, a fertilizer high in phosphoric acid should be chosen.

Each type of crop requires characteristic proportions of plant food for best results. A corn crop, for instance, is usually grown more for ears than for stalk. Ear corn or other grain takes up over 60 per cent. of the phosphoric acid required by the plant, hence the growing of any grain crop makes a heavy draft on this plant food which must be met by a generous supply of phosphoric acid. Hay crops are harvested for stalk, stem or leaf growth, and need much ammonia. The supply in the soil must be supplemented if the productivity is to be maintained.

Adjust Soil Conditions.

Soil conditions that are essential to the best results from fertilizers may be obtained by rotation of crops, wherein legumes are grown periodically, plowing under green manure, applying strawy barn manure and correcting the acidity of the soil by proper drainage and applications of lime when needed. Sandy soils are usually weak in nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash; clay soils are better supplied as shown by analysis, but often the elements are unavailable or slowly available, and require the assistance of available plant food if they are to produce large yields of high quality. A peaty soil is usually strong in nitrogen but exceedingly weak in phosphoric acid and potash.

The use of a fertilizer containing all of the essential constituents of plant food gives best all-round results under average conditions. Various soils differ in their plant food needs, and observation of previous crop indications combined with a knowledge of how the soil has been treated in the past should be used as a basis for determining what proportion of the plant food ingredients is best for both soil and crop.

Pioneer Eastern Alfalfa Man

"Alfalfa is the greatest stuff in the world and can be grown throughout the Eastern States by every farmer who is willing to follow the proper methods," says John P. Nelson, the New Jersey pioneer alfalfa grower who has been raising alfalfa since 1895. A loam soil of reasonable fertility and good drainage is recommended by Mr. Nelson, who advises that it be plowed deep, that lime be used, that 1,000 pounds of fertilizer be applied at the time of seeding, and that the same amount be applied annually as a top dressing to give the crop a quick start and enable it to make the best yields per acre. When manure is available, he advises the use of three to five tons per acre with 600 pounds of fertilizer per acre.

Helping Corn Fight Insect Pests

Rotation of crops, keeping the land free from weeds and trash of all kinds, late fall plowing of infested lands, and properly nourishing the corn plants, are the practical preventive measures that can be applied to the insects that attack corn in different ways, according to Prof. James Troop, of the Purdue Experiment Station. Manures and fertilizers produce vigorous growth and help the plants to withstand the injury, and also have an effect as repellants against the attacks of insects.

Peach Trees Quick To Respond

Many of the old theories regarding the proper feeding of peach trees have been overthrown. The peach appears to be the most susceptible of all fruit trees to the influence of commercial fertilizers, according to the Practical Farmer. While results obtained by the various experiment stations regarding the value of fertilizers on apple trees are not complete, there appears to be a remarkable agreement in the results found in fertilizing peach trees. "Feed the crop and the crop will feed you," applies equally to orchards and to grain and other crops.

GERMANY MAKES CONCESSIONS

Berlin—The German answer to the American submarine note has not yet been published here, and the newspapers generally refrain from anticipating its contents or forecasting the consequences that may follow.

The Lokal Anzeiger, however, significantly says:

"Judging by what we have been able to learn concerning the spirit of the German answer to America, we cherish the expectation that the sense of justice of the American people which was emphasized in the American note will come into its own

"The concessions made by Germany in this connection is naturally, as the dignity of the Empire demands, solely born out of the consciousness of German strength, German successes and the jutice of our caue.

"The German standjoint can less be subjected to just criticism becausse of the fact to the best of our knowledge it rests upon the basis of written international law and humanity repeatedly emphasized by America.'"

The Vossische eitung says:

"Our investigations, made after the note was delivered, show that political circles cherish the hope that a conflict with America will be avoided."

MORE MUSIC IN FULTON

We, which means you and all the rest of the neighbors, want more music in Fulton, because music is the one thing in common that will fill the people of the city with civic pride and patriotism.

One is told a lot about thrift, of its potency in the life of a community, which is all very well to preach, but to many minds it is a dry subject. Music is never a dry subject. It is the one thing that will attract all classes and conditions of men and women. If this city were without an excellent band, one of the finest in the state—the Elks' Band, if the reader pleases; or, if it were without the nucleus of one grand big community chorus, or, a Symphony Orchestra whose reputation spreads with each public performance—then we should bring within out gates the best talent obtainable. But, nothing of the kind obtains. The city is rich, very rich, in its possession of musicians. It has been demonstrated time and again.

But in spite of all the wealth of musical talent, there remains something lacking, and that void is formed by the absence of a splendid community chorus—one that could be formed with the aid of the Schumann Club and boosted by the Chamber of Commerce, and augmented by the pupils of our schools wherein music is taught. The city is spending thousands of dollars to provide some knowledge of music to the children in the schools, but the community at large reaps little in return.

The subject of more music in Fulton is treated too lightly. The schools are providing the training ground, so why not avail ourselves of the material at hand and have this summer one fine big festival of community singing, to be held in the park or on the shore of Lake Neahtawanta. It will help wash the dust from our everyday lives, and strengthen the get-to-gether spirit.

CHRISTIAN CHARITY UNDER THE SUN

Charity has so long been regarded as a cardinal virtue of the Christian that only a bold man would dare attack it, yet such a man is found in Dr. Coffee, who spoke before the Southern Sociological Congress in New Orleans. He charges that "Charity has stopped the march of progress more than a thousand years," and now we can understand why the head of the progressive movement of our day has no charity of the sort that "suffereth long and is kind." Dr. Coffee says the Old Testament shows no conception of the virtue and that the New Testament teaches it only by a mistake of the translators. He insists that we can abolish poverty when we have ceased to tolerate war—that poverty depends for its continuance on the theory that war is necessary and disease, pestilence and famine are sent upon us by the Almighty. We have no arguments against this reasoning and no interpretations of Hebrew or Greek texts to set up against the citations of the learned doctor; let us consider a few facts.

Communities have existed on earth for centuries at a time embracing large populations which knew not the poverty that inflicted hunger or debased living and yet these nations had not ceased to tolerate war—therefore we can deny the necessity of poverty and charity before we have realized a millennium of peace. In Peru under the Incas there could be no poverty and therefore no charity; it was the duty of the state to find fit work for every adult and to insist on its proper performance. If one task could not be performed another was provided and children were trained to the tasks of their fathers. If the son of a farmer proved incapable he was told off to keep the herds; if incapable of that duty he was assigned to the army or to roads according to fitness or public need. In the field of production one man's superfluity was sent to supply another's deficiency—the national surplus went to the support of the army, the magistrates and inspectors or managers. The table and the dress of each family was prescribed by law—there could be no great waste and ostentation was the monopoly of the temples and of the royal family. Need could demand kindness as a right—the duty of the whole was to care for the superannuated, the diseased and the incapable.

There could be no poverty or charity in the Christian sense among the Muscogees of the South; an allotment of land was made each year to every family sufficient for its needs and this could not be alienated. When the harvest was gathered each family contributed at will to the public granary and a part of this was set aside as provision against crop failures. The remainder supplied hospitality to visitors and provided for the families of those on whom public duties were imposed forbidding the devotion of their time to the support of their families—each community had a common stock which served as a public treasury.

Every citizen had the right to supply his need of food or clothing from the property of any other citizen, but he was in duty bound to return such acquisition at a convenient time; if he did not he was adjudged incapable and dealt with as a public charge—severe means were used to reform the incurably idle. Each citizen was a policeman bound to report delinquents—each capable citizen must serve on call against public enemies, bringing weapons and food with him. Such a community had no poor and exercised no charity—had no jails—paid no charges for the use of land or money—in such a community a thief was unknown because there was nothing to tempt him at home. To steal from an enemy was commendable as an act of war, but the accumulation of capital was impossible and it was permitted to take what was needed. Why should wise men talk about the possibility of eliminating poverty when it has been done and we know exactly how it was done?

DIRECT PRIMARY CURIOSITIES

The only contest in the California Presidential primary was for the selections of delegates to the Republican national convention. There was no dispute about the choice of Progressive and Democratic delegates. According to the California primary law a voter at the polling place is entitled to receive the official printed ticket he asks for, no matter under what party name he has registered, or if he has registered under none. He declares his party by his ballot. The first 26 names on the ballot cast Tuesday were those of United Republican candidates, that is, those of the Hiram Johnson party. The next 26 names were those of regular Republican candidates. The latter won by from 30,000 to 40,000 votes.

In the Michigan Republican primaries 83,058 votes were cast for Henry Ford, 77,872 for William Alden Smith, 1,074 for Theodore Roosevelt and 303 for Charles H. Hughes. At the Republican convention the Resolutions Committee recommended the Michigan delegates to support Hughes or 'some other good Republican." The last in the primary was the first in the convention, apparently. Mr. Ford is entitled to the first ballot. Then the delegates will proceed as if neither he nor the primary existed. It is said that the votes in the primary cost on an average $2 apiece. The record price so far, however, stands to the discredit of Beaverhead County, Montana, where the average was nearly $6 per vote.

Robert G. Ross, of Lexington, an amiable livery stable keeper, was a candidate for the nomination for President in both the Republican and the Democratic primaries in Nebraska. He got a vote of some 15,000 to 20,000, about equally divided between the two parties. Somebody in the town of Wayne, desirous to know something about the opinions and the career of a statesman with so many friends in both camps, made inquiries which were answered in a letter, which is printed verbatim, as follows:

> Dear Sir your card received and will say that i was Borned in Repley Ohio. My parents moved from there when I was 2 years old to Cattettsburg, K Y was educated there and at Portsmouth Ohio, and raised as a Methodist of which my parents was when about 17 came to Nebraska Lexington Dawson Co about 31 years ago was on ranches and later a farmer fo about 25 pears different things a short time in the above mentioned was a Member of vangelical Church in early days and now a member of Presbyterian here in Lexington Neb for about 9 years. have never taken a drink of Liquor nor my Father eather since I was old enough to know till he died you you preachers ought to get Busy and give the Delegates to under stand what your intention is they nominated a man of Whiskey type or one going it tou faced as some of them is very truly—Robert G Ross Lexington Neb

Printing this letter the New York Times says: 'Illiteracy is consistent with all the virtues, and a hundred and fifty years ago or less many fine gentlemen and ladies were as careless of spelling, grammar, capitalization and punctuation. We print it for the reproach of the Nebraska citizens, a tenth of the Republicans and the Democrats of the State, who thought that this year of war and the gravest problems and difficulties and even dangers for the United States was a good occasion to turn their political duties into a 'joke.' 'Oh, but the primary is a joke,' we shall be told, and these Nebraskans can't be blamed for using to the uttermost its comic potentialities.' The primary is a fraud, but what is the mental state, what is the perception of serious issues, what is the quality of patriotism among citizens in whom a rather unfeeling sense of humor seems to be the sole reaction to the great events and duties of this time? Robert Ross is not a joke. He is an indictment.—Utica Dispatch.

THE RIGHT WAY TO READ THE WAR NEWS

Here are a few suggestions which may help you to read with better understanding the fearful and wonderful war news sent across the water to us daily.

When you see a dispatch beginning, "a returned neutral, whose name cannot be mentioned," and dated somewhere in Switzerland, you can safely set it down for the invention of a needy penny-a-liner who wants the price of a meal.

When you see a dispatch that purports to give the conversation and plans agreed upon at a meeting of either the French, German, British or Italian army staffs, you can set it down as a pure fake. The crowned heads and military chiefs of Europe are not in the habit of confidentially relating their secret conversations and military plans to newspaper correspondents located in Holland, Denmark, Switzerland, Italy or any other neutral or hostile country.

When you see a dispatch asserting that "we inflicted enormous loss upon our enemies with no losses to ourselves," you can safely disbelieve it. When two armies fight under modern conditions both get hurt.

When you see a dispatch saying that "during the night, after successfully repulsing the enemy, we withdrew to a better position, previously prepared, you can make up your mind that some body has had a licking and is putting as good as face as possible on the defeat.

When you read that "our gallant army is only waiting the proper signal to begin the long-heralded offensive which will finally smash the foe," you can make up your mind that a gallant correspondent is writing against time and space.

When you see a dispatch dated Berlin via London, or Athens via Rome, or Copenhagen via Geneva, recollect that you are reading stuff which has no definite origin and is worth no more and no less than a dispatch from Pekin, China, via Podunk, Indiana.

If you want to know how the war is really going pay attention to the localities mentioned in the official dispatches, and by aid of your maps you can easily decide which forces are advancing and which are being pushed back. And when all is said and done, it is always the more powerful and victorious armies which advance and the weaker and defeated armies which fall back.

That is the acid test of warfare and its results.—N. Y. American.

INDIAN DAY WILL BE OBSERVED SATURDAY

American Indian day was proclaimed under proper seal by Governor Whitman yesterday, for the celebration on May 13. On that day, the American Indians are for the first time in history to celebrate a holiday of national scope, of their own origin and in co-operation with the white people who have come to inherit their country. New York has been the first State to make the day an official recognized holiday. The idea was proposed by A. C. Parker, archaeologist of the New York State Museum, and was adopted by the national conference of Indians in Denver three years ago, but a definite date was not fixed until the Lawrence, Kansas, conference last October.

Who's the Public?

By F. A. MITCHEL

I was to write a scenario for a moving picture, having received an order from Forman, the editor of a large film manufacturing company, who had said to me:

"I want something up to date. People in these days are very restive under the chains of matrimony. Give me a play on this subject, and don't be squeamish about it."

I held a dialogue with my characters with a view to finding out their feelings, utilizing a fictitious audience as a sort of Greek chorus. This is what was evolved.

"Mrs. Trevelyan," I said to my leading lady, "you are the mother of a boy four years old, Reginald. Your husband is a spendthrift and is using up the family income, as you suspect, on other women. John Guilford, an old flame of yours and a splendid fellow, sympathizes with you. He would supply the deficiency caused by your husband's extravagance, but there is a barrier to his doing so in your having a husband."

"Kill him!" shouted a virago in the audience. (A virago is a masculine woman.)

"The husband?"

"Yes."

I ran my eye over the rows of filled seats for approval or disapproval, but got nothing definite.

"Is my boy Reginald to appear as one of the characters?" asked Mrs. Trevelyan.

"Well, yes. He is one of the elements of the scheme. I would much rather leave him out, for he will be the hardest character of all to handle."

"He would be much better off," cried the virago, "with a good man for a stepfather than his real defective father."

"Guilford," I said, "how do you feel about your part?"

"Am I to be the villain of the play?"

"No; you're to be the hero—I mean the leading gentleman."

"I like that! How the dickens do you expect me to make a hero of myself and at the same time make love to another man's wife?"

"I'll tell you what you do," said Mrs. Trevelyan. "Bring out in your play that my husband repents or turns out to be a good man after all."

"In that case," bristled Guilford, "where do I come in?"

Advancing toward my audience, I noticed a very ladylike woman with an impressive face sitting in a proscenium box. I asked her for a reply to Guilford's question.

"He should never have come in at all."

I was not getting on. My heroine was not satisfied to take a new husband; my hero was unable to make a hero of himself while making love to another man's wife, and I had a child to dispose of too young to understand what they were all doing.

"Come; get to work," I said to the players, and I began to lay down the scenario. I labored through three acts and succeeded in reaching the fourth, in which I proposed to dispose of the husband and marry his wife to a noble, good man.

I was relieved to see in my hypothetical audience that the wife held their sympathies pretty well, but the whole scheme broke down under a scene that Forman had suggested as being worthy to be handled by a genius. The parties involved were Trevelyan, his wife and Guilford. The scene was the culminating point of the break between the Trevelyans. I had nerved myself up to the work with the help of ten cups of strong tea and was moving on swimmingly when little Reginald must needs come in and, seeing his mother delivering an address to his father that I had spent much time and pains on, ran up to him, threw his little arms about him and cried out:

"Mamma, why do you scold papa? You mustn't scold papa. I won't let you."

"Shoot the villain of the play!" cried a voice in the audience.

"Do you refer to me, sir?" asked Guilford hotly. "I'd have you understand, sir, that I'm the hero of this play."

"Give Trev another chance!" cried a countryman in the audience. "He didn't mean nothin'! My ole woman has lots more agin me than he's done—if she only knowed it!"

"Then you're a brute!" cried a feminine voice.

"What are you going to do with the kid?" called a voice loud above the hubbub.

"Send him to an orphan asylum," suggested a woman in the gallery. "That's better than a father that isn't his father, and a hypocrite at that!"

"Better sink the whole lot of 'em!" was the last call I heard above the din, which now became confusing. Jumping up from my desk, I ran to the telephone, called up Forman and said to him:

"Who wants that kind of a play you have given me an order for?"

"The public."

"Who's the public?"

"Why, the public is the—the public, of course."

"You mean that the public is the creation of men who make a living by producing rotten plays and novels! Get some one else to write your play for you. I'm out of it. Goodby!"

If as clean a play as mine on this subject creates displeasure what should be the feelings of those who are not "the public" at seeing one wherein the wife and mother is bad?

GROW 64 BUSHELS OATS PER ACRE

Chattaraugus County Agent Gives Results of Experiments With Lime and Fertilizer.

Does it pay to fertilize in growing oats? Herman K. Crofoot, manager of the Cattaraugus county farm bureau, last year conducted 15 field tests, and is planning to continue his studies through a number of years in order to determine the residual effects of the fertilizer and lime that was used.

Four hundred pounds of acid phosphate per acre was applied by the farmers taking part in the testing. The yields where this fertilizer was used in connection with lime averaged 64.3 bushels per acre, contrasted with the average yield of 42.5 bushels per acre where lime was used but no fertilizer was applied, and 39.5 bushels per acre where neither lime nor fertilizer was applied.

"In Cattaraugus county there are annually grown over 31,000 acres of oats. If 25 per cent. of the oat-growing farmers would adopt the practices of these findings, it would result in an increase in value of the oat crop of this county of over $87,265 a year," says Mr. Crofoot. "With the lime and the acid phosphate, we secured an increase of 24.8 bushels per acre of grain and .8 ton of straw per acre. At a fair valuation, this increase is worth $18 per acre, without counting the effects of the applications upon the succeeding crops. The experiments will be continued through 1916."

STRAWBERRIES FOR MARKET

YIELD, SIZE AND FLAVOR CAN BE SECURED THROUGH PROPER MANAGEMENT.

"Very often growers fail to realize the importance of fertilization in the growing of strawberries. When strawberries are grown for home and nearby markets, yield, size and flavor are the chief considerations. Good texture is another necessity when the berries are to be shipped to distant markets," says Earle W. Gage, of Chatauqua county, New York, in Green's Fruit Grower. "As a general rule, an abundance of nitrogen will produce heavy yields and large berries, but sufficient phosphoric acid and potash in available forms are needed to develop the flavor, color and firmness of the fruit. The kind and amount of fertilizer to use depends upon the nature of the soil. From 1,000 to 2,000 pounds per acre is generally applied, depending somewhat upon the locality and the natural conditions."

Prices vs Profits

Don't let the increased price of fertilizer scare you out this year. Of course it isn't pleasant to be compelled to dig down somewhat deeper into one's pocket to pay for the ton or two of plantfood needed, but remember that the same war that is making your fertilizer prices high is also boosting the price of your farm products. Corn and wheat are very materially higher than in normal times.

Let's figure for just a minute. Suppose you have been using 300 pounds per acre of 2—8—2 fertilizer on your corn. At normal prices this would figure around $3.75 per acre. It would be difficult to buy this same analysis of fertilizer today—the price has been kept down by reducing the potash content. A brand containing the former amounts of ammonia and phosphoric acid and a small percentage of potash would cost approximately $4.75 per acre when applied at the above mentioned rate. This makes an increase of only $1.00 per acre—the price of one and one-half bushels of corn.

When you consider also the better quality, the greater assurance of early maturity, and the residual effect on succeeding crops, it seems foolish to stand back because of increased fertilizer prices. Now, doesn't it?

Lime Supplements Fertilizers

"Lime is not required by all crops and when used in excess may cause less instead of gain. This is shown by the experiments at Pennsylvania State College, in which two tons of burnt lime applied every four years in a rotation of corn, oats, wheat and clover, produced a reduction instead of an increase in yield when manure and fertilizer was not used in connection, "declares Director Charles E. Thorne, of the Ohio Experiment Station. "One of the effects of lime is to cause a rapid decomposition of the organic matter in the soil by fostering bacterial action, and when the lime is not supplemented with manures and fertilizers that will favor a larger growth of crops and roots, the stock of organic matter may be so depleted as to reduce the yield of the land."

UNITED STATES POSITION ON ARMED MERCHANTMEN.

A memorandum by the state department on the attitude of the United States toward armed merchantmen has become known in Berlin.

The memorandum was interpreted by close observers as bearing directly on the crisis with Germany.

The position of the United States now is that an armed belligerent merchantman under instructions to attack in all circumstances enemy naval vessels, or influenced to do so by offers of prize money or penalties, loses its status as a peaceable merchant ship.

It is stated further:

"It should, therefore, be considered as an armed public vessel and receive the treatment of a warship by an enemy and by neutrals.

"Any person taking passage on such a vessel cannot expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship."

BETTER CHANCES NOW FOR BABIES OF UNITED STATES

Analysis Shows That Healthiest Period Is About Eleventh Year.

A native white boy baby now has at birth one chance in two of living to the age of sixty. So it has been discovered by S. L. Rogers, director of the census, from an analysis of the vital statistics of the New England, northern and middle states.

At the end of his first year the baby has a trifle better than an even chance of reaching sixty-four. He has one chance in two of attaining seventy under the same conditions.

A girl at birth has an even chance of living a few months past sixty-four. At twenty-two her chance of reaching seventy is an even one.

Thus a native white male at forty-two and a native female at twenty-two have about the same chance of celebrating their seventieth birthdays.

On his first birthday the chance that the boy or girl will die within the coming year is only about one-fourth as great as it was at birth. The rate continues to decrease until the twelfth year.

The healthiest time in the life of the average native is between his or her eleventh and twelfth birthday. When the man grows to be forty-eight his chance of living is just what it was in his third year. When he is sixty-two his chance is as it was on his second birthday.

In its first year of life the boy New Yorker's chance for reaching his second birthday is nearly one-fifth less than if he lived in the country part of that state. Thus at birth the country boy in the Empire State has an expectation of 7.7 years more of life than the boy in New York city, until he is thirty-nine. The country man has more than five years better chance of life than his metropolitan cousin.

Not until the New Yorker is eighty-eight is his chance of living longer better in the city than in the country.

TO HAVE ACRES OF BIRDS.

Millionaire Banker Will Convert Estate Into Model Sanctuary.

Commodore E. C. Benedict, millionaire banker, is planning to convert his estate of 100 acres at Greenwich, Conn., into a model bird sanctuary, combining a frontage of Long Island sound with a back country. Part of the estate compares favorably with the Adirondacks for primeval wilderness.

The Greenwich Bird Protective society, which has a membership of 300 prominent and wealthy residents of the community, including E. C. Converse, William G. Rockefeller, Mrs. A. A. Anderson and Ernest Thompson Seton, has agreed to furnish the ways, and the commodore promises to supply the means. The work of preparing for returning birds will proceed at once.

Commodore Benedict, now eighty-two years old, attributes his good health to his outdoor life.

HELEN KELLER "HEARS."

Caruso Sings Lament of Samson For Blind and Deaf Woman.

Helen Keller, the famous blind and deaf woman, placed her fingers on the lips and throat of Enrico Caruso, the tenor, in his rooms in an Atlanta (Ga.) hotel the other morning and "heard" him sing the lament of Samson, blinded and in chains grinding corn for the Philistines.

Through the medium of her marvelously sensitive fingers the voice of the tenor was transmitted, and as she sat and "listened," her lips apart, her blind eyes wet with tears, she whispered:

"Oh, wonderful, wonderful! Though I cannot see your face, I can feel the pathos of your song."

Miss Keller almost collapsed, so powerfully had the voice of the tenor stirred her.

FIRMNESS OF PURPOSE.

Firmness of purpose is one of the most necessary sinews of character and one of the best instruments of success. Without it genius wastes its efforts in a maze of inconsistencies.—Lord Chesterfield.

EDITING SHAKESPEARE.

Nicholas Rowe, Poet Laureate, Was the First to Attempt It.

The first folio was printed partly from the earlier quartos and partly from manuscript copies in the hands of players. It did not have the careful editing that so important a work should have had, but it preserved from destruction a number of the plays that had not appeared in quarto form.

Nicholas Rowe, poet laureate and dramatist, in his edition of 1709 made the first attempt to edit Shakespeare in the modern sense. He modernized spelling, punctuation and grammar, added lists of dramatis personae and divided the acts and scenes properly. Since his time editors have been busily engaged in corrections and emendations.

Alexander Pope, the second editor, issued his Shakespeare in 1723, and this was followed in 1733 by Lewis Theobald's edition, whose bitter attack upon Pope in "Shakespeare Restored" led to the latter's making Theobald the dull and pedantic hero of his "Dunciad." The handsome edition by Sir Thomas Hanmer appeared in 1744 and William Warburton's in 1747. Dr. Samuel Johnson's edition was published in 1765. Then came Edward Capell's in 1767-68, George Steevens' in 1773, Joseph Rann's in 1786-94 and Edward Malone's in 1790.—New York Times.

SECRET OF A FLOWER.

How Did the Trumpet Vine Discover the Bared Stump?

If some one advanced the theory that this plant had some unknown power of reasoning you would probably reply that "plants can't reason because they have no mind." You may change your opinion after you hear this story, related by Royal Dixon, who writes entertainingly about how near like human beings in their actions plants are.

The story is about a trumpet vine, the favorite of many an old fashioned garden. About twenty feet from where it grew was an old pine stump with the bark on. One day a fire was built about the foot of the stump, and the bark was burned off.

Immediately the trumpet vine sent forth a long trailer across the garden to the stump. It raised the tendrils, felt the smooth surface of the stump and started to climb. Before long the whole blackened surface was hidden beneath the leaves and blossoms of the new vine.

With the rough bark on the stump provided no surface for the clinging tendrils of the vine. After the fire destroyed the bark the vine found a place to climb.

How did the plant know that the fire had prepared the stump? We don't know. Ask the flower.—Philadelphia North American.

COST A DIAMOND FOR EACH TIME JILTED

Youth Has Only Three Remaining of Original Seven In Locket—Hopes to Find a True Lover.

Kansas City, Mo.—A well dressed young man walked into a loan office here. He brought forth his pocketbook and paid the interest on money he had borrowed on a locket.

Then he asked Frank Nevin, appraiser, to be allowed to see the trinket. Nevin produced it. The young man examined it and grew confidential.

"That locket," he said, "represents four love affairs gone astray. You will notice four of the seven diamonds with which it was originally set are missing. It was four years ago that I became engaged the first time. The girl suggested I take a diamond from the locket for our engagement ring. I have been engaged three times since, and every time I have used one of the diamonds. The girls have broken their engagements and then kept the ring.

"You see these three remaining stones? I hope to be able to find a girl that will keep her promise before they are all gone."

Mr. Nevin said the diamonds in the locket were worth about $75 each.

Cellini's Quick Cure.

Benvenuto Cellini when about to cast his famous statue of Perseus, now in the Loggia dei Lanzi at Florence, was taken with a sudden fever. In the midst of his suffering one of his workmen rushed into his sick chamber and exclaimed, "Oh, Benvenuto, your statue is spoiled, and there is no hope whatever of saving it!" Cellini said that when he heard this he gave a howl and leaped from his bed. Dressing hastily, he rushed to his furnace and found his metal "caked." He ordered dry oak wood and fired the furnace fiercely, working in a rain that was falling, stirred the channels and saved his metal. He continues the story thus: "After all was over I turned to a plate of salad on a bench there and ate with a hearty appetite and drank together with the whole crew. Afterward I retired to my bed, healthy and happy, for it was two hours before morning, and slept as sweetly as if I had never felt a touch of illness."

The Exclusive X Club.

One of the most exclusive of clubs was the X, whose last surviving member was Lord Avebury. It was founded by a little coterie of literary scientists, including Sir Joseph Hooker and Herbert Spencer, and, though intended to comprise ten members, never got beyond nine, because no tenth was found who came up to the two requirements of mental caliber and intimacy with the other nine. Many names for the club were suggested and rejected before a member's wife proposed terming it after the unknown quantity X.—London Opinion.

The Dog.

I've never known a dog to wag
His tail in glee he didn't feel,
Nor quit his old time friend to tag
At some more influential heel.
The yellowest cur I ever knew
Was, to the boy who loved him, true.

I've never known a dog to show
Halfway devotion to his friend
To seek a kinder man to know
Or richer, but unto the end
The humblest dog I ever knew
Was, to the man that loved him, true.

I've never known a dog to fake
Affection for a present gain,
A false display of love to make.
Some little favor to attain.
I've never known a Prince or Spot
That seemed to be what he was not.

But I have known a dog to fight
With all his strength to shield a friend,
And whether wrong or whether right,
To stick with him until the end.
And I have known a dog to lick
The hand of him that men would kick.

And I have known a dog to bear
Starvation's pangs from day to day
With him who had been glad to share
His bread and meat along the way.
No dog, however mean or rude,
Is guilty of ingratitude.

The dog is listed with the dumb.
No voice has he to speak his creed.
His messages to humans come
By mutual conduct and by deed.
He shows, as seldom mortals do,
A high ideal of being true.

FARM LANDS OF NATION ARE INCREASING IN VALUE

Five Dollars Per Acre Added During the Past Twelve Months.

The value of farm lands of the United states, without improvement, is estimated at $45.55 per acre, as compared with $40.85 a year ago, $40.31 two years ago, $38.10 three years ago and $36.23 four years ago. The census reported the value of farm lands in 1910 as $32.40, and in 1900 as $15.57 per acre.

In recent years the value of farm lands has been increasing at the rate of about 5 per cent a year, or approximately $2 per acre per year. The exceptional increase of the past year may be explained partly by the reaction in the southern cotton states following a temporary depression last year and partly by the stimulus given by the war to prices, particularly of grain.

Increases have been general throughout the United States, the only noteworthy exceptions being orchard lands and some irrigated lands in the northwest, which apparently had been overvalued before.

The percentage increases in value of farm lands in the past year by sections of the United States are: North Atlantic states, 10 per cent; eastern part of north central states, 9 per cent; western part of north central states, 12 per cent; south Atlantic states, 19 per cent; south central states, 11 per cent; far western states, 11 per cent; entire United States, 11.5 per cent.

The percentage increases in farm land values in four years—that is, since 1912, are: North Atlantic states, 17 per cent; eastern part of north central states, 20 per cent; western part of north central states, 28 per cent; south Atlantic states, 23 per cent; south central states, 25 per cent; far western states, 34 per cent; entire United States, 25.7 per cent.

These estimates are based upon reports from crop reporters of the bureau of crop estimates of the department of agriculture.

DIPLOMACY COLLEGE COURSE.

Eighty Universities to Give Lectures on International Relations.

Eighty universities, colleges and normal schools in the United States will co-operate with the division of intercourse and education of the Carnegie endowment for international peace by offering during their summer sessions courses on international law, international relations, American diplomacy and Spanish and Latin American affairs. The Carnegie endowment, acting through the American Association For International Conciliation, will supply the instructors in some cases or will grant allotments to defray part of their salaries in others.

The subjects are to be offered as part of the regular college curriculum and are to be given by experts.

The work was offered in about seventy-five institutions last year, and the total enrollment was approximately 2,000. The object of the work, successfully carried on in 1915, is to spread a wider and more accurate knowledge of international polity and international relations.

FRIVOLS $1,000,000 A DAY.

That's What New York Does, Upstate Rector Says He's Heard.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, rector of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church of Rochester, N. Y., at the special meeting of the convention of the national campaign of the laymen's missionary movement in New York city said that a recent estimate placed the daily amount spent in dissipation in New York city at $1,000,000 and that moving pictures cost the nation $500,000,000 a year.

"Our religion is not costing us enough," he declared. "We give to God a part of what we have left after we have amply provided for ourselves."

TEST RESULTS NINE YEARS AT COLLEGE

Striking Differences in Orchard Yields Through Fertilization Reported.

"Orchard fertilization deserves greater attention by farmers for three reasons. First, it is the orchards that have been producing well that are likely to be in need of some extra assistance if they are to maintain their pace," writes J. P. Stewart, of Pennsylvania State College, in Pennsylvania Farmer. "Second, the man who continues to have good crops to sell is in better condition than those who have not, and third, the most immediate need, after better methods of marketing are devised, is better and greater production."

Professor Stewart explains the Pennsylvania experiments which have been conducted during the past nine years and with them links the many other experiments along the same lines to show the value of attention to orchard fertility on quality and production of fruit. In one case, the unfertilized trees have averaged 78 to 85 bushels per acre annually, while the adjacent trees receiving proper fertilization have averaged 180 to 216 bushels. Moreover, these trees were relatively young. In more mature trees the net annual gains from fertilization have ranged from 150 to 325 bushels per acre on the average for a period of seven years.

"In some cases the yields are being retarded by other conditions, such as a deficient moisture supply, a frosty or otherwise improper location, poor spraying or too much pruning," continues Professor Stewart. "After these factors have received attention, it is quite likely that fertilization of the right sort is the most important need. In most cases, proper additions of nitrogen and phosphorus are all that are needed to supplement the present resources of the soil. This does not mean that potash is not required by trees, as we have one important experiment in which it is proving to be the leading element, but incidentally this happens to be a fortunate condition just at present in view of the fertiliser market."

Where the orchard interests are large, Professor Stewart points out that it is advisable to accompany the use of fertilizer in general with a local test to determine the exact needs of the orchard involved.

Putting the Back Yard to Order

Even the smallest back yard may be made to yield a supply of fresh vegetables for the family table, if two or three crops are successively grown to keep the area occupied all the time, according to the garden experts of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Half an acre properly cultivated and fertilized may easily produce $100 worth of vegetables in one year. The soil in the average back yard is not only lacking in plantfood, but also has been packed until it is hard and unyielding, say the garden experts. To loosen such soil requires that the ground be spaded, hoed and raked until a fine seedbed is produced. Manures and commercial fertilizers should be applied to supply humus and plantfood to produce the rich soil necessary for the growing of garden produce in a profitable manner.

GOOD OLD SUMMER TIME.

A yield of 49 bushels per acre was obtained from this field, on which 300 pounds per acre of high grade fertilizer was used.

Professors' Theories Practical

Two Massachusetts professors, F. A. Waugh and F. C. Sears, are succeeding in the orchard project which they started in 1908. The way they have developed their orchard of 125 acres indicates that their theories will work. They now have 18,000 trees, and have recently purchased more land until they now have 400 acres, and have improved their land by investing their profits each year and putting the surplus of their profits into the business. Commercial fertilizers, intelligently used, provided the missing plantfood in their sandy soil and their cultural methods and orchard management methods have made their project financially successful beyond their expectations.

I Save Drinking Men!

A Chicago Alderman Saved From A Drunkard's Grave. His Experience Free to All.

From The Tribune.—"Alderman J. H. Francis, probably the best known man in Chicago, was a respected, wealthy man until whiskey gripped him. He was a member of many of Chicago's leading clubs and commercial organizations; a Thirty-second Degree Mason; had a prosperous business; a beautiful home and happy family, automobiles, servants and everything that goes with health, wealth, sobriety and refinement. He fell a hopeless victim to strong drink; saw everything swept away, was in prison, had delirum tremens and was forced into the hopeless beggary of drunkenness. He was considered beyond redemption by his thousands of old friends."

From The Chicago Daily News.—"Today Alderman Francis is once more a respected citizen."

From Alderman J. H. Francis.—"Notwithstanding my awful condition I 'Came Back' and am today a sober, healthy and prosperous man In the interest of humanity I want to assist every drinking man that is burdened with the curse of drink. It makes no difference whether you are a moderate, occasional, or periodical drinker or a confirmed or habitual drunkard I can help you. I have saved thousands of men and if you drink yourself or have a member of your family, friend, acquaintance or neighbor who does write me. All letters confidential. I can remove permanently the desire for drink from any person. I want to tell everybody how I was restored to sobriety and health and the craving, desire and use for strong drink was taken absolutely out of my life forever. There is no human being so apparently helpless and hopeless from drink that I cannot save. Write me freely and fully regarding yourself or any case you have in mind. I treat all correspondence in strict confidence." Address

"Unto You, Therefore, Which Believe He Is Precious"

Evangelist Peacock preached in the forenoon yesterday from I Peter 2:17, "Unto you, therefore, which believe he is precious." The sermon follows in part:

Those who have experienced the saving power of Jesus Christ and who have been born again into the kingdom of God, know the preciousness of Christ to the believer. Christ is precious to the soul of the believer because He has delivered him from the bondage of sin and death and brought him into possession of eternal life. Dr. Robertson in speaking of this passage of scripture makes it read like this, Unto you therefore, which believe preciousness. He says this is an exclamation, and Peter was really giving us a sentence without a subject. There is a spoce here for some reason, but, we should not permit ourselves to stumble over this span, but take the passage of scripture as Peter wrote it." He says I once saw a letter that was all gapped and spaced. It was a letter from a boy who after wandering a long way from home lay dying in the hospital. His nurse brought him to Jesus, and he wrote to his mother with his last strength and you could not read that letter, it was all blotted and blurred. Why? Because great, hot tears had splashed down upon the pages as the boy was writing. But the mother could read it. To her those gaps were the most eloquent. Those tear drops that had blotted out the words told of the overflowing heart of her boy in which he talked of Jesus. Probably some think like this might have caused the omission of the words which Dr. Robertson has left out in his translation. Peter, no doubt, was swept by uncontrolable emotion when he was writing this letter. His heart was filled with overflowing love for Jesus Christ and probably he was so overpowered that he did not finish the sentence as he intended to finish it.

The Preciousness of Jesus.

The reference in this passage scripture is to Jesus Christ and the revised version reads. "For you therefore that believe, is the preciousness, but for such as disbelieve, the stone which builders rejected. The same was made the head of the corner and a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence." The first sermon preached by Rev. Spurgeon was taken from this passage of scripture. He was a lad of sixteen and preached in a cottage to a handful of poor people who had come together for worship. He says, "I felt my own inability to preach, but I ventured to take this text, Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious. I do not think I could have said any thing upon any other text but Christ was precious to my soul and I was in the flush of my youthful love and I could not be silent when a precious Jesus was the subject. I had just escaped from the bondage of Egypt, I had not forgotten the broken fetter, still did I recollect those flames which seemed to burn about my path and that devouring gulf which opened its mouth as if ready to devour me. With all those things fresh in my youthful heart I would speak of His preciousness, who had been my savior and had plucked me as a brand from the burning and set me upon a rock, and put a new song in my mouth and established my goings?

My friends this the experience of all those who have been saved through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. To such individuals Jesus is precious, because He has done for them what no human being could do. Redeemed them from the bondage of sin and given unto their possession eternal life and if Christ was precious to us when we accepted Him as our Savior, He ought to be more precious to us today than He has ever before been. And should be the supreme desire of our souls to live for Jesus and to glorify God in our lives. It seems to me we do not have the right conception of eJsus Christ. Wseay we love eJsus but we are not willing to spend much time in His service. We very soon tire in God's service of worship.

We begin with one tick of the clock end up at the other. But the time was my friends when men and women would spend days and nights in the service of God, when services could not be completed for the great gaps of emotion, for the breaking down of feeling, when men broke down as they talked about Jesus because Christ was precious to their souls. And the most eloquent utterance in the service of Jesus, is when the sob overcomes the voice. But now we can talk for hours about Christ and give our opinion concerning eJsus and the kingdom of God and never have a break down; never a rise in the throat, never a tremor in the voice, never a gap. Why is this? Do we really love Jesus more than anything else in the world? Do we realize that Christ has delivered us from torment and set our feet upon a rock and put a new song in our mouths and established our going. Do we feel in our innermost soul that without Christ we would be lost? Oh the preciousness of eJsus to the true child of God no words can describe. I once read of an eloquent professor in a college, who was called Rabbi Dimean. He was so learned in Hebrew and philosophy that the students called him Rabbi. One day a student was reading the 53d chapter of Isaiah. He read these words: "He was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." The reading ended. The students waited for the eloquent comment of the famed professor. But what has come over him? He is evidently struggling with strong emotion and at last he puts his head upon the Hebrew Bible and a sob escapes him. With broken voice he said, Gentlemen, do you know what Jesus is dong here? It is damnation, and damnation taken by love." And the learned professor sobbed like a child. That was the most eloquent comment ever uttered on the 53d chapter of Isaiah. That man realized the preciousness of Christ to his soul. He understood that Jesus had born his griefs and had carried his sorrows. He realized that Christ had been wounded for his transgressions. He had been bruised for his iniquities and with his stripes he had been healed. Christ was all in all to him and without Jesus he would have been the most miserable of all God's creatures.

My friends, what is Jesus Christ to us? Do we realize that Christ has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows? That He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities and with His stripes we are healed? All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all. This is why Christ is precious to every true believer.

Why People Reject Him.

The man who has been brought to know Jesus Christ as the sole foundation upon which the soul can build its eternal home and who has been taught that Christ is first last and always, the author and finisher of his faith, does not think of Jesus or look upon him in a frivolous way. He thinks of Jesus as the God of his salvation, the one who satisfies all his longing desires and he looks upon Jesus as the one altogether lovely, the chiefest among ten thousand. Now, my friends, this statement can be proved beyond a doubt. Read your Bible and you will find men who were willing to part with houses and lands and country and reputation and honor and wealth and their home and with life itself for Christ's sake. Because Christ was more precious to them than anything else. And we find they did it cheerfully without murmuring, because they considered that they were gaining spiritually by so doing. It would be a glorious thing if we could get this idea into the minds of Christ's people at the present time. If we only make men and women realize that they are losing by keeping back that which belongs to God, we could have accomplished a great work. When a man has been truly converted and brought into the kingdom of God, nothing in this world could make that man deny Jesus Christ.

The reason people turn from Christ and grow cold in the service of God and go in the way of the wicked, is because they have not been thoroughly converted and have never experienced in their souls the preciousness of Jesus Christ to the believer. Look at Polycarp before the lions, when he was brought in before the wicked mob and they demanded him to deny God. Thousands of savage eyes looked down upon him. They were ready to devour him before the lions had an opportunity. But he stood before them a feeble man alone in the arena, with no eye to pity and no hand to have, and in the spirit of Jesus Christ he said, "I have known the Lord for many years, He never wronged me, why should I deny Him? I will not." with one voice that mob of worldly minded people, cried, "To the lions. To the lions. To the lions." The lions rushed upon him. He was devoured, but he did not say one word against his Lord and Savior. Because Christ was precious to him, and if it had been in his power I believe he would have given a thousand lives, rather than deny Jesus. And this is true of many people at the present time. There are in our own town men and women by the score who would face death rather than deny Jesus Christ, because Jesus is all in all to them. And such individuals are the most glorious citizens this town has ever had or ever will have and my prayer to God is this, that men and women of this stamp and type may increase until the people of this world realize that Jesus Christ is precious to the believer.

Now, my friends, if we have no people ready to suffer for Christ, we have no church. For if we are not willing to give up the world and the gain thereof for Christ our religion is a mockery in the sight of God. The Christian loves Jesus and the longing desire of his heart is to know more about Christ, because Christ is precious to him and if such an individual is brought to the place where he must take a stand for right or wrong. The true Christian will say, I can not deny Jesus, I can die but I can not deny. I can burn, but I cannot return. And such an individual will stand by Christ until Jesus comes with all the holy angels to carry his immortal spirit safe into the heaven above to be with blessed assurance of the true child of God. Heaven and earth will pass away but the believer in Jesus Christ will live throughout the ages of eternity and the longer he lives the more precious Jesus will grow.

Is Jesus really precious to you? Have you the blessed assurance that your name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life? If you haven't, shame be upon you for the way you have treated the Son of God. Can you let Jesus Christ suffer and still not appreciate His love? It is high time for you to go to Jesus and say, Jesus, thou didst die for me. My Savior, I come to Thee. He is holding out his hand of love and mercy and every one taking hold of it receives pardon. My friends, have you felt His love? Is He precious? If not why? In the name of God, accept Jesus and your soul shall live and God will bless you in this life and the life to come.

CAMPAIGN'S WORST ENEMIES FOUND IN CITY'S CHURCHES

Evangelist Peacock addressed 1,800 men yesterday afternoon at the Tabernacle, the title of his sermon being, "Chickens Come Home to Roost." Another successful meeting was held in the First M. E. church in the afternoon, with 800 women present. The meeting was in charge of Miss Speer and Misss Painter. Announcement was made that another meeting for men only will be held at the tabernacle next Sunday afternoon. At this time Mr. Peacock will talk on "Booze; or, hot shots for the liquor bunch."

The 2,100 persons who attended the Tabernacle in the morning listened to an interesting account of local happenings in connection with the campaign. "I had people say to me this morning that the people who are fighting this campaign are the people in the churches who have always made the church a laughing stock," the evangelist stated. "Why some of the best friends I've got here are the saloon keepers, if the way in which some of them treat me when they meet me may be taken in evidence. One of the theatre proprietors last night offered the use of his theatre for any meeting we wanted to hold. So, some of you fellows who think you're helping the devil along, wake up The devil's giving you the ha ha.

"You never saw a Christian down in a saloon looking up through the bottom of a beer mug or a whiskey glass. You never saw a Christian in a theatre when there was a revival going on in a tabernacle in their town. You never saw a Christian standing around on the street corners and cussing and swearing and spitting tobacco juice when there were souls in danger of going down to hell.

"These men of the G. A. R. are here today as the heroes of a great war for the salvation of a country, not because they stood on the corners and talked but because they were willing to sacrifice, to give their blood for love of country. I'm not in favor of war but I know that when country calls thousands will answer the call and be willing to give up in sacrifice even unto death itself. Likewise the Christian anxious to honor God and Jesus Christ must be willing to give all upon the altar of His sacrifice. I have no sympathy for those measly little-souled 2x4 hypocrites in the church who take their stand for the devil at such a time as this.

"There's one thing where the Catholic church has got the Protestant church backed right into eclipse. You never heard a Catholic who would say a word against the Catholic church. But, you Protestants are not loyal to the church of Jesus Christ. Instead, when the call to clean up comes many of you Protestants just walk off and lick off the tin cans with the billy goats and butt the campaign."

In the afternoon the Rev. Mr. Sheffield of Minetto opened the meeting with prayer. A double quartette sang "Just Outside the Door." The sermon at this meeting which was attended by men only was on vice; its causes and effects; the home; methods of recreation sought by men, etc.

Commencing with tonight, delegations from the various factories in the city will pay visits to the Tabernacle. The employes of the Hunter Arms Company will meet in front of the City Hall tonight at 7:20 to march to the Tabernacle. The Chocolate Works' employes will meet at Broadway and 4th sts. at the same time.

The program for the week in part is as follows:

Tuesday noon luncheon at the Presbyterian church for the business women. A delegation comes from Oswego in the evening.

Wednesday afternoon—Mr. Worth will conduct his Bible class at the close of the preaching services.

Wednesday night—Meeting for women only at the Tabernacle. Evangelist Peacock will deliver the sermon.

Thursday, 9:30 A.M.—Union prayer services at the Presbyterian church.

Thursday night—Brotherhood and Men's Bible classes will attend the services in a body. They will meet at the N. Y. C. depot, Broadway and 2d st. at 7:20.

Friday noon—Luncheon for business women at the Congregational church.

Friday night—W. C. T. U. night. Also delegations from Hannibal."

Last night's sermon was in part as follows:

1st John 4:15. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in Him and He in God.

Is it true that some people are ashamed to confess that Jesus is the son of God? Is it true that some people are afraid to speak the name of Jesus when with their companions or associates? I believe there are many people in this world ashamed of Jesus Christ and His gospel. Paul said, I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first and also to the Greek. And in this passage of Scripture Ist John we are told, Whosover shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God abideth in Him, and he in God. According to this statement, God only abides with those who have the courage to confess that Jesus is the son of God. The man or woman ashamed of Jesus cannot have Jesus abide in them, and they cannot abide in God. Jesus made this matter very plain in one of His addresses. In Matthew 10:32 we find these words: Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I also confess before my Father which is in Heaven. 'But whosoever shall deny me before men', him will I also deny before my Father which is in Heaven. In Luke 12:8, whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the son of man also confess before the angels of God. But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God. And in Romans 10:9 we read: If thou shalt confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus Christ and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. According to the teaching of all these verses men must confess Jesus as the son of God before they have any assurance of salvation. There are many people who seem to imagine that they do not need to openly acknowledge as the Savior in order to be saved. Where do they get their authority for making such a statement? They cannot find it in the word of God. Everything in the word of God teaches that men must believe in Jesus and confess Him before men to be the Son of God in order to be saved. When the jailor at Phillippi said to Paul and Silass: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" What did they tell him? Did they say, be a good moral man? Be kind to your own family, and be kind to your neighbors. Attend divine worship occasionally. No, they said to him believe on the Lord Jesus and thou shalt be saved. Thou and thy house. These men knew the way of salvation and they were teaching the jailor the way of salvation. They were honest men. They had been with Jesus and they knew from their own experience that Jesus was the savior. God sent Christ into the world for the purpose of saving the world. This was His mission. In Matthew 1:21 we read "And she shall bring forth a Son; and thoushalt call his name Jesus; for it is He that shall save the people from their sins. Now, if men can be saved without confessing that Jesus is the son of God, why did God send His son into the world? In John 3:16 we read, for God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world but that the world should be saved, through Rim. Re that believeth on Him is not judged; he that believeth not hath been judged already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God. Now if it is not necessary for you to believe in Jesus and confess Him to be the son of God, then this passage of scripture, in fact all these passages of scripture are not true. Are you ready to say the Bible is a lie? Are you prepared to say that God did not mean what He said? Are you willing to take the responsibility of saying that Jesus told an untruth when He said, He that will not confess me before men, neither will I confess him before my Father in heaven. I think I will take the word of God in preference to the word of man. I think God and His son and the apostles of Jesus Christ. knew about as much about this matter as any one else. For my part I prefer God and His Son to these who are unwilling to confess Jesus.

Reject Jesus Christ and you are a condemned sinner. It doesn't make any difference who you are. You might be the best man morally in the whole community. You may be the strongest man intellectually, you may be the richest man in Irwin, but if you do not confess Jesus as the son of God and personally take Him as your personal savior, you are on the road to hell or the Bible is a lie. Your morality, your intellect, your riches, can never pave the way for you into the Kingdom of God apart from Jesus Christ. So long as you refuse to confess Jesus and live the Christ life, you are a condemned sinner in the sight of God.

Several years ago there was a literary gathering in London at which a famous preacher was a guest. A young lady played the piano and sang. She charmed the people and won their applause. The old minister walked over to her and said, I, in common with others vas charmed and delighted with your ability, but as I sat and listened to you play and sing, I only thot how much good you could do and what a power you would be for God, and the Kingdom of Christ, if the Lord only had your heart. The young lady was angry and the old minister said: I meant no offense. She went home and retired but not to sleep. She rolled and tossed, and at two o'clock in the morning she got on her knees, cried to God for forgiveness, seized her pencil and Charlotte Elliott wrote: Just as I am without one plea, but that thy blood was shed for me; and that thou bidst me come to thee, O Lamb of God I come, I come. She realized that the proper thing for her to do was to confess that Jesus is the Son of God, and to take Him as her savior. And this is the only thing for you and me to do.

Some young men and women will say, I cannot confess that Jesus is the son of God and go with the crowd. They will laugh at me; they will ridicule me. They will make life miserable. Then for your sake, and for Christ's sake, get out of the crowd. Don't let them pull you down to eternal damnation. Sometimes people say, if I could go to some other place I would be able to confess Jesus. That is a mistaken idea. What you need to do is to surrender to Christ and He will do the rest. And the only place you can make a whole-hearted surrender to eJsus, and obey His command: This do in remembrance of me, is in the church. Christ cannot save a man if he will not permit Him. And every man must decide for himself which course he intends to persue. Rev. Sunday says, I remember one night out in Elgin, Ill. I walked out into the audience, to a clean-cut, good-looking, young man, and I said, Are you a Christian? Yes. What church do you belong to? None. When did you confess Jesus Christ? I never did. I don't need to confess Him nor to join the church. I said, You are not a Christian. That's a matter of difference of opinion, said the young man. I said, it's a matter of revelation, not of opinion. It's the word of God. You are not a Christian at all. I looked at his coat and saw that he was a

CITIZEN GREETS A GREAT PAPER

He Remembers Back Seventy-five Years When Greeley Was a Young Journalist.

Mr. H. N. Gilbert, of Academy st., is in receipt of a copy of the New York Tribune containing his letter of greetings and reminiscenes to that excellent newspaper upon its celebration of the anniversary of the date when Horace Greeley issued its first number.

The letter to The Tribune follows:

"Sir: I read in my paper today that seventy-five years have passed since Horace Greeley published the first number of The Tribune and that scarcely a man is now alive who read the announcement as published at that date. I am one of the fortunate exceptions, and still live to read and enjoy this unsurpassed newspaper.

"It was in 1840 that Horace Greeley issued the first number of "The Log Cabin,' which contributed so materially to the election of William Henry Harrison. My father was building a house in 1840 and giving employment to a large force of mechanics, composed of about equal numbers of Whigs and Locofocos, and during the noon hour very heated discussion was held over the election, which I became much interested in. I read "'The Log Cabin,' which was freely distributed, and I became a warm convert to Mr. Greeley's writings during the campaign.

"General Harrison was elected in November, inaugurated President in March, 1841, and just one month later he died, and April 10, the day set for funeral, the first number of The New York Tribune appeared. Some years later, when it had doubled in size, the weekly edition had reached the country and was the leading paper taken. In the small hamlet of the writer more than fifty copies were taken, and when two mails a week were received The Semi-Weekly Tribune was taken.

"Later the daily has been read for more than a half century—a liberal education to any interested reader. It keeps fully abreast of the times. The last stand you have taken in regard to non-advertising of the liquor trade is a move in the right direction. I like The Tribune and cannot well do without it.

"H. N. GILBERT."

SEVEN TO ONE AT OHIO EXPERIMENT STATION.

The row of apple trees on the left was fertilized with complete applications of fertilizer and the mulch maintained. The row of trees on the right received neither fertilizer or mulch. Seven barrels of apples were picked per tree from the fertilized row and only one barrel per tree from the unfertilized row. The barrels were left in front of the trees from which the apples were picked until the above photograph was taken.

FACTORS IN FRUIT GROWING

PRUNING, FERTILIZING, SPRAYING, CULTIVATION AND THINNING ARE FIVE ESSENTIALS.

Pruning brings color—fertilizing brings size—spraying brings freedom from blemishes—cultivation brings quality—and thinning brings uniformity. These are the five factors and their special results, that are considered essential in fruit growing, by F. M. Clement, Director of Vineland Station, Canada. The five factors are all essential to the production of the best quality and quantity of fruit.

"A fertile soil produces large fruit. Size within the variety is more variable than quality within the variety and consequently, though in practice cultivation precedes fertilizing, the later—fertilizing—is more important," adds Professor Clement. "A starved tree produces little apples; a well-nourished tree larger apples. Fertilizing also affects the vigor or health of the tree, and makes it better able to resist disease."

As You Farm--So Shall You Reap

"Real farming does not consist in drawing upon the fertility of the ages and doing nothing to replace what has been taken away. Soil mining will not create permanent prosperity," says I. B. Henderson, in Farm, Stock and Home. "If the farm operations are carried on in such a way as to maintain and increase the fertility of the soil, we can naturally expect that our farms will become relatively more profitable in years to come."

Parable of the Sugar Bowl

If there is just so much available fertility in an acre of soil and you use part of it in making a corn crop, part in an oat crop, part in wheat and another part in grass, and then begin the rotation over again and keep selling off the larger part of it all the time, you are like the housewife who has a bucket of sugar and dips out one day with a teacup to make a cake; another time fills the sugar bowl and another time dips out with a spoon to sweeten lemonade or make cookies, without the bucket being refilled. Some day our good woman will scrape the bottom.—Green's Fruit Grower.

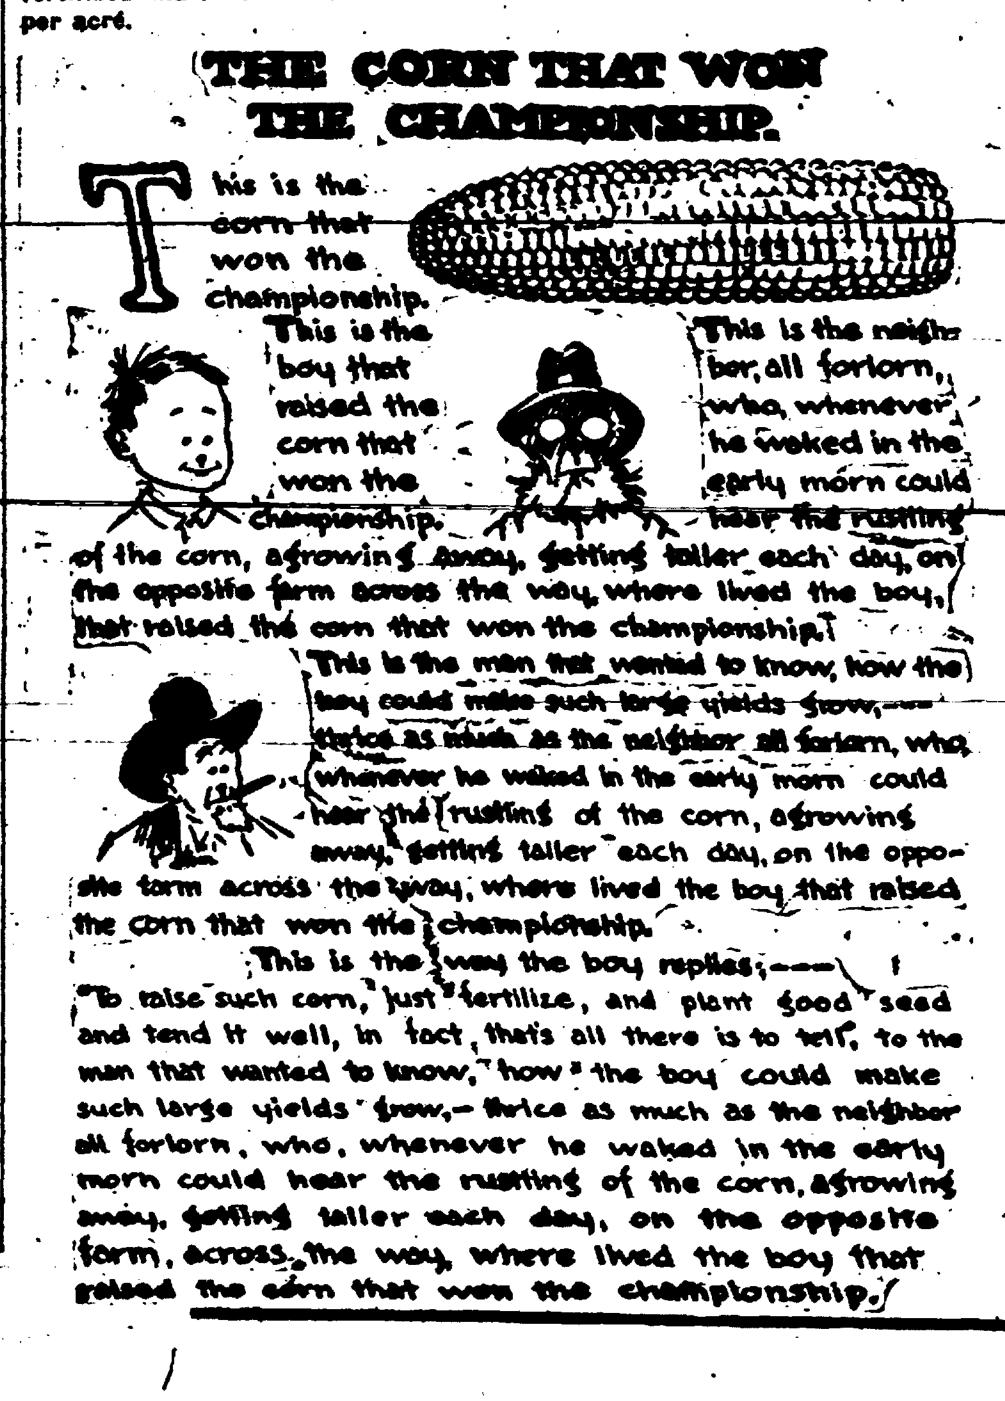
Wheat Crop Reported Short

The United States Department of Agriculture, on April 1st, estimated the total production of winter wheat for 1916 at 495,000,000 bushels. The production in 1915 was 655,045,000 bushels, and in 1914 it amounted to 684,990,000 bushels.

This looks decidedly like high-priced wheat for the next harvest season. The farmer cannot increase his acreage at this time, but he can greatly increase the yield for each acre by giving his wheat fields a liberal top-dressing with a high-grade fertilizer early in the spring. The cost of the application is small when you consider that one ton of fertilizer will be sufficient for six to eight acres.

GIVING THE CORN CROP A QUICK START.

The middle row in the scene above was left unfertilized, in order that the difference in growth might be noted throughout the year. The effect of a liberal application of fertilizer in giving the corn plants a quick start is shown in the contrasting rows above. The difference in yield between the fertilized and unfertilized corn in the above field was at the rate of 15 bushels per acre.



A Mad Woman

By ALAN HINSDALE

When I married Lucy she was the personification of modesty, timidity, shyness. She was equally mercurial. One moment the world to her was a garden of roses, the next a universal cemetery.

I was clerking on $70 a month when I married her, and we went to live in a cottage standing by itself on the outskirts of the city. The nearest house was half a mile away. Of course we couldn't afford to keep a servant, so Lucy was cook and housemaid. Fortunately her mother had taught her how to prepare viands for an ordinary meal, and I usually got home from business in time to help her with the dinner.

Our only trouble was Lucy's loneliness while I was away, as I was all day except Sunday. We had not thought of this when we engaged the cottage. Indeed, we were too young and inexperienced to think of most of our necessities. Every morning when I left my wife she would cling to me so that it was hard to get away from her. But in the evening when I returned the happy smile on her face and light in her eyes were delicious.

Our cottage was two stories and a half high. The half story was nothing more than an open space under the roof. It was approached by a rude staircase and entered by a trapdoor in its floor furnished with a bolt underneath. We would have used it for a storeroom, which means a place for family accumulations, but nothing had as yet accumulated. Indeed, we hadn't enough to furnish the house.

One day on returning from business I had reached a wood through which I usually made a short cut to the house and was passing through it when I heard a shot, which seemed to come from the direction of my home. I ran through the wood, but before emerging from it heard another shot, followed by the sound of the falling of shattered glass. Visions of my little wife being murdered lent me additional speed, and, clearing the wood at a bound, I had a view of my house.

Under a window in the garret stood my wife with my fowling piece in her hands, pointing it upward. Her back was toward me, so she did not see me.

"You miserable, contemptible thing!" she cried to some invisible object. "I just wish you'd give me half a chance; I'd teach you how to break up my china set that my mother gave me for a wedding present."

"For heaven's sake, Lucy," I cried, "whom are you talking to?"

She was so angry that either she didn't see me or wouldn't notice me. I saw the frightened face of a man for a fraction of a second at the window in the garret and heard a simultaneous report from my shotgun, followed by more falling glass. I sprang to Lucy and, seizing the gun, wrenched it out of her hands.

"What does this all mean?" I said sharply.

"That miserable thing up there has broken all our best furniture; the dinner set Aunt Harriet gave me and the tea set mother gave me."

"Who is he? What is he? Where does he come from?"

"He came into the house pretending he wanted something to eat, but, finding me alone, he demanded money. I told him I had none to give him, and he began to break things and threatened to kill me with a long knife if I didn't give him all the cash there was in the house. I told him he'd find it all hidden under a rafter in the storeroom. He went up there. I followed him and bolted the door after him. I ran downstairs, expecting to faint on the sofa, but, seeing the wreck of our things, I began to get mad. The more ruined pieces I found the madder I got. Seeing your gun standing in a corner, I took it and, going outside, saw the man at the window. He had made a rope of some stuff he'd found in the garret and was going to let himself down when I shot at him and drove him back. Just think of that beautiful tea set that my mother"—

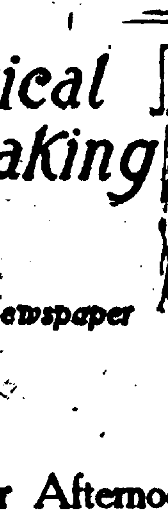
I had heard enough. I told Lucy to go somewhere and telephone a police station, while I relieved her of her sentry duty. The man's face appeared at the window again, and she tried to snatch the gun from me to get another crack at him. I told her to go at once, and she went off, turning once or twice to fire an angry look at the window.

After she had gone I spoke to the man and told him he might as well make no effort to get away, and be quiet. This he knew without my telling him, and I had no trouble with him till a patrol wagon came with several policemen and Lucy. The rascal was let out of his trap and taken away.

The excitement being over, Lucy was quite ready for a "good cry" on my shoulder, but I think this was not so much due to being let down as at the loss of our belongings, which could not be restored by punishing the man who had broken them, for he had nothing to pay with.

However, when our relations and friends heard the story of Lucy's trapping the robber and her "madness" at his having broken up her property, they duplicated everything he had smashed, so that we were not only as well off as before, but I was relieved of anxiety at leaving my wife unprotected during the day. However, when our lease expired, fearing that some other burglar might frighten her without making her mad and thus get an advantage of her, I decided to move into the city.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons



Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A Frock For Afternoon.

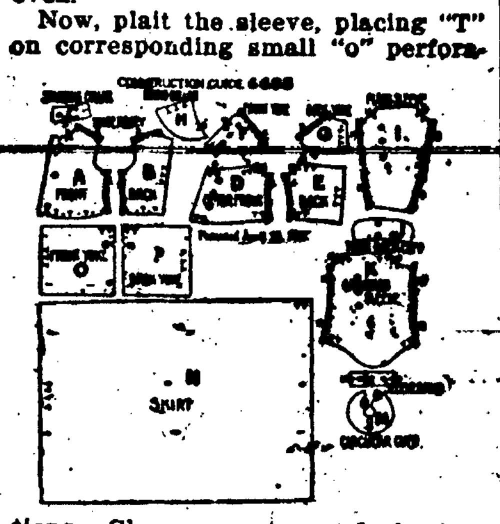
A youthful costume in rose colored voile with many possibilities of development. Embroidery or bordered material looks well after this model.

The latest frocks for the apres midi breathe of youthful happiness. This design in delicate rose voile trimmed with tucks, a round shoulder yoke and a vest of chiffon cloth is marked by a charming simplicity. It is built with a sleeveless underbody, which makes it adapted to development in sheer materials, 6 yards, 36-inch wide being required to make the dress.

Students of these home dressmaking lessons will need no instruction as to how the underbody is made. The construction guide is also very clear on the subject. For the outer waist, however, first close the underarm seam as notched. Then gather upper and lower edges of front and back between double "TT" perforations and 2 inches above lower edge. Close shoulder seam of yoke as notched, ew to upper edges of front and back as notched. Sew round collar to yoke, notches and center-backs even.

Now, plait the sleeve, placing "T" on corresponding small "o" perforations.



Close seam as notched. Sew cuff to sleeve, single large "O" perforations even, small "o" perforation in cuff at seam of sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Then, close the seam of skirt section and hem the lower edge. Form tucks as indicated, stitching lower tuck 2¼ inches and upper tuck 2 inches from folded edges. Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Join the yoke sections as notched leaving left side seam free above large "O" perforation in front yoke for a placket. Turn under lower edge on slot perforations. Lap on skirt section, center-fronts, center-backs and edges underneath even, small "o" perforation in skirt section at seam in yoke: and stitch 1½ inch from folded edge in tuck effect. Gather upper edge of yoke between double "TT" perforations. Adjust to position stitching upper edge over upper row of gathers in waist, center-fronts and center-backs even: side seam at under-arm seam. Stitch tape under gathers, from left side seam to center front and finish for a closing.

Edge the collar and cuff with lace and, if desired, add a bit of hand embroidery to the vest.

A TRENCH WORKER

One of the Suffragists Who Helped In New York State.

"ASK FANNY LAWSON," IS SAID

Of the 200,000 Women Who Worked For Suffrage In New York In 1915 No More Than 1,000 Broke on to the Front Page.

The soap box orator and the suffrage leader get into the limelight and on the newspaper front page, but the canvasser and the volunteer worker have the good of the cause for their main reward. Yet the cause depends on the workers in the trenches for its success. In the New York state suffrage campaign in 1915 there were 200,000 women who worked for suffrage. Of these perhaps no more than 1,000 were known to the news headliner. The other 199,000, who canvassed the voters, ran meetings, worked overtime and went without their proper meals, didn't even appear in fine print at the foot of the column.

MISS FANNY LAWSON.

Among the suffrage trench soldiers of New York city Miss Fanny Lawson is widely known. "Ask Fanny Lawson" has grown to be a suffrage headquarters' stock phrase. And Fanny Lawson always knows. She knows every assembly, senatorial or congressional district by heart. No one ever stumps her on a suffrage question. What she doesn't know she finds out at once, and where she is needed most there she arrives "prompt as time," whether it is to climb tenement stairs and canvass voters' lists or to organize a meeting and drill a new squad of volunteer workers. She marshals hosts of canvassers as deftly and as quietly as if she were stirring a one egg drop cake in an immaculate kitchen or dusting the drawing room bric-a-brac. She may be found perched on a packing box eating a much overdue sandwich at almost any hour of the day or night or carrying a host of letters to the latest possible post, for every suffrage worker in New York city knows Miss Lawson will not quit her job until it is done.

THROW AWAY YOUR RUBBISH.

The Wisdom of Cleaning Out Accumulations of Gowns and Mustiness.

In some houses the first thing that greets one is a faint musty odor arising from carpets which have grown old, but which, though probably swept frequently, have never been sent to the cleaner's and, being down for years, have accumulated deposits of dust underneath them. In old houses, too, the flooring will have shrunk and provided receptacles for insects under the carpets. Constant traffic and the soil of the street brought in on dirty boots also get into both carpet and flooring.

It is cheaper to do away with rubbish of all kinds than to suffer the results in ill health. Bedrooms are often used as receptacles for stores of old clothes, old trunks and other things, the occupants forgetting that these things are but so much cubic capacity cut off from the air space of the room and that they harbor germs and cause infection.

If household furnishings are worn out and there is difficulty in renewing them, better eliminate them than retain them to the detriment of health. The bare room is a healthy room. If rooms require repapering have them distempered instead. Paperhangers are at a discount just now, and the cleanly distemper which many women who are handy can manage by themselves is healthier and cleaner than a cheap and soiled paper.

Cottage Bedspread.

Nothing is more appropriate for the summer cottage than a bedspread decorated with colonial applique embroidery, which is nothing more or less than patchwork in a glorified state. Unbleached muslin is used for the spread, and it is bound with an inch and a half border of blue chambray. A design in vines and flowers is cleverly carried out, with blue and yellow chambray for the flowers and green for the vines. A long sham to cover both pillows may be worked out in the same manner.

Rice With Cream Sauce and Cheese.

Throw half a cupful of rice into boiling water. After twenty minutes drain in a colander and finish with cold water. Pack in a deep dish and reheat in the oven. Make a cream sauce and add half a cupful of grated cheese. Pour over hot rice and serve.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Sleepy Time Story That Will Interest Boys and Girls.

A TINY WOODS CREATURE.

Wise Ways of a Little Animal—How a Shrewd, Small Beast Maneuvers to Preserve Its Life—Walking In the Forest—Sport For Young Folks.

"Now, children," said Uncle Ben to Polly Ann and Little Ned, "I am going to tell you about

THE LITTLE "'FRAID ONE."

The Indians call the wood mouse Little Tookhees, and because of his timid, modest ways he is also called the 'Fraid One.

Tookhees builds the doorway of his home beneath a mossy stone in order to be well protected from his enemies, for bird and beast and fish are ever on the outlook for little 'Fraid One. To his timid glance every tree limb holds at least one Hookooskoos, or horned owl. Every bush or clump of trees could shelter Mooween, the bear, or Kagax, the bloodthirsty weasel, and below every friendly eddy Skooktum, the fat, fat trout, lies in wait should Tookhees swim too close to where he lives.

So in order to be very, very certain that the coast is clear the 'Fraid One makes a false start from his doorway, looks quickly around, gives a squeak that can be plainly heard most anywhere and scoots back into his house. So very sure are his enemies that the little mouse has seen them and will never dare to come out again that they go away to some other hunting ground. But if they had waited a moment they would have seen Tookhees poke his tiny nose out of his front door, look very carefully about and then go on his way to attend to whatever errands he may have to do.

By little jumps and leaps he dodges in and out among the leaves and grasses, never for any length of time showing himself in the open.

These little creatures travel mostly at dusk, when they are not easily seen, and in order to protect their nest they tunnel to it from quite some distance, so that one watching will not suspect where it is hidden. The wood mice are neighborly, sociable little folks, visiting the different colonies. The children of the wood are usually tame little creatures if one has patience to win their confidence, but it is not always a kindness to them, as in becoming tame they lose much of their protective instinct and soon become easy prey to their enemies.

"Basket Upset."

A very interesting game is called "basket upset." The game is played this way:

All the players sit around the room, with one player in the center. The one in the center gives every player the name of a fruit, and then the one in the center gives a sentence, using the names of some fruit. If the player calls the name of the fruit you have you must jump up, turn around and sit down before the player in the center can get your seat. If the one in the center says "Basket upset" every one must change seats.

Quiltmaking For Girls.

Little girls will be glad to know that patchwork quilts are again the fashion and that they can make them very easily. Just cut nine perfectly square patches and sew them together so that the colors in the center make a kind of cross. Then mother will put them all together when you have squares enough made. Any little girl ought to be able to make a patchwork quilt.

FISH FOR LENT.

DEVILED HALIBUT.—Boil two and a half pounds of halibut, then free it from skin, bone and flake it. Have ready chopped fine one large onion, six Spanish peppers (those canned in oil), eight olives and a stalk of celery. Add a cupful of fine crumbs and add the mixture to the fish, with two tablespoonfuls of chutney sirup, a tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce, a cupful of tart apple sauce, a gill of melted butter and the whites of two eggs stiffly beaten. Put into well buttered baking shells or ramekins and bake from twenty to forty minutes, covering them the first fifteen.

Salmon Souffle.—Flake enough cold boiled salmon to make two cupfuls. Add pepper, salt, the juice of an onion, two finely chopped cold boiled eggs, a teaspoonful of chopped tarragon leaves, half a gill of melted butter, half a gill of cream and the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Toss the ingredients lightly and turn into buttered ramekins. Bake until puffed up and delicately browned.

Creamed Codfish Tongues.—Parboil as many tongues as are needed to allow one to a portion. When done remove root and skin and have ready a French cream sauce made in the following way: Put in a saucepan half a cupful of butter and when melted add the juice of a lemon, add as much bicarbonate of soda as would cover a 10 cent piece and then add a large cupful of rich milk that has had a dessert spoonful of cornstarch dissolved in it. Stir until it is smooth, then add pepper, salt and the tongues. When all is hot serve.

Shrimp Tarts.—Line separate tart pans with good pie crust and crimp the edges. Shell and break in pieces a quart of freshly boiled shrimp. Make a good rich cream sauce and put in the shrimp, season well and fill the tarts, dusting the top of each with a few fine crumbs, grated cheese and pepper and salt. Put in the oven, and by the time the crust is done the filling will be brown on top.

A RUN ON CHICKENS.

CHICKEN PIE.—Put creamed boiled chicken into a baking dish and cover with pastry. The sauce may be made of stock instead of milk and thickened with cornstarch. Individual patty tins may be used instead of the deep pottery dish. Peppers cut up and added to the pie will improve its flavor.

Chicken Souffle.—Run cold boiled chicken through the meat grinder. When you have two cupfuls blend two tablespoonfuls of flour with two of butter, and to this add two cupfuls of milk. Season with salt, cayenne and chopped parsley and add the chicken to the white sauce. Half a cupful of breadcrumbs will thicken the mixture still more. Finally separate four eggs, add the beaten yolks to the chicken mixture. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites last of all. Bake in a buttered dish for thirty-five minutes. Serve immediately.

Chicken Turnovers.—Use a croquette mixture, but instead of frying lay the rolls on rounds of pastry, fold over bake and serve hot or cold. A little minced ham or tongue may be added if you like the flavor.

Chicken Soup From Leftovers.—A chicken soup from leftovers is particularly good when herbs have been used in the stuffing. Cook the carcass bones, skin and any stuffing, until a sufficiently rich liquor is obtained. Strain, cool, skim and season. When ready to serve beat an egg yolk for each quart of stock, blend with the soup and float a spoonful of unflavored whipped cream on each plateful.

Club Sandwich.—Make two square slices of toast, previously trimming off the crusts of the bread. After buttering, lay upon the lower slice two thin slices of crisply cooked bacon, a slice of seasoned cold chicken, a tender lettuce leaf and spoonful of mayonnaise. Cover with the other piece of toast and cut diagonally. Serve while the toast and bacon are hot.

Women Make War Machines.

An exhibition of the work women are doing to replace the men who are at war is being held in Kensington, England. All that is best in women's industry is shown, including what is done in the home, in the munitions and Red Cross work and women's ability to provide new careers for others. One woman, a consulting engineer, demonstrates how the aeroplane depends on women. Careful and responsible workers are necessary, for the safety of the aviator depends on the women's work. In Glasgow the women are instructed in tram driving so that as male employees leave for enlistment their places may be filled quickly.

Fresh Gloves.

Soiled gloves are an abomination, especially in the spring. There may be a day when we shall look back upon the soiled white and colored gloves of which some of us are guilty occasionally with as much distaste as we now look on soiled shoes. Work out some scheme now whereby your gloves can always be fresh. Wash fabric gloves, wash kid gloves and silk gloves can all be kept spotlessly fresh without much trouble.

To Cream Hard Butter.

If butter is hard to cream don't warm it. This changes the texture of it. Instead run it through the vegetable ricer. This breaks it into small pieces, and it can then be readily creamed.

The Coffee Shrub.

As a rule, the coffee shrub first flowers in its third year and then bears only a small crop of fruit. The fifth year is usually the time of the first considerable yield. In Java three gatherings are made annually, called the "early," the "chief" and the "after crop," but only the second is of great importance. The flower enjoys but a very ephemeral existence, as the setting of the fruit generally takes place within twenty-four hours, and the petals wither and fall off almost immediately. A coffee estate in full flower is a very beautiful sight, but its glory is very soon past.—Westminster Gazette.

G. O. P. CONVENTION TO CONSIDER VARIOUS MEN FOR THE NOMINATION

When Delegates Meet In Chicago There Will Be at Least a Dozen Possibilities.

Attitude of Roosevelt and the Progressive Party One of most Interesting Features of Meeting.

WHO is going to be the Republican party's nominee to oppose Woodrow Wilson in the 1916 presidential campaign?

This question has been asked thousands and thousands of times, but no one in the country can give the correct answer. No one knows, and any statement is a guess, and one man's guess is nearly as good as another's.

There are so many elements that have to be considered before naming the G. O. P. standard bearer that no one can tell what the short weeks prior to the convention will bring about. By the time the delegates are assembled in the Chicago Coliseum on June 7 many things can happen which may change the entire outlook.

About the only certain thing in the next presidential race is the fact that Wilson will be the Democratic candidate. Bryan's attitude, Roosevelt's attitude and the Progressive party are the things that are worrying the leaders.

When the Democratic convention met in Baltimore in 1912 the delegates had been instructed for various men from different sections of the country. Every locality had its favorite son. The Republicans at that time had but two possibilities, Taft and Roosevelt.

This year the tables are turned. Woodrow Wilson will be the Democratic nominee. On the other hand, there will be at least a dozen possibilities before the Republican convention when the delegates gather.

WARREN G. HARDING, TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN OF REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Roosevelt Prominent Candidate.

Roosevelt is one of the leading possibilities today. He has already been president for seven and one-half years, having served three and one-half years of McKinley's second term after the Ohio man was killed and having been elected in 1904. Writing about Roosevelt's actions and life would be useless, for he is the best known man in the country and has occupied the limelight more than any other public servant.

Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes of New York is another leading possibility, although he has stated time and again that he was not a candidate for the nomination. His position on the bench makes it impossible for him to state any views on questions that occupy the minds of political leaders. His friends say, however, that if the nomination is tendered him he will resign from the bench and become an active candidate against Wilson. He was governor of New York state for two terms before going on the bench.

Elihu Root is another possibility hailing from the Empire State. Mr. Root is known as a conservative and is a representative of that wing of the party. He was secretary of state during the Roosevelt administration and later was elected United States senator and served one term of six years.

Charles W. Fairbanks is Indiana's favorite son. He was vice president during Roosevelt's last term and prior to this was United States senator for two terms. His home is in Indianapolis.

McCall Has Backers.

Samuel W. McCall will go to the Chicago convention with the support of some of the Massachusetts and other delegates. He is governor of Massachusetts, ex-representative and one of the best known men in the country.

William E. Borah will be Idaho's favorite son, and other delegates may be instructed for him. He has taken a leading part in the proceedings of the senate since 1907 and is recognized as one of the ablest members of congress.

Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa is another favorite son who will receive some votes on the first ballots. Like Borah, Cummins is a leading member of the senate, having been elected in 1908. He has been the author of some of the most important bills that have passed in recent years.

Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin, who represents a distinct wing of the Republican party, has some of Wisconsin's delegates instructed for him. He was elected governor of Wisconsin for three terms, resigning during his last, when he was elected to the United States senate. La Follette is one of the original supporters of the direct vote system and is known as progressive and sometimes radical.

Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania.

Martin G. Brumbaugh will have the support of many of Pennsylvania's delegates. He is governor of the Keystone State, having been elected in 1914. Mr. Brumbaugh is one of the leading Republicans of that state and has become well known through his opposition to the Penrose element of the party.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

ELIHU ROOT.

Theodore E. Burton is the favorite son of the state that is noted for providing presidents of the United States, Ohio. The Ohio delegates always settle on one candidate and give him undivided support until it is evident that there is little chance of victory. Burton will get this support this year. He was a member of the house of representatives from 1895 until 1909, when he was elected to the senate, serving until 1915. He placed William H. Taft in nomination in 1908.

Senator John W. Weeks is another Massachusetts candidate who will receive many votes from New England delegates and also some from other sections of the country. He was a representative from 1905 until 1913, when he was elected to the United States senate. Mr. Weeks is one of the most prominent members in the upper branch of congress.

Henry D. Estabrook, a lawyer of New York city, is another man who has been mentioned as a possibility. He has many supporters and has made an enviable reputation as a lawyer.

These are the men who seem to have the best chances at the convention in Chicago, and it is almost an assured fact that one of them will get the nomination. Which one? That is the question that everybody is asking.

Already there has been a great demand for seats for the convention. The national leaders who will have the convention arrangements directly in charge have been selected.

United States Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio will be the temporary chairman of the national convention.

The formal call to the convention was addressed "to the Republican electors of the United States" and pointed out that representation this year will

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

J. D. Brown says:

Many a man has dug his grave with his tongue.

Discourtesy hurts the person who uses it more than the person towards whom it is directed.

You cannot get away from that truth by drawing a herring across the trail.

We have proved to our satisfaction that courtesy is a good investment.

One discourteous action by you over the telephone to a patron or a prospective patron does an injury to every man whose name is on the payroll; and a place on the payroll beats one in the bread line. It is not always what a man knows; it is what he does that counts. Opportunity plays no favorites.

Knockers do not kill men—they kill business. They are the persons who sift sand into the gearboxes of progress.

Wounds inflicted by a knife heal more quickly than those inflicted by a sharp tongue.

Chickens come home to roost; so do harsh words.

Today we celebrate the grand opening of the CLEAN-UP, PAINT-UP, BRIGHTEN-UP and LIVE-UP CAMPAIGN. Are you a member of that great organization of good spirited citizens of Fulton, that is going to make the city look cleaner than it was ever before? Have you seen the improvements made already? The towpath of the canal that was an EYESORE for years has been cleaned up and we urge the people who live in the buildings adjacent to the towpath to keep it clean. It means a lot to a city, when everything is clean; it means that its citizens are Healthy people.

NEXT TO GODLINESS, COMES CLEANLINESS.

You will please remember that the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce has been appointed SANITARY INSPECTOR and if you have a neighbor who does not want to CLEAN UP, just inform him; he HAS NO FRIENDS in this campaign and any one deserving it is going to get it right from the shoulder.

Three cheers for the women in FULTON; they have done a marvelous work for the campaign and three cheers for those good men who have worked hard and faithfully to make the necessary preparations for the campaign.

FULTON IS FULL OF REAL WOMEN AND MEN; it is just the art to pick them out. Follow the flag of CLEANLINESS, HEALTH aud HAPPINESS and FULTON will be in a very short time one of the best cities in the United States of America.

We thank the papers for the assistance given us for the Clean-up Campaign; we appreciate this help very greatly.

* * *

The children will do a great deal for the campaign; they have promised to work and to do all they can to make the city the very example of CLEANLINESS.

A flower here and a flower there; a little plant here and a little plant there and FULTON will be a city Beautiful.

We have NOT been born to CRITIZISE the other fellow. We all were born to HELP each other and he who forgets this, will get in the neck sooner or later.

Watch FULTON become one of the best cities in which to live; the Chamber of Commerce has done more for the betterment of the people of FULTON than any other organization has ever done or ever will do. We challenge for a debate on the question.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER. Therefore be it resolved, by the citizens of FULTON, that we co-operate and assist each other as much as we can.

* * *

Have you enlisted in the army of CLEAN people in FULTON who are NOW starting to work for CLEANER, BIGGER and BETTER FULTON? If not why not? Enlist in the Chamber of Commerce; the organization that stands for real things.

Crown Prince's Men Drive French From Short Line on Meuse

In attacks more violent than any directed against the Verdun defences since early in April the Germans yesterday swept around to the east of Hill No. 304, between that height and the Dead Man, and pushed the French to the top of the hill, and carried a third of a mile of the French line between the Haudromont wood and Fort Douaumont.

Yesterday's battle, organized on an immense scale, had been in preparation since early on Friday morning. The Germans have never ceased their bombardment of the French positions west of the Meuse since the struggle for Verdun began, but the fire has simply been maintained as a steady drop, drop of shells as distinguished from the concentrated battering resorted to when any particular point is singled out.

Early on Friday the guns of all calibres began to center their hail on 304 with its slopes to the northwest, north and northeast. The fury of the bombardment increased with the day, until late in the afternoon the French were compelled to withdraw from the northerly and northwesterly sides to the summist and seek protection on the reverse side, from where their artillery sent answering salvos. These were sufficiently threatening to prevent the German infantry debouching in any force from their shelters north east of Avocourt.

Deterred from attacking on that day, the German commander gave orders for a more thorough preparation, and all of Saturday was devoted to a bombardment, which reached unprecedented proportions. This was followed yesterday by a general attack from the Avocourt woods to Le Mort Homme.

It is impossible at this hour to say with any degree of accuracy what strength the Germans exerted, but it seems at least two new divisions were thrown into the action on this front of a little more than five miles. Sheering off from the northern slopes, which presented an open field for the French fire, the Germans pushed down along the Malancourt-Chatancourt road, to get on the eastern finak of No. 304.

Mystic Shriner, a Mason. I saw his button and said, I see you are a Mason. Yes, sir. A Mystic Shriner? Yes, sir. Supposing you say to me, Mr. Sunday, are you a Moson? Yes. What lodge? Not any. Never joined. Ever pay your dues? No, sir. Ever initiated? No, sir. I am just as good a Mason as you are a Christian. If I stand up here and tell you that I am a Mason when I've never been intiated, never paid my dues, never joined, I would lie, and if you stand up here and tell me you are a Christian when you have never joined a church or accepted Jesus Christ, you lie. God has just as good a right to tell you what you have to do to be saved as men have to tell you what you must do in order to become a Mason, or an Odd Fellow, or any other lodge. No matter how much I believe in Masonry, that doesn't make me a Mason, until I am initiated and pay my dues. No matter how much you believe in christianity, that doesn't make you a christian until you have accepted and acknowledged Jesus Christ as your Savior. The man thanked Mr. Sunday and said, Come on, boys. He walked down the aisle with his two sons and they accepted Jesus Christ and joined the Congregational church in Elgin. This is what all must do and the sooner we do it the sooner we will have God abiding in us and we in God.

Mother Fulton Lets Loose the Brooms of War Upon Laxity Manifest in Many Nooks and Corners of the Dear Old Town, With the Result That She Will Be the Angel of Brightness.

That the women of Fulton can work like Trojans in a good cause was clearly in evidence yesterday. The chairman of the ward districts met with the general chairman, Miss Ada Thayer, and reported on the work accomplished. These chairmen, with their assistants had sallied forth from their homes with their best housekeeper's eye open for business. By the detailed report given by each it was clearly shown that not a disorderly crook nor cranny had escaped their inspection. Never before in Fulton's history had it been made so clear that Mother Fulton had been such a lax old lady, and oh, how she promised those chairmen right and left to make her broom fly, to scoop up ash heaps, chase the tin cans and—well what didn't she promise to do, and in a very nice manner too let it be known. The workers were delighted with their reception and liked so much to get acquainted with her, so they said. Well, an old lady in a neat, clean gown, with her ears well washed, tending her posies, is a lot nicer person to think of as Mother Fulton than the opposite type, so everybody is well pleased with Clean-up Week, and also that a piece of the cleanest country on earth became affixed to the Chamber of Commerce.

Big Fun in Store

The problem of an effective clean-up was by no means an easy one. The tin cans bothered the workers so it was decided to call "the kids" to the rescue. It was done this way. To the first two hundred boys and girls conveying the greatest number of tin cans either to the "flats" or to the foot of Broadway at Lake Neahtawanta, where there will be someone to count the cans, the "canners" will be given a movie ticket. The fun will be great.

The committees will continue their vigilance the entire week to see that all persons have made good in cleaning up. On Thursday a final report will be made by these committees. If anyone has failed to comply with the request to make clean, the sanitary officer, newly appointed, will then take matters in his own hands, and woe be to the negligent.

On Saturday morning a tour of inspection will be made by the entire Clean-up Committee. Forty automobiles have been pressed into service, and decorated with the city's colors, blue and white, will carry about the city's streets the small army of workers that they may behold their work.

Next Monday evening the entire city will receive an invitation to hear Prof. Francis of the forestry department of Syracuse university lecture on A City Beautiful. The lecture will be illustrated and will be given at the tabernacle. Dr. Sears, sanitary inspector of Onondaga county, will also speak at this time.

Professor Francis will remain in Fulton for the week and will give free advise on landscape gardening to any and all persons seeking assistance. This service is given by the State and is done to widen interest in forestry, and in the beautifying in general, of the State.

Following is a partial summary of the general committee's report by wards:

First ward.—Outside toilet at Second and Kellogg. Bad place at Second and Hart sts. An ugly looking barn on 4th between Worth and Gansevoort; outside toilet at First and Leitch.

Second ward.—Bad place in West 4th st.; an old well on a vacant lot on 4th st.; water in well stagnant and liable to cause sickness; ugly looking places in Oak st. Pigs kept on Broadwell avenue; terrible odor. One citizens cleans and empties toilet under a shed. Barn and chicken nuisance in 1st st. between Leitch and Voorhees.

Why the Church is Losing Power Told by the Evangelist

Evangelist Peacock's sermon this afternoon was from Judges 16:20, the latter part of the text, the theme indicating the lost power of the church. He said in part: 'There is a vast difference between power and influence. A man might have money and not have power for God. A man might have culture and yet have no power for God. A man might have education and yet have no power for God. A man might be influential in a business or political way, and yet have no power for God. So that there is a difference between power and influence; a diff:erence between power and money. Sampson lost his powers when he violated an oath. We lose our power when we fail to take upon ourselves the vows made to the faith of God.

"The church has lost out by not being separated from the world. We have mingled too much with worldy things and worldly people. We have permitted the spirit of the world to drive out the spirit of God. We have failed to permit the Holy Spirit to guide us. We do not read the Bible as we should. We are not praying as we should. It is astounding how many people have new knowledge of the teaching of God's Book. In these different ways we have lost our power and many do not seem to realize that the Spirit of the Lord has departed from them. The thing for us to do is to get back to prayer. Get back to serving God in the church and remember the vows we took to God in the church."

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1916.

THE OTHER SIDE

The splendid enthusiasm and co-operation shown by the workers on the Clean-up campaign committee has a meaning far wider than a clean city. It heralds the realization of an ideal, and that ideal a happy unified people, close-knit comrades, working with eager hands and glad faces as they behold their chiseled product—A City Beautiful, wherein all jealous boundaries are blotted out and each man is found a prince of peace and each woman a staunch soldier in the home; gardens will be planted generously thru our streets; selfish deeds will be few, and songs and praises many.

Perhaps there are people who would not tolerate the belief that such an ideal could ever be realized. This may be true and yet has not history proven that when a people have no visions they die. Is it not far better to strive to produce, even tho the result be a feeble imitation of the masterpiece, than that we turn blindly aside. Even tho Fulton may never attain perfection, is it not a worthy piece of life's work that her citizens should have learned, even in the slightest measure, the blessing of mutual helpfulness. The closed hand grasps no sunshine, and were factories unnumbered to land on Fulton soil it could not put the "blue bird" in our cage. Material gain, the world has proved does not bring happiness.

It is the individual life that must be reckoned with in the building of our city. The things that make individuals grow, the things that make them finer men and women, are the things that build a city. Putting money in a man's pocket and fine clothes upon his back couldn't possibly make a man happy. Factories alone won't build a city, but if a city is full of happy people doing many happy things in a very happy way it acts as its own magnet.

Happy, clean, radiant people always draw a charmed circle. Dirty, gloomy, grouchy people make others fly, and what is true of individuals is also true of communities.

This is Clean-up, and Live-up Week for Fulton. Are you "cleaning up" your grouch and gloom, letting in the sunshine on your cobwebby thots, and living up to your highest ideals? This is what our city needs; this is what we as individuals need, so let the merry war go on.

MR. CHOATE'S ERROR

Joseph H. Choate, who is supporting Elihu Root for president, finds it inconceivable that the Republicans should nominate Theodore Roosevelt. Why inconceivable?

The Roosevelt disqualifications which Mr. Choate summarize have little to do with the issue:

"Mr. Roosevelt is not a 'tried' Republican, or rather he was 'tried' in 1912 and found wanting. He then deliberately attempted to destroy the party, bolted from it and set up his Progressive machine for the sole purpose of defeating Mr. Taft and gratifying his own selfish aims."

This serves very well as a description of what Roosevelt did in 1912, but it in no way acts as a barrier to Roosevelt's nomination by the Republicans in 1916. It may be an advantage to him.

In 1905 William Randolph Hearst, who was a Tammany member of Congress from New York city, bolted the renomination of Mayor McClellan, organized a political party of his own and ran for mayor on an independent ticket. During that campaign he made most vituperative and libellous attacks upon Charles F. Murphy. He even caricatured Murphy as a convict in prison stripes, and although he did not succeed in defeating Mayor McClellan he came within 2,000 votes of it.

The next year, 1900, Charles F. Murphy nominated William R. Hearst for governor. It was even necessary for Tammany to steal the nomination after Grady had done "the dirtiest day's work of my life," in order to give it to Hearst, but Hearst was nominated, and Hearst accepted.

The Republican party today is guided by the same lofty standard of political morals that guided Tammany in 1906. It is under the same sort of corporation control, those that dominate the Republican party being rather more greedy and aggressive, but all of them centering in Wall Street and its great financial houses. Theodore Roosevelt's political principles do not differ essentially from William Randolph Hearst's political principles. In practice Hearst spends his own money and Roosevelt spends Perkins's money, but that distinction is not important.

Tammany surrendered to Hearst in 1906 because he had a political party of his own which controlled the balance of power in the state. Roosevelt is in a situation no less favorable than Hearst's. His political party, with himself as its candidate, holds the balance of power. In 1905 it would have seemed "inconceivable" to Mr. Choate that Tammany would nominate Hearst for governor, yet Tammany did. With this illustrious precedent, why should Mr. Choate regard it as inconceivable that the Republicans will nominate Roosevelt for president in 1916?

Mr. Choate forgets that Wall Street wants a reunited Republican party, and unless the party is reunited there will not be much "soap." But with a reunited party the Republican campaign contributions for 1916 will out-Hanna Hanna and the glad old "national honor" days of 1896. Every Republican politician wants some of that money for his organization, and he understands the terms on which it is to be had—party harmony. There can be no harmony which leaves Roosevelt out of the reckoning, and he has the whiphand. Wall Street is more than willing to take Roosevelt in order to get a Republican Congress, and it is Wall Street that pays the freight.

There might have been a Republican Party once whose surrender to a third-term bolter would have been "inconceivable," but there is no such Republican Party today. It will never be said of the very practical gentlemen who now control it that they have that "chastity of honor which felt a strain like a wound." Their motto is the motto of the plutocratic father of Mr. Dooley's parlor Socialist—"Get the goods."—N. Y. World.

ANY GENTLEMAN

Any gentleman can swear, get drunk, tell stories that would lower him in the estimation of his mother and wife, and go where he would be ashamed to be seen by the boy he loves—but he won't.

Any gentleman can say harsh, sarcastic and cruel things; he can take advantage of the other man's necessities; he can drive him into a corner; he can rub hands gleefully and say to himself as he sees him writhe, "Business is business"—but he won't.

Any gentleman can kick a dog, abuse a horse, misuse a child, laugh at another man's mistakes and devilishly gloat over another man's failures—but he won't.

Any gentleman can grow cynical, sour and pessimistic; he can feel that everybody is against him and he against the world; he can scoff at all good things, ridicule religion and damn your judgment—but he won't.

Ank gentleman can say harsh, sarcastic and cruel things; he can crush flowers and fertilize weeds; he can stab you with words—but he won't.

Any gentleman can make this old world, this topsy turvy, this greatly misunderstood world, a far better place because he chanced to pass along this way—and he will!—Chicago Herald.

Opinions

STOP THE BUTCHERY

If England wants to place the names of Pearse, Clark, MacDonagh, Plunkett, Daly and O'Hanrahan, alongside the name of Emmet in the roll of Irish martyrs, England is succeeding in doing it.

If England wants to embitter the people of Ireland to an extent that neither in this generation nor for ten generations hereafter, will they or can they forget or forgive, England has gone a long way to do that.

But if England wants to quiet the conditions in Ireland, to weld Irish loyalty to herself, to conciliate instead of agonize and infuriate a people never more necessary to England than they are today, England better put an end to the cold-blooded killing of the leaders in the Dublin revolt.

Already the military executions are a colossal and criminal blunder.

If they keep on they will be not only butchery, but butchery wholesale.

Stop it!—Buffalo Times.

METHODISTS AND AMUSEMENTS

Among stock questions that have had the floor for many years and that will not down is the so-called amusement question. The title is a misnomer. There is no extensive disagreement in the Methodist Church as to "diversions that cannot be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus." A proposal to remove the ban from the theatre and the dance hall and such like indulgences would meet with instant and overwhelming disapproval in this church, as it would in nearly all the great denominations of the land. Why then the everlasting struggle over paragraph 271? Mainly because it penalizes the practice, and the church never has and never will inflict the penalty. "It is a dead letter—out with it!" say the progressives. "Let it stand," say the conservatives. "Its removal will be interpreted as permissive." And there you are! Also costly hours will be spent in strenuous wrestling with the subject without hope of anything like a unanimous conclusion.—A. N. Fisher, D. D.

THE REMEDY

It is, we believe, coming to be widely and fully recognized that there is but one certain way of correcting motion-picture evils. The only effective remedy lies with the people. If those who are offended by moving pictures of a certain class will only stay away from motion-picture shows where this class of pictures are exhibited, until something better is offered, the problem will probably solve itself. In this, and many other cases, it is want of moral courage among decent people that goes farthest toward promoting things to which such people rightfully object.—Christian Science Monitor.

THE WOMAN WITH THE SCRUBBING BRUSH

Day after day I pit my puny strength
Against the City's lusty carelessness.
The scraps and leavings of untidy folk—
The refuse thrown upon the public way—
The factory chimneys belching smoke and soot—
All this, when blown by chance within my door,
A public fault, becomes a private shame,
And lurks in furtive corners to convict
Me as a slattern in my neighbor's eyes.
My whole existence narrows to one thought—
The Dirt! The Dirt! It haunts me in my dreams;
I rise betimes, to find it waiting there,
To mock my feeble shifts of yesterday.
I have no other prayer than to desire
The world to stand aloof, nor soil my floor!
My husband comes, aweary from his work;
The children run in, laughing, from the street,
Their only playground; but I do not seek
Their eyes with loving glances from my own;
I look no higher than their dusty shoes,
That track in Dirt, and make my labor vain.
And then I snap at them, and they at me;
And Home is turned into a bickering hell!
Yet cleanliness is all that marks us out
From vice and ignorance on every hand;
And if I falter in my daily task—
Let Dirt and Dust and Squalor have their will—
Farewell to pride—farewell to self-respect!
So, day by day, I pit my puny strength
Against the City's lusty carelessness.
—Florence Van Cleve in N. Y. Times.

BIRD CENSUS TO BE MADE THIS YEAR

The third annual bird count of the United States will be made by the Bureau of Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture during the breeding season this month and next. In making this survey the bureau will rely largely on persons interested in bird life, who will act as volunteer enumerators. The counts thus made by unpaid observers in the last two summers have furnished to the department valuable data on the character, number and distribution of the bird population.

The information collected this year, it is believed, will be of special value in enabling the department to test the effect of state and national bird laws, and also in determining what relationship exists between bird life and the prevalence of locusts, grasshoppers and other insect pests.

As it is impossible to make an actual count of all the birds in any extended district, each enumerator is asked to report only on the number of birds breeding in a selected area of from forty to eighty acres in the country or suburban districts. From the figures thus obtainable those in charge of the work are able to approximate the total number of birds of each kind in different sections of the country.

I Save Drinking Men!

A Chicago Alderman Saved From A Drunkard's Grave. His Experience Free to All.

From The Tribune.—"Alderman J. H. Francis, probably the best known man in Chicago, was a respected, wealthy man until whiskey gripped him. He was a member of many of Chicago's leading clubs and commercial organizations; a Thirty-second Degree Mason; had a prosperous business; a beautiful home and happy family, automobiles, servants and everything that goes with health, wealth, sobriety and refinement. He fell a hopeless victim to strong drink; saw everything swept away, was in prison, had delirum tremens and was forced into the hopeless beggary of drunkenness. He was considered beyond redemption by his thousands of old friends."

From The Chicago Daily News.—"Today Alderman Francis is once more a respected citizen."

From Alderman J. H. Francis.—"Notwithstanding my awful condition I 'Came Back' and am today a sober, healthy and prosperous man In the interest of humanity I want to assist every drinking man that is burdened with the curse of drink. It makes no difference whether you are a moderate, occasional, or periodical drinker or a confirmed or habitual drunkard I can help you. I have saved thousands of men and if you drink yourself or have a member of your family, friend, acquaintance or neighbor who does write me. All letters confidential. I can remove permanently the desire for drink from any person. I want to tell everybody how I was restored to sobriety and health and the craving, desire and use for strong drink was taken absolutely out of my life forever. There is no human being so apparently helpless and hopeless from drink that I cannot save. Write me freely and fully regarding yourself or any case you have in mind. I treat all correspondence in strict confidence." Address

BRITISH FAILURE AT KUT COMPLETE

Surrender of Townshend Caused Little Surprise, However.

LOST OVER 10,000 MEN.

Relief Expedition Only Twenty Miles Away, Unable to Break Through Turkish Positions and Supply Besieged Army With Food or Ammunition—Climate Against Invaders.

Another phase of the ill fated British campaign in Mesopotamia closed with the surrender of General Townshend and the garrison at Kut-el-Amara, about 130 miles below Bagdad. Some 10,000 men in all laid down their arms to the Turks.

The surrender of General Townshend is one of the few instances of the war in which an entire fighting unit of important numbers has laid down its arms. It is one of the largest bodies of troops of the entente allies which have surrendered and larger than any other captured French or British force.

The eventual surrender of General Townshend had been expected since the failure of the forces under Lieutenant General Gorringe and General Keary to break through the Turkish position at Sannayyat, just below Kut-el-Amara, on the Tigris river, and the unsuccessful attempt to send the blockaded army provisions by steamers. It had been touch and go with the small British force for many days.

Up to the last General Townshend kept alive the hope that he would be relieved. King George sent a message of encouragement to him a month ago, and in a later message the general said he expected to be relieved shortly. He declared he would hold out to the limit of endurance, but the recent reverses suffered by the army which was attempting to rescue him apparently made the situation a hopeless one. One of General Townshend's messages a few weeks ago said all was well and that most wanted were needles for phonographs.

Difficult Undertaking.

The Mesopotamian campaign has been one of the most difficult the British army has undertaken during the war. The torrid climate and lack of fresh water, together with the difficulties of transport, made great calls on the endurance of the troops. Moreover, the positions held by the Turks below Kut-el-Amara, intrenched and strongly fortified, were very formidable. The original expedition was composed in part of Indian troops, but the relief force for the most part was made up of men from England and the colonies. The forces which attempted to relieve General Townshend met with almost continual misfortunes. On several occasions just when it was believed they were on the point of success rising waters made further progress impossible. After penetrating Turkish positions they were compelled to retire or remain stationary owing to the impossibility of attacking the position at Sannayyat, which was surrounded by water. The British troops did actually attack the prepared position there after wading through mud and water waist deep, but only to find when they did meet with some success that a failure at some other point made their sacrifice futile.

The British public never lost faith in General Townshend, and even now that he has been forced to capitulate after destroying everything at Kut-el-Amara that might be valuable to the Turks, they look back upon his campaign as a brilliant one.

The British Mesopotamian campaign, waged along the Tigris from the Persian gulf northward almost to the gates of Bagdad, had as its chief aim the capture of that ancient city. To divert Turkish forces from Gallipoli was another object. When almost at the point of achieving its main object late last year the effort broke down at Ctesiphon, eighteen miles from Bagdad, when the Turks, alarmed for the safety of the town of fabled memory, rushed up re-enforcements, inflicted a defeat upon the British and compelled their retreat 110 miles down the Tigris to Kut-el-Amara, where the Turks soon had them securely bottled up.

General Townshend held out for 143 days, his supplies steadily growing lower as he waited the relief army.

BUY MOTOR SUPPLY TRAIN.

Fifty-four Trucks to Be Part of Army Invading Mexico.

The expeditionary force into Mexico is to be equipped with a complete motor supply train, an innovation in the United States army. Motor transportation of supplies was deemed necessary by General Funston, for after the expedition gets well on its way it probably will get far from any railroad. The war department at Washington authorized the purchase of fifty-four trucks to be organized into a supply train.

The train will be divided into two companies, each with twenty-seven trucks. One company will be equipped with four wheel drive cars, and the other with faster and lighter machines. For the present the train will be manned with civilians.

The motor train carrying supplies will have an important bearing on the expedition's success, General Funston says.

Value of Intensive Methods

Intensive methods, which include the right use of suitable available plantfood, are again responsible for enormous and profitable yields. The time has come when the farmer must look at intensive methods from the business standpoint. The manufacturer who is making most out of his factory sees to it that conditions are best for his workmen and that he is equipped with the latest modern machinery. If there is anything that he can do, to make the machinery turn out more products, and to enable his men to be more efficient, he finds it out, and makes the improvement. The farmer must look at his factory in the same light. If available plantfood, coupled with good soil management, gives him larger crops of better quality (and it has been demonstrated over and over that this is the case), it is good business for the farmer to so fit his factory that it returns maximum results.

STORY OF A "RUN DOWN" FARM

TWO YEARS' MANAGEMENT BRINGS PROFITS AND TRIPLED VALUE IN BROOME COUNTY.

Intelligent farm management is highly profitable. A man bought a farm in Broome county, New York, two years ago, at $16.32 per acre and in two years made it pay 32 per cent. on his investment, while during the same period his management made it triple in market value. It was poor land,—the kind sometimes called "run-down"—but by the use of fertilizers and the introduction of cover crops and dairying into the year's program the soil was made profitably productive.

The first year, the yield of potatoes was 90 bushels per acre, and the second year 150 bushels per acre. Liberal amounts of fertilizer were used each time. Lime and fertilizer were used in raising buckwheat and oats and the yields materially increased at once. The orchard was renovated and ten head of young cattle pastured on the farm. The tenant and his family made a comfortable living, and the second year sold his share of the field crops for $500. Scores of similar instances are found throughout New York State, illustrating that the right kind of farm management is profitable.

MAKING FARMING A BUSINESS

LARGE AND PROFITABLE PRODUCTION NEEDED SAYS CARL S. VROOMAN.

"Too many farmers are today giving themselves merely hired men's jobs. It is all because they fail to realize that farming is a business as much as running a saw mill, a steel plant or a bank," said Carl S. Vrooman, assistant secretary of the U. S. Department of Agriculture at an Eastern agricultural college not long ago. "What farmers want is not only large production, but profitable production. From the standpoint of pure agronomy, they say our average yields per acre of wheat, for example, can be doubled."

Business methods applied to farming bring greater yields per acre. Above the average yield is where the profit lies. It costs little more to grow a high quality crop than a low quality crop. The business farmer is willing to invest a little more money when he knows that he can get larger returns and greater profits. Better products, at less cost per bushel can be obtained when more intensive methods, including the liberal use of commercial fertilizers and all other factors, are employed.

Cornell Investigates 2743 Farms

The Cornell University Experiment Station has investigated 2,743 farms during the past eight years. On the same farms, of practically the same area, the same kind of crops, the same production per animal, one farmer may have a labor income of a few hundred dollars per year and another of several times that amount. The difference is in the management. The same thing holds good in soil management. With the same kind of soils, containing the same original productive ability, the same kind of drainage, one farmer will produce much better yields than his neighbor, and get better quality crops. Fertilizers should be included in every farming system, as they bring quality, large yields and earlier maturity.

More Wheat From Less Acreage

Less labor with more seed, more manure and more fertilizer, would enable Ohio farmers to grow as much wheat on a million and one half acres as they are now growing on two million acres. This is the conclusion of Director C. E. Thorne, head of the Ohio Experiment Station, who for more than a quarter of a century has been reaching sound conclusions for the benefit of Ohio farmers. A half million acres in corn last year, saved from the wheat fields, would have stored much wealth in the crib with corn at its present prices.—Breeders' Gazette.

Days You'll Never Forget

WAR EMANCIPATES THE TURKISH WOMEN

Veils Being Discarded or Modified, and Theaters Will Soon See Native Actresses Is Belief.

Constantinople.—Since the allies abandoned the Dardanelles attack Constantinople has become normal and is now as far removed from the theater of war as any big city in neutral countries. The cafes and motion picture houses are well attended, and the theaters are crowded. Recently there was a big first night in the Petit Champs, the occasion being the performance of a French comedy. The actors were Turks, but the actresses were all Armenians, as Turkish women are not yet permitted to appear on the stage, but the general opinion is expressed by all thinking Turks that before long their women will make their first appearance as actresses.

The emancipation of women in Turkey has made remarkable progress since the beginning of the war. In the best society in Constantinople the women no longer wear their veils when receiving their guests. Though veils continue to be worn by the Turkish women in the street, still the fashion has made them so flimsy and transparent that they might just as well be dispensed with.

Consequently all the fascination and mystery that heretofore has surrounded the harem has suddenly disappeared. There is no longer any such thing, and in its place there is simply the usual family life. The Turkish woman is as much a housewife as her European sister, and in this war her resources have been taxed to the utmost. Despite the fact that the rich agricultural country of Anatolia is not far distant, the prices of all necessaries of life have increased enormously.

Turkey has awakened from its long lethargy, and the war has brought a new life in the empire. Progress is now the keynote, and the indications are that within a few years Constantinople will be one of the most advanced cities in the world.

WOMEN NOT REAL ANGLERS.

New York Commissioner Pratt, Therefore, Would Let 'Em Fish Free.

Albany, N. Y.—"Women," says Conservation Commissioner Pratt, "do not constitute a factor of importance in the fishing situation."

Therefore Mr. Pratt recommends that the fair sex, as are children under sixteen years of age, be exempt from the provisions of his bill to compel fishermen to take out an annual license costing $1.10.

"It is not desired," he adds, "to put any burden upon these young fishermen."

Under the bill a license is not required to catch suckers, bullheads, carp or other plebeian fish, but to catch fish propagated by the state the $1.10 fee must be paid.

GREAT MARKETS OF PARIS.

Buyers in the "Halles" May Not Carry Parcels of Any Kind.

There are some queer customs and regulations in the "halles," the great Paris central markets. No buyer is allowed to enter or leave the markets carrying a parcel, however small it may be. To carry parcels is the privilege of the porters of these markets. Quaint figures are they in baggy velveteen trousers, blue striped jerseys and big brimmed, round leather hats. They alone can be employed to convey from the market to the street outside your merchandise, whether it be half a beef or only a good fat hen.

Madame has to help in her purchases market women known as the keepers. These women sit at the entrance to the main division of the markets and for a small fee watch over all purchases brought to them. Many of these "salesladies" are wealthy. A portly dame, a small seller, wears a fine pair of diamonds in her ears and a sparkling solitaire on her ring finger.

Another character at the markets is the "cutter." When a sheep is brought to him by the buyer for half a dozen Paris housekeepers he cuts the animal into six portions and divides it among them. The purchasers draw lots for the best pieces and pay according to value received.—Exchange.

On Modern Man.

"The late Emerson Taylor, our consul at Port of Spain," said a Washington official, "hailed from Dry Run, and he had a fund of happy Dry Run humor.

"Taylor once compared a disgruntled brother consul to a Dry Run housewife.

"'This woman,' he said, 'often took a queer, disgruntled view of things. Thus she said one day:

"'I don't think the prodigal son was so bad, after all.'

"'He wa'n't no good to his family,' said her husband.

"'That's a fact,' said the Dry Run woman. 'But when he got home, all the same, he knowed enough to keep his mouth shet. If he'd been like the twentieth century man the first thing he'd done would 'a' been to find fault with the way the fatted calf was cooked.'"—Pittsburgh Press.

Languages In Switzerland.

Both French and German are the "official" languages of Switzerland. Public signs, such as those of railroads, are printed in both languages. Italian is also spoken in those parts of Switzerland which are closest to Italy. As a matter of fact, the country is, however, quite definitely divided as to language. The cantons of Vaud, Neuchatel, Geneva, Fribourg and most of Valais speak French. The canton of Ticino speaks Italian. The rest of the country speaks preponderantly German. The canton of Valais has different districts, where each of the three languages is spoken.

Film Realism.

"Do you suppose that was a real brick he hit that man with?" asked the sweet young thing as she and her young man sat watching the motion picture comedy.

"Of course it was," replied her escort. "You don't suppose after paying an actor $10,000 a week they'd be such tightwads as to ring in a fake brick on him, do you?"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

LOOPED LOOP TO TOSS GERMAN TO HIS DEATH

Captured French Aviator Easily Got Rid of Foe In His Machine.

No stranger tale of escape from captivity has perhaps ever been told in the annals of any war than that narrated by Major de V., a French aviator, who was recently captured behind German lines when a dense fog caused him to lose his bearings. Captured by the enemy, this dispirited Frenchman was tied to his seat in his own aeroplane and ordered by a German aviator officer, who climbed in behind him, to fly low over the French lines and not to descend or to signal to his fellows under penalty of instant death from a bullet from the German's revolver.

By the simple process of looping the loop Major V. rid himself of his unwelcome passenger captive, who had not taken the precaution to secure himself to his seat. This maneuver, accomplished after a sudden swift flight to a higher altitude, was executed so unexpectedly that the German officer failed to guess his enemy's purpose and plunged from the machine to his death.

SEEK RICHES IN OCEAN.

Millionaires May Try to Raise Lusitania and Other Vessels.

Most plausible adventurers have gone within years even recent into the doubting atmosphere of Wall street to spin their tales of pirate gold waiting on the bottom of the sea in rotting hulks for the men of initiative and some cash. The tales and schemes of such have gone stale, but the young blood of Wall street has its longing for fair profit to be gained from honest risk and skillful planning.

That is why a new submarine engineering company is now a corporation fully capitalized to hunt the seas for abandoned treasure.

No mere adventurers won the ear of Percy Rockefeller, George F. Baker, Jr., Charles H. Sabin, Albert H. Wiggin and G. M. P. Murphy, who are among the investors in the treasure hunting concern.

Rear Admiral Colby Mitchell Chester, U. S. N., retired; W. D. Franklin, formerly a lieutenant in the United States navy, and George David Stillson, the engineer who raised the United States submarine F-4 off Honolulu, are the men who convinced Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Baker, Mr. Sabin and the others of the excellent opportunities in attempting to salvage vessels that plunged to the bottom in stress of storm.

There is even talk that an effort will be made to salvage the Lusitania, or at least her cargo, including $2,000,000 in gold bullion and a vast fortune in jewels. She lies in 400 feet of water, and her position is well known.

CARDS CHECK INTERVIEWS.

Soldiers on Leave Anticipate Queries With Printed Form.

German officers and soldiers home on leave or because of wounds are adopting the card system of heading off would be interviewers and inquisitive friends who want to know all about the war, according to a report from a small town in northern Germany printed in a recent issue of the Frankfurter Zeitung. The correspondent tells how he met a friend who was an army officer and how, after greetings had been exchanged, the officer remarked, "Read this before you ask any questions," and handed him a card reading as follows:

"I am wearing the uniform of the —th cavalry regiment.

"I have come unwounded from the front at N.

"I am on leave until ——.

"I do not believe there will be a further great advance in the east.

"I cannot tell, and even Hindenburg knows no more on this point than I do, when peace will be proclaimed."

Whiskers Coming In Again.

Whiskers are coming into style again. More important, the cost of losing 'em is going up. The reason? The war has raised the cost of soap, bay rum and the other articles used in barber shops about 20 per cent.

HEART DISEASE A CHILD MENACE

New Problem Presented to Those Who Preserve Health.

TUBERCULOSIS DECREASING

Another Enemy Creeps Up Behind as Great Battle Is Being Won—Heart Trouble Leaves Child Handicapped For Life—Home Care Better Than Hospitals For Such Cases.

With heart disease spreading as tuberculosis is being curbed physicians and social workers are planning preventive work among children to cope with the rising death rate. An article on this menace and what experimental work has shown to be desirable toward curbing it as prepared for the Survey, an organization whose purpose is to investigate the facts of living and working conditions and to suggest means for social advance, is as follows:

Apparently while we have been fighting one enemy face to face another has stolen upon us from behind. New York has reduced her deaths from tuberculosis from 421 per hundred thousand in 1870 to 169 in 1914, but during the same time her deaths from heart disease have increased from 74 to 169.

Repeated In Other Cities.

The experience of New York is repeated in other cities. In Worcester, Mass., no less than 21.5 per cent of all deaths in the industrial population are caused by organic heart disease; 15.2 per cent is the proportion for the whole population of that city.

The situation, or, rather, the realization, has come upon us suddenly, and we are not equipped to deal with heart disease as we are with tuberculosis. Yet it is clear that we shall have to cope with it and devote to it the same study and the same persistent effort to get at underlying causes as we have given to tuberculosis ever since the eighties.

Several articles recently written for medical journals show how similar are the methods needed for the prevention and cure of heart disease to those we are familiar with the case of tuberculosis. In both it is in childhood that preventive work is most needed; in both the symptoms are slight and latent, and the treatment must be prolonged and persisted in after all signs of real trouble have disappeared. Both depend greatly upon environment for cure, and in both home care is beginning to take the place of institutional care.

Leave Child Handicapped.

Both leave the child handicapped and needing vocational training in some occupation which will not make too great demands on his strength.

The Massachusetts General hospital, Boston, has been making an interesting experiment in the home care of children with heart disease and with diseases which threaten the heart, such as chorea and rheumatism. At first these children were kept in the hospital for weeks and even months, but the results were discouraging. When they went home not only improved, but usually looking in the best of health, it was impossible to make the parents believe that the greatest care was still necessary. So relapses came, and the children returned to the clinic sometimes in a worse condition than before.

The physicians realized that "heart disease is a social disease and must be treated socially. The child and his family must be educated, his environment must be altered and adapted to his limitations, and he must be kept under supervision for a long period, not merely until he has recovered from the acute symptoms."

Home Care Best.

So in 1911 a social worker was secured to supervise the home treatment of these children. The results have been so gratifying that home care has been substituted for hospital care for all but the acutely sick.

There is not nearly so much danger of relapse if the child has been in his own home from the beginning and his parents have had the care of him during his sickness and have gone through the long, tedious process of nursing him back to health. There is no need then of readjusting him to his old environment, and there is much less difficulty in adjusting the environment to him when he is really ill than when he comes apparently well. When the home is manifestly unfit, boarding the child out in another family has been found better than sending him to an institution.

The hospital chose a visiting teacher rather than a nurse, for, though there are a few medical facts which she must be able to note, they are easily learned and most of her duties are nonmedical. She must be able so to arrange the home care of the child that he will have rest and quiet and yet be happily occupied, and later on she must be able to plan his return to school or his entrance into industry in such a way that it will not overtax his strength.

For the tuberculous child we have demanded open air schools; for the cardiac child we must demand schoolrooms on the ground floor and ungraded classes, where he can make up his lost time without too much effort and perhaps work only half time, being dismissed before the closing hour with its rush and crowd.

NO DELEGATES TO CONFERENCE

Which Meets in Binghamton —Local Church Gives Way to Peacock Campaign.

For the first time since the return of the Rev. Charles Olmstead, pastor of the Congregational church, to this state, Fulton will not be represented at the New York conference, to be held at the First church, Binghamton, May 16, 17 and 18. Mr. Olmstead and the members of the church feel that the tabernacle campaign should have precedence and will therefore forego the meeting. While no meetings have been held to select delegates to the conference, it is probable that the local church may send a delegate to the Missionary Union which meets in conjunction with the state body.

The conference program follows:

On Tuesday afternoon, May 16, following organization and the reports of standing committees, the Rev. Mr. Kettle will conduct a retreat, at which the subject will be "Getting Together with God." Following the retreat, the Lord's Supper will be celebrated by the Rev. Julian H. Olmstead of Homer, assisted by the Rev. H. S. Capron of Irondequoit. The principal feature of the evening service will be an address on "The Greatness of Man," by a famous Congregational divine, the Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, D.D., of New York city.

Wednesday morning, following a devotional service led by the Rev. E. A. Burnham of Syracuse, there will be additional reports. The Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D.D., of Brooklyn will deliver an address following election of officers, his subject being "Man's Dual Universe."

Wednesday evening will be devoted to the Home Missionary Department of the Conference, and the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Shelton, of New York city, who has spoken here, will give a report on the year's work. Addresses will be given on "The Adaptability of the Congregational Church to the Community Idea."

Thursday morning's sessions will be featured by an address on "The Causes of the Great War and Its Reflex Influence Upon Our Christian Life," by the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D., of Brooklyn.

Thursday afternoon's session will close with a young people's rally. In the evening the Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., of Brooklyn, will give an address on "The Three Religious Leaders of Oxford."

The denominational womens' missionary organizations will hold sessions simultaneous with those of the main conference on Wednesday.

BAPTISTS DEFER GOING TO NATIONAL CONVENTION

Fulton Baptists will not send delegates to the Northern Baptist convention this year, which is to be held in Minneapolis May 17th to 24th. This is in deference to the ePacock tabernacle campaign, which is now at its zenith. In former years the convention has had as local representatives at least one of the laymen and the pastor of the church.

GOOD TEMPLARS GOING TO THE TABERNACLE FRIDAY

It was decided last night by the Fulton City Lodge, No. 88, I. O. G. T. to attend the tabernacle in a body this week—Friday. Members of the lodge are requested to meet at headquarters, in West Broadway, at 7:15 o'clock and march in a body. Badges will be provided the marchers.

BATTLE ISLAND ON STATE LAND

That Was the Statement Made by Witnesses Yesterday in Support of Contention.

Rochester.—Evidence in support of the state's contention that the site of the Battle Island Paper Company's plant is upon state property, was introduced yesterday when the case was resumed before the Court of Claims. Edward Ellis, of Minetto, the state's resident engineer, testified that he located the so called blue line triangle, on the west side of the river and which embraces the power plant.

The claimants called O. C. Breed, a water power expert of Fulton, in an attempt to show that on the state's own assumptions of flow, the power at the Battle Island point generated was about 20 per cent. more than the state is admitting. Deputy Attorney-General Edward J. Mone objected to much of the evidence offered by the claimants, insisting that it was of original nature and therefore had no place in the rebuttal. His objections were not sustained by the court.

Mr. Mone, Deputy Attorney-General Smith, and Richard E. Phillips, representing the state engineer, are appearing for the state. George W. Driscoll and Charles E. Spencer are representing the company. Both sides expect the case will be finished Wednesday.

The claimant expect to call as witnesses tomorrow, J. M. Witham of Philadelphia and W. A. McKee of Watertown. The state may call W. J. Williams, assistant professor of electric engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, to testify to the power and general electrical equipment of the Battle Island plant.

BARBERS WILL NOT RAISE HAIR-CUTTING PRICES

While the barbers in some cities want to charge 35 cents for cutting hair, it is unlikely that an increase will be made by the local artists, and Fulton will thereby skin through the situation.

Longer hair, if not long hair may supercede the present closer cropped styles, not necessarily because of its desirability but as an economic measure or, perhaps, the clipped head may be more popular this summer than previously.

Journeymen barber in a number of cities are now seeking shorter hours and a half holiday and are recommending that the price of hair cuts be raised from 25 cents to 35 cents. Petitions are being circulated among the barbers in several cities and will be presented to the master barbers in a short time.

ELKS' BAND CHANGES FROM HIGH TO LOW PITCH

Rehearsal occurred last night at the Elks' home, by the Elks' Band. Low pitch was substituted for the high pitch, which has been in vogue for some time. The change was made to conform to the practice in a majority of cities.

The Elks of this city enjoy the unusual distinction of having their own band, as few lodges of the order in the United States enjoy the same privilege. The work of the local band from now until convention time will be mainly in preparation for the State and National conventions to be held in Peekskill and Baltimore respectively.

SUGAR MAY JUMP TO TEN CENTS POUND

It is going to cost more to be sweet at home. Sugar is likely to sell at ten cents a pound soon, it is said. Wholesale grocers in the cities say that it will increase in price until fall, especially if there is a big fruit season.

Many reasons are assigned for the high price of sugar. The submarine danger in the Mediterranean has practically cut off the supply from Java. There is plenty of sugar in the Java market, but unrefined raw sugar from Java is worth 2 cents a pound more in the London market than is the refined American product. The shipping rates from Java have increased about 300 per cent.

THE QUIRK TODAY

In "Fighting Blood," William Farnum, America's foremost portrayer of heroic roles, is cast as Lem Hardy, sturdy scion of a family of Kentucky mountaineers. Leaving his humble cabin and his aged mother, Lem, heir to the fighting blood of a long line of pugnacious ancestors, betakes himself to the lumber camp of Henry Colby and acquires not only a job but the love of Evie, Colby's daughter. Harry Blake, superintendent of the camp, is infatuated with the beauty of Evie and, in jealous hatred, conceives the idea of stealing the camp's payroll and fastening the crime upon Lem. His plan succeeds. Lem is convicted for the theft and sent to prison. Evie convinced of her lover's guilt marries Blake, who, a gambler by nature, induces his father-in-law to speculate in stocks, with the inevitable result of ruin and death for the old man. Blake goes to the western town of Red Dog, taking Evie with him and sets up a faro game. Meanwhile in prison, Lem, through association with Father Rochelle, prison chaplain, becomes deeply religious. On the expiration of his term he becomes a preacher and travels the country over on a self-appointd mission of righteousness. In the course of his wanderings he stops in Red Dog, where he comes into direct conflict with the forces of wickedness, led by his ancient enemy, Blake. The fight is bitter and marked by many personal encounters, but in the end the "Fighting Parson" triumps. Blake is killed in a gambling brawl and Evie and Lem face a brighter future.

TEAM REVELLED AT DINNER TABLE

Had As Guests Coach and Referee and All Made Merry As Never Before.

The diningroom of the Lewis House presented an animated scene last night, the occasion for the revelry being a dinner in honor of the victories won by the High School basketball team during the season closed last month. Seven members of the team, Coach Morrell and Frances H. Morin participated in the event.

Harold Martin, captain of the 1915-16 team was toastmaster. He called on each man to speak on a topic assigned by himself. Mr. Morin was called upon for his views on "marriage." He complied readily with the request at first, but insisted upon diverging away from the topic. This was thought an intentional move, and the toastmaster endeavored to have the speaker keep to his subject. Attempts by other speakers to evade the subjects selected for them were also blocked. Coach Merrill was asked to summarize the activities of the 1915-16 basketball team. "Ike" Johnson had the delicate subject of "girls—and athletics." Hopkins was handed the subject of "the gentle art of gathering shekels."

Ed Frawley, whose position thruout the season was that of standing guard, was asked to give an explanation for his failure to score more than two baskets in each one of the games with the Maccabees. His explanation was accepted.

MRS. COWLES ESTATE BEFORE THE SURROGATE

Oswego.—The will and codicils of Mrs. Marion J. Cowles, who died in Fulton recently came before Surrogate Miller yesterday. The papers dispose of an estate valued at $12,500. An adopted daughter, Mrs. Marion Cowles Sackett, receives the income of the residuary estate and $200 per year from the principal of the estate. On her death the estate is to be divided between her four children, who also receive specific bequests of $100 each.

They are directed to deposit the money in the Fulton Savings Bank to remain there until they are 21 years old, when it is to be paid them with accrued interest. One codicil provides for a bequest of $1,000 to the late Arvin Rice and his wife, the bequest to go to Arvin L. Rice on his father's death. Another provision remits to Leon F. Titus, a relative living at Travers City, Mich., any debts that may be due testatrix, with the direction to pay certain sums according to directions contained in a letter to be handed to Mr. Titus after the testatrix's death. A bequest of $20 is made to the Hannibal cemetery for perpetual care, and Mrs. Cowles requests that she be buried beside her husband in that cemetery and that a suitable marker be erected.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Margaret Kinney who died in Scriba, February 12, 1916, was filed by a niece, Katherin B. Baker. The value is $332 personal.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of Georgie E. Earl, who died February 17, 1907, was filed by her husband, Albert Earl. The estate is valued at $350 personal.

The estate of Cynthia J. DeLong, who died in Williamstown, February 15, 1916, is valued at $1,700 personal, according to the petition of Minnie V. Crandall, a daughter, who is the sole legatee.

A petition was filed by Ella E. Nodda, administratrix of the estate of Richard Nodda, to be made a party to the final settlement of the accounts of Mr. Nodda, as executor of the estate of his sister, Mary Cavanaugh, late of Fulton. A claim by Sarah Lomasney against the Cavanaugh estate has had several hearings in Surrogate's Court. Otherwise the estate has been disposed of. Miss Nodda is the sole heir of her father's estate.

SPEAKER SWEET STICKS CLOSE TO GOVERNOR

A dispatch from Albany indicates that Speaker Sweet is not a candidate to succeed himself; neither will the Speaker be a candidate for Elon R. Brown's place in the Senate. This does not mean that Mr. Sweet is going to quit politics, however, for he has not the remotest idea of such a thing. The Speaker has linked his political fortunes with those of Governor Whitman, and should the latter be re-nominated, and re-elected next fall, Mr. Sweet, according to his friends, is to be rewarded with a place on the upstate Public Service Commission, which carries with it the nice fat salary of $15,000 a year.

BOMB DROPPING EXACT SCIENCE

American Inventions Do Much to Solve the Problems.

DISTINCT TYPE OF AIR CRAFT

Arm of Service Which Was More or Less Haphazard at the Outbreak of the War Is Now Highly Developed. Raids Timed So That Machines Will Reach Their Destination at Dawn.

Bomb dropping from aeroplane rapidly is becoming as exact a science among aviators on the European fronts as is the handling of artillery.

Early in the war the bomb droppers used the same sort of machines as in reconnoissance work, artillery spotting or anything else. There is a tendency now to make the bomb dropping aeroplane quite a distinct type of vehicle.

The French incline to favor the big twin engined Caudron, which has a lifting capacity of 500 to 700 pounds of bombs, with fuel for a five or six hours' flight.

The Germans appear to use the ordinary type of tractor biplane, with an engine of about 160 horsepower.

The English machines are understood to be rather ahead of the other allies in weight lifting capacity.

Formerly bombs weighed about twenty pounds each, were carried inside the aeroplane and were dropped overboard more or less at haphazard.

In the up to date machines the load consists of five or six bombs of about sixty pounds each or two or three weighing a hundred pounds each.

The ones the French dispatches refer to as "of large caliber" weigh about 150 pounds.

Bombs Carried In Racks.

The smaller bombs, up to about sixty pounds, generally are carried in racks underneath the machine, each held by a separate clip, which is released by means of a wire carried into the body of the aeroplane.

The rack has to be so arranged as not to upset the machine's longitudinal balance and to insure that the falling bombs will not foul the landing wheel axle or any of the landing gear's bracing wires.

The larger bombs are carried in a special fixture under the aeroplane's body, and in some cases two may be carried under the body, with one slung under each wing, outside the line of the wheels.

The aeroplanes are equipped with a bomb sighting apparatus to let the operator know the precise moment at which to release the bombs.

Aiming a bomb from an aeroplane is vastly more difficult than aiming a gun, because it is necessary to calculate not only the target's position, but also the aeroplane's height above the ground and the speed at which it is moving.

The gun, too, needs only to be pointed in the right direction, while the whole aeroplane has to be maneuvered into the correct position if the bomb is to hit its mark.

Nevertheless, bomb sights have been so ingeniously developed as to give excellent results.

Raids Occur About Dawn.

Air craft raids are generally timed to reach their objectives about dawn, partly to allow the heavily laden machines to pass the enemy's lines fairly low down in the dark, thus avoiding loss of time in climbing over their own territory, and partly to make it hard for the enemy to determine the raider's course.

Naturally, flying in the dark, the pilots can keep only a compass course. Furthermore, they cannot see the horizon, and as the human sense of balance is insufficient to enable them to maintain even keels, inclinometers have to be provided.

There are also petrol and oil gauges, clocks to show how long the machines have been in the air, speed indicators and small electric lights to let the aviators know if anything goes wrong in the darkness.

Some aeroplanes are built to be inherently stable, but this quality of uncapsizability has two disadvantages:

First.—The shape necessitated by such a design is such that the machine absorbs more power than the ordinary type.

Second.—The machine answers the pilot's control sluggishly, and if it takes a bad position near the ground it is difficult to get out, a fact which has been responsible for several serious mishaps.

There are indications that future night flying will be facilitated by use of the mechanically operated gyroscope control, an apparatus invented in America, which can be switched off just on leaving the ground or landing, enabling the pilot temporarily to take full personal charge of his machine.

Parrot a Witness.

In the suit of Mrs. Kittie Pope of Bloomington, Ill., against Mrs. Nellie Clark for assault the most important testimony was given by a parrot owned by Mrs. Clark, the only witness of the assault, which kept repeating some words of incriminating nature that his mistress had used.

PERRIGO CASE GOES TO JURY

Suit Involves an Action for $25,000 Against This City ---Engineer Hill Denies Location of Stakes.

Pulask', (special).—Upon the reconvening of Court this morning, Justice Hubbs charged the jurymen in the case of the action of Miss Edith Perrigo, of Fulton, and at 1130 the talismen retired.

It is a negligence action in behalf of an infant by Willie Perrigo, her guardian ad litem, against the city of Fulton. Attorney Thomas F. Woods of Syracuse opened for the plaintiff and Attorney William S. Hillick for the defendant city.

Plaintiff, a grl of 17, was the first witness called and gave in detail the particulars of the accident on September 21 last, when she is alleged to have stumbled over a stake said to have been set in the pathway by the engineers preliminary to building a new concrete sidewalk in Utica st., Fulton, fracturing a leg. The home of plaintiff is in the vicinity of where the alleged accident occurred. Dr. L. Fowler Joy, of Fulton, the attending physician, testified as to the extent of the injuries, etc. A number of other Fulton witnesses for plaintiff testified as to the location of the stakes in Utica street and at about five o'clock yesterday afternoon plaintiff rested. Attorney Hillick moved for a nonsuit and Justice Hubbs denied the motion. Plaintiff sues to recover $25,000 damages for the injuries resulting from the alleged negligence of the city.

City Engineer Hill of Fulton was the first witness called for the defense and denied that stakes had been driven in the pathway in question and which is near the Keller and Wells residences in Utica street. Following the testimony of the City Engineer court adjourned until 8:30 o'clock this morning.

The next case to follow the negligence action is that of Sophie C. Brosemer of Oswego against the L. Brosemer Brewing Company of that city. Plaintiff brings the action to recover $10,000 on a promissory note.

HE'S THE WHOLE TEAM.

Mills Will Play Baseball Alone Every Afternoon.

When the Newark Federal league baseball team went out of existence recently Patrick T. Powers, one of the owners, got rid of all of the players except Rupert Mills, a high school graduate, who was under contract to play first base for two years at $3,000 a year.

A few days ago the youth sought out Powers and asked as to his future.

"I have no place to put you," replied the former magnate. "I hadn't heard from you and supposed you'd engaged yourself somewhere."

"Well, I haven't," Mills said. "There's a year left of my contract, and I'll hold you to it. I'm ready to play, so you get ready to pay."

"Do you want to play alone?" queried Powers, getting an inspiration.

"I don't care if I do."

"All right then," exclaimed Powers. "Report for practice from 9 to 12 o'clock every morning on the grounds at Harrison and return every afternoon at 2 o'clock and play the game alone until 6."

Mills appeared and carried out his instructions. When asked how he would enjoy playing baseball alone for an entire season he simply said:

"I hope it rains every day."

Chaldean Tablets.

The clay tablets of Chaldea, probably the very earliest writing materials used by man, were of different sizes, the largest being flat and measuring 9 by 6½ inches, while the smallest were slightly convex and in some cases not more than an inch long. In the same ruins with the tablets have been found the glass lenses which were used by their readers. The writing was done while the tablets were still soft by a little iron tracer, not pointed, but triangular at the end. The tablets, having been inscribed on both sides and accurately numbered, were baked in ovens and stored away in the state libraries.

The Man With the Iron Mask.

"The Man With the Iron Mask" was a mysterious French prisoner of state, whose identity has never been satisfactorily established. He was closely confined under the charge of M. de St. Mars at Pignerol in 1679, at Exiles in 1681, at St. Marguerite in 1687 and finally was transferred to the Bastile in 1698, where he died on Nov. 19, 1703, and was buried the following day in the cemetery of St. Paul under the name of Marchiali. Dumas made him a twin brother of Louis XIV.

WARSHIPS TO BE WORLD'S BIGGEST

General Board Plans For 36,000 Tons Displacement.

WILL CARRY 16-INCH GUNS.

Tentative Plans Have Been Drawn and Must Be Approved by Congress. Navy Department to Insist That New Battle Cruisers Make Speed of at Least Thirty-five Knots.

If the plans of the general board are followed out the new battleships to be authorized at this session of congress will be the largest and most powerful afloat and will be equipped with the biggest caliber armament. Tentative plans drawn for their construction by the naval authorities put their displacement at 36,000 tons and their armament ten sixteen-inch guns.

The recommendation for ten sixteen-inch rifles comes direct from the general board and has the indorsement of many ordnance officers, although there is a difference of opinion in naval circles as to whether sixteen inch or fourteen inch guns should prevail. The same arguments caused a division of opinion among naval authorities when it was proposed to use fourteen inch instead of twelve inch guns.

The tentative plans for battleships, battle cruisers, destroyers, submarines, gunboats, a hospital ship and a fuel ship have been drawn in anticipation of the authorization of these various types of vessels.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels said that the most interest was centered in the battleships and battle cruisers, with expert opinion about equally divided as to which of these types would be of the greatest value for the efficiency of the fleet.

Cruisers' Plans Delayed.

Detailed plans for the battle cruisers have not yet been completed at the navy department, it was explained, as the design for these ships is entirely new in the United States navy. It is already calculated, however, that the speed of these vessels must not be under thirty-five knots.

It is believed at the navy department that congress will be disposed toward the smaller type of coastal submarine in preference to the fleet type. The theory followed by the supporters of this view is that it is better to await the results of the trial of the Schley and the two sister ships before authorizing any more fleet submarines of the largest displacement.

The characteristics of the new destroyers included in the 1917 program probably will be about the same in appearance as the destroyers designed last year, with some minor improvements and a slight increase in speed.

The designs for the gunboats contemplate a vessel of the improved Sacramento type, which has given much satisfaction and which seems in its 1,425 tons displacement to well serve the purposes of the navy for this type of craft. The fuel ship will probably be a duplicate of the Kanawha. The hospital ship will be designed after recommendations submitted by the bureau of medicine and surgery and will have the most advanced facilities for caring for the sick and wounded.

The Bald Eagle's Nest.

Among birds the home of the bald eagle is perhaps the most striking, possibly because of the majesty of the bird itself. It appeals to the imagination. Built of huge sticks loosely interwoven and situated on some lofty and inaccessible ledge, with the bones of the eagle's victims scattered roundabout it, it gives a proper setting to the stern and savage character of its builder. Here the eagle reigns supreme, and here year after year he and his mate rear their young. This is the aerie from which he can scan the whole countryside and, like the robber barons of old, levy toll on all who pass his door.

Foxhounds.

Foxhounds are extraordinarily swift, as is proved by the fact that a dog of this breed once beat a thoroughbred horse, covering four miles in six and one-half minutes, which was at the rate of nearly eighteen yards a second.

SEES STATE "DRY" WITHIN TEN YEARS

New York.—The sale of liquor in New York State will be prohibited within ten years, according to H. B. Glenn, who placed North Carolina in the prohibition column when he was governor. He made the prediction in an address recently in the Judson Memorial church, Washington Square South.

"Tell your two-by-four politicians they would better get on the temperance band wagon," said Mr. Glenn. "I want to tell you that this State is going to be temperance within ten years, and every other State in the Union within ten or twelve years.

"The condition at Albany now is the worst I ever saw. You go up there and just shake hands with the politicians who are hanging around the Capitol and you come away with a jag that will last you three days."

Mr. Glenn said he expected the District of Columbia to adopt prohibition this year, and before the year ended, he added, half the States of the union would be in the prohibition ranks.

Pinched Him Financially.

An esteemed citizen went into a shoe store in a metropolitan town and asked to see some leather goods. Another minute an obliging salesman was hauling out some boxes.

"That's a nice looking shoe," remarked the customer as the salesman pushed his foot into a shiny right and started to lace it. "What is the price?"

"This pair is $8," responded the salesman as he finished the lacing and ran his hand across the vamp. "Does it pinch you any?"

"Well, I should say that it does!" was the prompt rejoinder of the customer. "Give me something about $5 cheaper."

G. O. P. CONVENTION TO CONSIDER VARIOUS MEN FOR THE NOMINATION

When Delegates Meet In Chicago There Will Be at Least a Dozen Possibilities.

Attitude of Roosevelt and the Progressive Party One of most Interesting Features of Meeting.

WHO is going to be the Republican party's nominee to oppose Woodrow Wilson in the 1916 presidential campaign?

This question has been asked thousands and thousands of times, but no one in the country can give the correct answer. No one knows, and any statement is a guess, and one man's guess is nearly as good as another's.

There are so many elements that have to be considered before naming the G. O. P. standard bearer that no one can tell what the short weeks prior to the convention will bring about. By the time the delegates are assembled in the Chicago Coliseum on June 7 many things can happen which may change the entire outlook.

About the only certain thing in the next presidential race is the fact that Wilson will be the Democratic candidate. Bryan's attitude, Roosevelt's attitude and the Progressive party are the things that are worrying the leaders.

When the Democratic convention met in Baltimore in 1912 the delegates had been instructed for various men from different sections of the country. Every locality had its favorite son. The Republicans at that time had but two possibilities, Taft and Roosevelt.

This year the tables are turned. Woodrow Wilson will be the Democratic nominee. On the other hand, there will be at least a dozen possibilities before the Republican convention when the delegates gather.

WARREN G. HARDING, TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN OF REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Roosevelt Prominent Candidate.

Roosevelt is one of the leading possibilities today. He has already been president for seven and one-half years, having served three and one-half years of McKinley's second term after the Ohio man was killed and having been elected in 1904. Writing about Roosevelt's actions and life would be useless, for he is the best known man in the country and has occupied the limelight more than any other public servant.

Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes of New York is another leading possibility, although he has stated time and again that he was not a candidate for the nomination. His position on the bench makes it impossible for him to state any views on questions that occupy the minds of political leaders. His friends say, however, that if the nomination is tendered him he will resign from the bench and become an active candidate against Wilson. He was governor of New York state for two terms before going on the bench.

Elihu Root is another possibility hailing from the Empire State. Mr. Root is known as a conservative and is a representative of that wing of the party. He was secretary of state during the Roosevelt administration and later was elected United States senator and served one term of six years.

Charles W. Fairbanks is Indiana's favorite son. He was vice president during Roosevelt's last term and prior to this was United States senator for two terms. His home is in Indianapolis.

McCall Has Backers.

Samuel W. McCall will go to the Chicago convention with the support of some of the Massachusetts and other delegates. He is governor of Massachusetts, ex-representative and one of the best known men in the country.

William E. Borah will be Idaho's favorite son, and other delegates may be instructed for him. He has taken a leading part in the proceedings of the senate since 1907 and is recognized as one of the ablest members of congress.

Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa is another favorite son who will receive some votes on the first ballots. Like Borah, Cummins is a leading member of the senate, having been elected in 1908. He has been the author of some of the most important bills that have passed in recent years.

Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin, who represents a distinct wing of the Republican party, has some of Wisconsin's delegates instructed for him. He was elected governor of Wisconsin for three terms, resigning during his last, when he was elected to the United States senate. La Follette is one of the original supporters of the direct vote system and is known as progressive and sometimes radical.

Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania.

Martin G. Brumbaugh will have the support of many of Pennsylvania's delegates. He is governor of the Keystone State, having been elected in 1914. Mr. Brumbaugh is one of the leading Republicans of that state and has become well known through his opposition to the Penrose element of the party.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

ELIHU ROOT.

Theodore E. Burton is the favorite son of the state that is noted for providing presidents of the United States, Ohio. The Ohio delegates always settle on one candidate and give him undivided support until it is evident that there is little chance of victory. Burton will get this support this year. He was a member of the house of representatives from 1895 until 1909, when he was elected to the senate, serving until 1915. He placed William H. Taft in nomination in 1908.

Senator John W. Weeks is another Massachusetts candidate who will receive many votes from New England delegates and also some from other sections of the country. He was a representative from 1905 until 1913, when he was elected to the United States senate. Mr. Weeks is one of the most prominent members in the upper branch of congress.

Henry D. Estabrook, a lawyer of New York city, is another man who has been mentioned as a possibility. He has many supporters and has made an enviable reputation as a lawyer.

These are the men who seem to have the best chances at the convention in Chicago, and it is almost an assured fact that one of them will get the nomination. Which one? That is the question that everybody is asking.

Already there has been a great demand for seats for the convention. The national leaders who will have the convention arrangements directly in charge have been selected.

United States Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio will be the temporary chairman of the national convention.

The formal call to the convention was addressed "to the Republican electors of the United States" and pointed out that representation this year will be upon a different basis from that which has heretofore prevailed, the effect of which will be to reduce representation in the southern states, where the Republican vote is light.

In specifying the manner of electing delegates the call said:

"Said national convention shall consist of four delegates at large from each state and two delegates at large for each representative at large in congress, one delegate from each congressional district, an additional delegate for each congressional district in which the vote for any Republican elector in 1908 or for the Republican nominee for congress in 1914 shall have been not less than 7,500, two delegates each from the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. All delegates from any state may, however, be chosen from the state at large in the event that the laws of the state in which the election occurs so provide. Alternate delegates shall be elected to this convention for each unit of representation equal to the number of delegates elected therein."

Under this plan Pennsylvania will have seventy-six delegates, New Jersey twenty-eight and Delaware six, while eight southern states will lose representation, most of them having only one delegate to a congressional district with the usual number at large.

Temporary Officers Selected.

The following list of temporary officials for the convention has been chosen:

Secretary, Lafayette Gleason, New York.

Chief clerk, G. Edward Monroe, St. Louis.

Official reporter, George C. Hart, Roanoke, Va.

Sergeant at arms, William F. Stone, Baltimore, Md.

Chief assistant sergeant at arms, Edward D. Thayer, Indianapolis.

Chief doorkeeper, John J. Hanson, Baltimore, Md.

National committee headquarters opened at the Congress hotel May 1, in charge of Secretary James B. Reynolds and Sergeant at Arms William F. Stone. The Coliseum annex headquarters will go into commission ten days before the convention, at which time the subcommittee and the full national committee will get into session to consider any contests.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

So far as the subcommittee could proceed, it ruled against any "double" delegations, meaning that objection was raised to states sending in delegates with one-half vote each. This applies particularly to Kentucky. The seating arrangements of the Coliseum, allotment of tickets and all other involved details were responsible for this order.

"Chicago is well nigh universally conceded to be the first convention city of our land," said one of the committeemen. "The fact that more conventions are held there annually than in all the rival cities put together, that 440 conventions met there in 1914, proves that the business and professional men of this country recognize that Chicago as a convention city is without a peer. And there are good reasons for this unequaled popularity.

"Then, too, Chicago has admittedly the greatest park and boulevard system in the world. In the number and quality of its hotels, restaurants and attractions of all kinds, it is unsurpassed in this country. And it is only natural that it should be so. Chicago, with its 2,500,000 souls, is the greatest city of the west, the second city of the United States, the second city of this hemisphere and the fourth or fifth in all the world.

"The interest will be intense; the list of candidates for the nomination greater than in many years. The hosts which will gather to witness the first step toward the restoration of the Republican party to power will in all probability be unprecedented.

"This mighty multitude will demand suitable accommodations. Since 1912 five large, modern fireproof hotels have been built in the downtown district. The number of first class rooms in the 'loop' has now reached the total of 9,985, all within a mile and a quarter of the Coliseum.

"Also, Chicago is the most centrally located of all of our great cities—the closest to the center of population; the most accessible to a majority of the people of our country; twenty-eight great trunk lines have their terminals there; 50,000,000 of people live within a night's ride of the city; liberal stopovers are allowed."

Drooping at Shoulder, Nipped In at Waist.

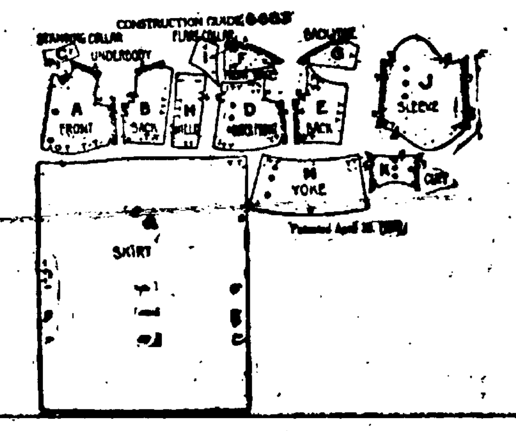
An organdie frock in the "blue which Nattier and Fragonard loved to paint" fashioned in smartest simplicity.

The new frocks that droop at the shoulders and are nipped in at the waist are very effective, indeed. This model is carried out in pastel blue organdie trimmed simply with a vest and flare collar of white batiste. In medium size it requires 7¼ yards 36-inch organdie and 1 yard batiste.

Since the material is so sheer, the underbody may be made of all-over lace, if desired. In making, remember that large "O" perforations indicate the center of the front. The first thing to do, however, is to face the neck edge to 2 inches beyond small "o" perforations to form the yoke. Close underarm and shoulder seams and hem front. Place the lower edge of front and back and adjust belting to position underneath plaits.

Now, all is ready for the outer waist. Close underarm seam and turn under edges of front and vest on slot perforations. Gather vest ⅝ inch from fold and adjust to position. Gather upper and lower edges of waist and arrange on underbody, center-backs, underarm seams and armhole edges even. Stitch lower edges together, then stitch gathers at upper edge along small "o" perforations. Turn under edge of front yoke and close shoulder seam as notched. Sew flare collar to neck, center-backs even and under the front, matching small "o" perforations. Arrange on underbody and sew yoke over gathers.

Close the sleeve seam as notched and gather along upper line of small



"o" perforations, drawing gathers to the required size. Sew in armhole as notched, small "o" perforation at shoulder seam, easing in any fulness.

Close the back seam of the skirt from large "O" perforation to lower edge, then turn the hem from the tucks as indicated. Now gather the skirt ⅝ inch below cross-line of small "o" perforations, and gather upper edge of extension. Turn under front edge of yoke on slot perforations. Sew yoke to skirt, center-backs, and single large "o" perforations even; and lap the front edge on skirt; edges underneath even. Gather upper edge of yoke between double "TT" perforations. FIND 20 INDIAN SKELETONS.

Supposition That They Were Buried Near Where They Fell In Battle.

Oregon City, Ore.—While excavating for a basement near the river bank workmen employed by Frank Busch uncovered twenty skeletons of Indians in one hole.

The bodies are supposed to be the remains of Indians killed in battle, for in one or two cases arrowheads have been found caught between the bones.

The first trace of the bones was found early in the week, when the workmen uncovered a skull. It was buried by itself, and Mr. Busch, who had studied the find carefully, believes that it belonged to a chief or leader.

To prevent disturbing the bones the workmen began excavating in another place, and they found a hole with a radius of about six feet which Mr. Busch estimates contains the bones of at least twenty Indians. The skeletons are lying like the spokes of a wheel with the skulls in the center. Over the top of the grave was a thick, hard crust of baked clay that was hardened like stone.

Efficient Civic Survey.

The civic survey made not long ago by the Washington (Pa.) board of trade, through the boy scouts of that city resulted in securing more than 3,000 detailed reports on the sanitary conditions throughout the city, says the American City.

A boy scout captain was assigned to each city ward. The captains divided the wards into sections and placed four boys in each section, with a squad leader in charge of them. The offer of circus tickets to the boys in each squad who returned the most complete and accurate reports formed some incentive to them to do good work. A civic service medal was given to the ward captain who conducted the most systematic survey in the city.

Prior to the day of inspection considerable publicity was given to the fact that such a survey would be made. Insanitary and unhealthful conditions were in each case reported to the board of health, but there was much cleaning up the day before because of the fear of being reported. The total cost of the survey to the board of trade was $10, and its results were most satisfactory.

A LEAP YEAR PROPOSAL

By ELINOR MARSH

When I was a girl of twelve my mother made a will leaving me all her property and naming Nathan Griggs my guardian.

Mother died when I was sixteen years old, and by the terms of the will I was to have possession of my estate when I was eighteen. This left it in Nathan's hands two years after her death.

Now, the truth is, from the time I was fourteen I had a decided fancy for Nathan. I looked upon him as a big brother and in my day dreams of the future thought of him as something nearer. I early passed beyond boys of my own age, which I suppose came partly from the fact that my father having died when I was a baby and my mother being early accustomed to rely upon me for many things that are not usually left to children, I became older in experience than I was in years.

Be this as it may, by the time I became of age and my property was to be turned over to me I had made up my mind that I wanted Nathan too. As to taking care of my estate myself, I had sense enough to know that I was entirely incompetent.

I also had sufficient feminine instinct to discern that Nathan had a decided fancy for me. But the main reason why mother had made him my guardian and one of the reasons why I wanted him—his integrity—stood in the way of my having him. It was evident to me that he considered me a fiduciary trust. He was so sensitive to his honor that I believed he would consider it a crime for him to become possessed of my fortune even by marrying me.

What was I to do? I couldn't very well offer myself to him. Possibly if I had been nearer his age I might have found a way to propose to him without sacrificing too much of my maidenly modesty, but when I was eighteen he was thirty-one. It might have been easier had I been sure that he wanted me. But how can a girl know that a man wants her till he asks her?

One day in looking over mother's papers I came upon a letter she had written to my aunt, her sister, that had been returned to me after mother's death. In it she said: "I have made a will in Luella's favor and have made Nathan Griggs executor and guardian. I have done this hoping that he will continue managing her estate as her husband. I have said nothing of this, however, to either of them, for in such cases the surest way to defeat a design is to try to bring it about. I rather rely on my observation that they fancy each other."

I spent a long while thinking out a plan by which to use this letter to overcome Nathan's scruples. Gathering some business letters that I found to and from mother and placing this letter I have mentioned among them, I sent them to Nathan with a note in which I suggested that they might be of importance to the estate and that it might be well for him to look them over carefully.

What did he do but return them to me, saying that he had read them all carefully and they were of no importance in a business way!

I was no nearer my object than before.

Well, the day arrived when I was eighteen, and Nathan came to turn over my property to me. It had become evident to me that if I wished to break down his scruples I must throw argument to the winds and use feminine methods. He spread a lot of papers on a table, and we sat down side by side that he might instruct me. I was not thinking of the papers or the instructions; I was thinking of something far nearer my heart.

The more he explained the less I understood. I kept hitching my chair nearer to his till we could be no nearer. Then, pretending that the figures were so minute I had difficulty in seeing them, I leaned sidewise till my shoulder touched Nathan's. In this way I crowded him to the outer edge of his chair, and he could not move farther. My hair was done in a tumultuous fashion, and a loose strand grazed his cheek.

He went on explaining, but it did not take me long to see that his mind was no more on the papers than was mine. At last I succeeded in grazing his cheek with mine.

He broke down at this and went all to pieces. Putting his arms around me, he kissed me and said:

"Luella, when you sent me those letters of your mother's you unintentionally included one that expressed a desire on her part that I should continue the care of your estate as your husband. I have loved you ever since you were a little girl and might have told you so before this had not your mother turned you and your fortune over to me in trust. It has not seemed honorable to me to"—

"Yes, I know all that," I interrupted, impatient at having to draw him out. "You have been very unjust and very stupid. You have wished to turn this estate over to me, knowing that I can't manage it. You should be ashamed of yourself."

"Well, sweetheart, I didn't intend that. But wasn't it fortunate that you happened to include that letter"—

"Yes. If I hadn't been careless I suppose I would have died an old maid for all you cared."

This proposal and acceptance are not in accord with the romance of such things, but it was leap year.

Dainty Boudoir Cap.

A dainty boudoir cap can be fashioned out of a bit of shadow lace and a scrap of crepe de chine. Make a crown of the lace, and attach to it the silk, which is gathered a trifle. The joining place is concealed with twisted ribbon, which is studded here and there with a tiny rosebud. Gather the silk about an inch or so from the bottom, and see that it slips over the head easily. Finish with a ruffle of lace sewed inside the edge. Long loops of ribbon placed on the side will still further improve the appearance of this dainty bit of feminine wear.

Rush Cake.

Into a sieve put one cupful of sugar, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful of baking powder or one teaspoonful of cream of tartar and one-half teaspoonful of soda. Sift twice. Add one-quarter cupful of melted lard. In the cup you have melted the lard in put one-quarter cupful of sweet milk, break in two eggs and fill the cup up with sweet milk. Pour into flour and sugar and beat five minutes. Flavor. Bake in moderate oven about one-half hour.

Potted Plants.

When potting plants put a piece of coarse muslin over the hole in the pot before putting in the bits of stone and sod, which keeps the drainage good. The muslin prevents the earth from washing away.

LET UP PROTEINS.

Avoid "Spring Fever" by Cutting Down Fuel.

SUMMER DEMANDS LESS FOOD

Warm Weather Means You Can Replace Hot Soups, Thick Gravies, Heavy Sweets and Rich Pastries With Greens, Salads, Fish and Fruits.

It will be only a few days now before some one will be heard to complain of "that tired feeling" so inseparably connected with springtime. But why not try a little modern therapeutics and see if you cannot escape that tired feeling this year? The tired feeling comes from only one thing, and that is an overclogged system. To use the hackneyed but nevertheless illuminating comparison, the body may be likened to a steam heating plant which has been going at a pretty high pressure all winter, but now, when the weather becomes warmer, we must open the furnace door, shut down the drafts and keep the fire as low as possible if we do not want to be overheated. Similarly we must cut down the fuel supply of the body with the approach of warm weather. It is foolish to keep on stoking our engines when the higher temperature about us does not require that the body work so hard to keep warm.

The only way to keep cool and thus not feel tired is by avoiding those foods which create heat or build tissue too generously. First of these are all the fats and then the starches or sweets. Let us therefore avoid the alluring doughnut, the elusive croquette, the pastry tray and the meats with rich gravies, for foods that are fat or heavy should be shunned in the changing season, when the body most particularly cries out for foods that are cooling, refreshing and light. Away with puddings, discard the pot roast, and in their places substitute salads, fish, fruits and the uncooked cereals. Give the body a chance to work off the clinkers of winter without choking it up with new fuel. Patronize nature's medicines and you won't need the doctor's. Drink plenty of water, lemon and fruit juice. Cut down your helping by a third and see if you don't feel as sprightly as a robin instead of logy and weak. Your spring tonic is on the vegetable stand, and your spring prescription is to eat less and drink more.

The group of foods called proteins, of which meat is most important, are those which, science tells us, build up body tissues. Now, the spring is not the season to build up tissue unless we have been overworked during winter; also the protein of meat is particularly likely to leave a residue of uric acid in the body. But our aim now is to house clean the system, and we want to avoid complicating the housecleaning by eating foods which will leave still more refuse. Elimination of meat almost entirely is one of the wisest plans for summer health. Cheese also is not an advisable diet for most.

The Vogue of Wicker.

Many of the wicker materials—reed, rattan, cane and bamboo—are of Asiatic origin, Singapore being the world market for them. Reeds are used both whole and split.

Bamboo, while not strictly wicker, is often used with rattan or with grass matting. Its chief merit is its cheapness.

Grass, too, is hardly wicker, but is used as an outer textual covering rather than as a material for construction, the base being some light wood like willow.

CREAM SAUCE SUCCESS.

WHITE sauce, cream sauce or roux, all essentially the same thing, is the foundation for much in the culinary world. Souffles, baked omelets, cream soups and many sauces all require it as a foundation; hence the mastery of its making is important to every successful cook.

One important thing to remember is that the flour must be thoroughly cooked if the sauce is to be considered successful. It is better to let a thin sauce cook slowly until it is thicker than to add more flour to gain thickness.

Another thing to remember is that in making a cream soup the other ingredients—meat stock, tomato juice, vegetable puree or whatever it may be—should be poured into the milk. This makes curdling less likely.

Sometimes the acid in the other ingredient of cream soup causes milk to curdle. Also, the addition of salt to fresh milk curdles it, and so salt should never be added until the very last minute to a cream soup.

If cream soup does curdle after it is mixed immediately beat it thoroughly with an egg beater to bring back its original creamy state.

Try adding a small pinch of soda to the milk mixture before pouring tomato or any other very acidulous substance into it.

Creamed Eggs.—Cook together a tablespoonful of butter and half as much flour, and when they bubble pour upon them a cup of rich milk, one-half milk and half cream. Stir to a smooth white sauce, season to taste and pour into heated nappies. Have the sauce reach a third of the way up the inside of the nappies. Drop an egg in each, put a bit of butter on top and set in the oven until the whole is set. Serve at once.

CYMRIC, LADEN WITH MUNITIONS IS TORPEDOED

German Submarine Fired the Shell That Sent White Star Liner to the Bottom.

The White Star line steamship Cymric which left New York April 29 with a heavy cargo for Liverpool, was torpedoed by a German submarine about noon yesterday while off the the Irish coast. Up to an early hour this morning the fate of the vessel was not known. The Cymric was carrying no passengers, but she had on board officers and crew numbering 155.

The first and almost the only news of the steamship reached London a few minutes after seven o'clock last evening in the form of a report to Lloyd's simply stating that "the Cymric is reported sinking." The report caused some alarm until it was recalled that none of the White Star fleet has been engaged in passenger carrying since midwinter.

Lloyds information for four hours contained the only word of the vessel. About eleven o'clock, however, a message from Liverpool said: "The White Star Company, from reports it has received, believes the Cymric was torpedoed about noon today. The steamship carried no passengers."

The Cymric was one of the best known vessels owned by the White Star Company. Before the war began she was in the passenger and freight service between Liverpool and Boston. She was built in Belfast and was of nearly 14,000 tons displacement.

New York.—When the White Star line office, No. 9 Broadway, closed at half-past six o'clock last night no word had been received by the officials from the home office in England concerning the Cymric.

The Cymric steamed from New York for Liverpool on April 29. She had no passengers, except five distressed British seamen who had come to this port on board other ships and became ill while here. None of these according to J. J. MacPherson, British Vice Consul, who has charge of the shipping department of the consulate, was an American citizen. Neither, as far as Mr. MacPherson was able to ascertain, was any of the 110 men in the Cymric's crew. He said there had been twelve desertions from the ship, and the places of the deserters were filled by eight men who signed here. But none of these, Mr. MacPherson said, was an American.

The manifest of the Cymric, as filed on May 1 in the Custom House here, showed that the Cymric's cargo contained the following articles:

Cases of firearms	8
Cases of guns	13
Cases of rifles	80
Cases of Gaines sheaths	820
Cases of primers	590
Pieces of forgings	2163
Cases of empty shells	11049
Cases of cartridge cases	300
Cases of aeroplanes and parts	40
Cases of tractors and parts	81
Cases of lathes	62
Bales of cotton	1572
Barrels of lubricating oil	7554
Cases of steel tubes	60
Cases of copper tubes	107
Plates of spelter	1768
Cases of gun parts	20
Cases of bayonets	6
Cases of rubber boots and shoes	624
Cases of fuse heads	220
Cases of empty projectiles	7
Cases of forgings	122
Cases of cartridge	8600
Cases of fuses	6720
Cases of automobiles	18
Cases of agricultural machinery	1247
Bundles of shovels	1231
Bales of leather	331
Reels of barbed wire	400
Cases of copper bands	271
Bars of copper	21908
Cases of brass rods	1056

The Cymric was built in 1898 at Belfast by Harlan & Wolff. She was a twin screw steamship, 585 feet in length, 64 feet wide and 37 feet 9 inches deep. She was not armed. Her commander was Captain F. E. Beadnell, formerly of the steamship Baltic of the same line. Her crew ordinarily consisted of 165 men.

METHODISTS HEAR OF CHANGE IN RITUAL

Saratoga.—Radical changes in the service of the Methodist Episcopal Church were provided in a revised ritual which was submitted to the general conference today for action.

This marked the third attempt at revision, previous efforts in 1908 and 1912 have proved unsuccessful. Any change in the language of the historic ritual which John Wesley provided for his followers when he instituted the church, has always been opposed by the conservatives.

Among the changes suggested by the revisionists was a proposition that the word "devil" be stricken from all passages and that the word "sin" be substituted.

A service for the burial of children and receiving them into the church is also provided. The words "and with my wordly goods I thee endow" are stricken from the marriage service on the ground that the ceremony itself implies common ownership of property. Phrases intended to imply that the resurrection will be of the body instead of the spirit also are rejected, such as "yet in my flesh I shall see God."

ARMY PLANS TOLD BY WAR COLLEGE

How Troops Would Be Mobilized In Case of War.

NEED INTENSIVE TRAINING.

Division of Army General Staff Prepares Paper Approved by War Department—First Line Army Should Consist of 500,000 Trained Troops, Supported by Half Million Untrained.

The organization, training and mobilization of the militia and volunteer forces of the United States are the subject of a paper prepared by the war college division of the general staff of the army and approved by the war department. It shows that mobilization points and depots in all the states have been selected and says that "well digested systems of intensive training for new troops" have been prepared. The document tells exactly the procedure that will be followed in the raising of volunteer troops, the officering of them and numerous other details that at this time, owing to international affairs, are of interest to all men who might be called into service in the event of war.

"Under existing laws," says the paper, "and under conditions contemporaneous therewith it has heretofore been assumed that in the event of a war with a first class power the United States would require not less than half a million men for the first line, behind which could be prepared the greater army of citizen soldiers, upon whom our main reliance for national defense is traditionally placed.

500,000 For First Line Army.

"According to the recommendations of the war college division of the general staff, the first line should now consist of half a million fully trained troops, composed of the regular army and the reserve, which has been trained by service in the regular army, supported by an additional force of fully half a million citizen soldiers, prepared to take the field immediately on the outbreak of war, who should have had sufficient previous military training to enable them to meet a trained enemy within three months.

"At the present time the regular army at home could perhaps be expanded to about 100,000 men by the addition of a large proportion of recruits, and there would still be required for our first line about 400,000 citizen soldiers. This combined force would be insufficiently trained.

"The existing organised militia, if expanded to war strength, would furnish some 280,000 men, but these would not be available for all national purposes. To insure the entire control by the federal government over the required additional forces and the employment of such forces wherever the interests of the nation may require, they must be enrolled as federal troops, either as regulars or as volunteers."

The war college paper then discusses the relation of the organized militia to the volunteers and points out some of the difficulties that will have to be overcome. The remedying of these defects in the present militia law is one of the objects that the army bill, soon to pass congress, is expected to effect.

In discussing the raising of volunteer forces the war college states:

Raising of Volunteer Forces.

"Volunteer forces may be raised, organized and maintained only during the existence or imminence of war and only after congress shall have authorized the president to raise such forces. Congress could, however, by legislative enactment authorize the president to raise such forces in time of peace.

"The term of enlistment will be the same as that for the regular army exclusive of reserve periods.

"No person will be enlisted in the volunteer forces or mustered as an enlisted man into said forces who is not effective and ablebodied or who is under eighteen or over thirty-five years of age or who is unable to speak the English language, except that the superior age limit of thirty-five years is not applicable to those members of the enlisted personnel of a company, troop, battery, battalion or regiment of duly organized land militia who volunteer and are accepted as a part of the organization to which they belong if said organization be accepted as such for service in the volunteer forces, nor is it applicable to the re-enlistment in the volunteer forces or the muster into said forces of a man who has had prior enlisted service either in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States.

"The pay, allowances and pensions for all officers and enlisted men of the volunteers will in the event of war be the same as those provided for the corresponding grades of the regular army.

"Under our traditional policy of relying principally for national defense upon citizen soldiers the larger part of our land forces will not be fully trained at the outbreak of the war. It is more than probable that we shall have to employ some of them with little or no training as soon as they can be assembled in suitable units. * * * How much time will be available it is impossible to predict. It is reasonable to assume, however, that in the event of war with an oversea enemy it will be the time required for our enemy to establish at least a partial control of the sea sufficient to open the way for the landing of expeditionary forces."

HAS CHURCH OF GRINDSTONES

Pastor Who Unearthed Them in Waste Heap Dedicates It.

A church built of grindstones, which were dug out of a waste pile, was dedicated by the Baptists of Tacony, Pa., the other day. The pastor, the Rev. George W. Tryon, labored for months with pick and shovel, excavating the grindstones and superintending the work of placing them in the walls. The church cost the congregation $11,000.

The Rev. Mr. Tryon obtained the consent of the company to take the stones from the waste pile where they were thrown after having been used for grinding saws. More than 2,500 stones were used in the construction of the church, which is 87 by 43 feet.

Aluminum.

While experimenting with the intense heat of the electric arc Sir Humphry Davy discovered a metallic substance to which he gave the name of aluminum, though he never succeeded in isolating it. Twenty years later Frederick Wohler in Germany isolated this metal through the use of potassium. In 1845 he obtained it in small malleable globules. In 1856 Deville, a French chemist patronized by Louis Napoleon, improved Wohler's process and isolated aluminum in a state almost pure. At this time the metal was valued at $90 a pound. It was produced in chemical laboratories and used largely in the manufacture of aluminum jewelry.

Army Rifles.

A sporting firearm is a simple product beside a military rifle, for the latter must be interchangeable in all its parts as well as very strong, because the soldier puts it to many rough uses. The quantity of rifles needed for a present day army is enormous. Modern explosives quickly corrode the rifling, spoiling accuracy, and in trench warfare the soldier is said to need not one gun, but four. The first he shoots with, the second must be available when the first gets hot, the third is at hand in case of accident, and there must be a fourth in the repair shop.—James H. Collins in Saturday Evening Post.

Bismarck and His Dog.

Sultan, Prince Bismarck's favorite boarhound, attacked a passing railroad train and was cut to pieces. Bismarck's grief over the dog's agonies was such that his son Herbert tried to lead him away, but the prince would not go. "No; I cannot leave him like this." Then, when the dog's sufferings were over, Bismarck wiped his eyes and murmured: "Our Teuton forefathers showed benevolence in their religion. They believed they would find in the hunting grounds of their paradise all the dogs that had been their faithful comrades here below. I fervently wish I could believe that."—London Mail.

Warming Gold Dishes.

Castle Kilkenny is one of the oldest inhabited dwellings in the world, some of the rooms being 800 years old. Among its ancient treasures is a service of gold plate. Besides the ordinary plate service, Castle Kilkenny has the whole series of gold cups used at coronation banquets down to the time of George IV. The gold of the service plates is almost without alloy, consequently very soft and easily marred. Hence the plates are warmed and presumably also washed after use by being dipped into hot water held by a pair of tongs whose tips have been muffled in chamois leather.—London Globe.

CROWN PRINCE'S ADVANCE POSTS DRIVEN BACK

French Break Furious German Attacks Against Hill No. 287 With Its Approaches.

Paris.—The determined German attacks of Sunday, which were directed between Hill No. 304 and the Dead Man and carried the Crown Prince's advanced posts to a point midway between the two heights, were resumed yesterday, but against Hill No. 287. This elevation projects out to the northeast in the form of a shoulder from No. 304, and at the same time is the culmination of the Haucourt ridge, running down in front of the village of Haucourt. The Germans, early in their offensive west of the Meuse, carried the village and obtained possession of more than a mile of the riwge, and the apparent object of the assaults from this direction is an advanced on Hill No. 304 on the only side which up to now has not felt the heavy brunt of the fighting. The French are holding their positions here unaffected by the furious struggle that has altered the face of the country north, northeast and east of No. 304.

Early in April the Germans sought to approach by way of the Avocourt woods, but they were brought up short at the edge of the clearing. Nor were they able at that time to make progress down the ridge from Haucourt. They had reached the lower lower slopes of the hill by last Friday, however, and cleared the northern face up to the summit. They came down the ravine road running from Bethincout to Esnes and the cross road from Malancourt to Chattoncourt nearl yto the junction of the two, and thus had bitten into the flank both of the Dead Man and No. 304. On the southwest they had a flank fire bearing on the height. Only at the northwest and west were they unable to make an impression on the defences, and yesterday's developments indicate that the high command has determined to try out the metal of the French again from that direction.

The principal attack on No. 287 was launched about the middle of yesterday afternoon, following a morning of intense artillery preparation that covered all the country from Avocourt to Esnes. The gray infantry waves left their trenches only after every rod of the French lines had been searched with shells, but the charge was barely under way before the French curtain of fire descended and the machine guns began to spout death. The Germans wavered, reorganized and tried again, but the merciless hail of bullets and shrapnel shot them once more to cover.

The big outstanding fact of the events of the last three days, which has seen fighting on both banks of the Meuse almost equal in violence to that of the early days of March, is that after seventy-seven days of battel for Verdun the Germans can send in a new and formidable army and make another bid for the city. Taking the new operations as a whole, the Kaiser's generals seem to be centering their efforts as much against the Dead Man as against No. 304.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

My own home town—you've never been to my home town, you say?
Why in my town the live oak trees reach clear across the way!
And in my town the streets are good—why, we have miles and miles
Of well paved streets! And in my town 'most everybody smiles
When their eyes look into your eyes; just like they sort of knew
You would like them if you knew them, and they would like you too,
And in my town the air is sweet; from great wide fields that lie
Around it, soaking up the sun and smiling at the sky.

Why, in my town, in winter time it's ever cold!
There's always something doing! And sunsets are so gold,
When you look at them from my town, it seems like you can see
Enchanted castles and warm flags, like them that used to be
In stories that you used to hear when just a little tad;
And in my town are mocking birds that sing all day, as glad
That they are in my town, I guess, as I am glad; and, say,
You ought to see the children in my town come out to play!
The children in my town think school's a dandy place to go!
They'd like to go vacation time because they like it so!
And from my town a channel runs northwestward to the sea,
And great big stately ships come up, as proud as they can be
That they can come to such a town—I'm proud to be there too;
Beacuse each day comes in with song and all the skies are blue,
Except when it is raining, so's to make the flowers grow;
And through my town the perfumed winds from blossomed meadows blow.

And everyone that sees my town wants to come back again;
They like the women in my town, and like its splendid men;
And all the children in my town, they tell you howdy-do,
And take your hand sometimes and walk a little ways with you;
And Heaven's right close to my town, as close as anything!
Why moonlight nights sometimes you can 'most hear the angels sing,
But when I've gone to Heaven, and when I have sat me down,
I know the angels, I'll tell how much they would like my town.

To thee we bow our heads FULTON, because thou art a MIGHTY city.

Bless the dear hearts of all the citizens in FULTON who already NOW have shown a marvelous CLEAN-UP spirit.

CLEAN-UP you WOMEN, and MEN and CHILDREN of FULTON. Get custom to that fine feeling of being clean out and inside.

The Clean-up is progressing under the most favorable conditions. Yesterday two of the chairmen of the committees spent the morning on the West Side interviewing by the aid of an interpreter the foreign populace. In each case anxiety to comply with the requests made was distinctly the order of the interviews. Immediate response was noted in several instances as the "Do It Now" and "No Time like the Present" mottoes were put into execution.

It is anticipated that the big bonfire on the "flats" Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock will light up the whole city and show it up spick and span, while the band will play its merriest tunes just to show how glad a city can be when it is so very clean.

In addition to the investigations made by the clean-ups the following addition to their report is given: In the 3d ward on Pratt street, between 110 and 114, outside toilets and chicken coops need attention.

At the corner of 2d and Division a vacant lot owned by the New York, Ontario and Western R. R., is filled with refuse, a collection of years, a great eyesore.

In Division street between 1st and 2d a house with outside toilet needs attention. A house at 419 South 1st st. has a yard in bad condition; an outside toilet at 355 South 3d street; chicken coops and refuse in yard at 309 South 4th street; an open drain and outside toilet at 364 South 5th street; outside toilet at 409 South 5th street; a lot between 4th and 5th streets is being used as a dumping ground for toilet refuse; a row of houses in Pratt street, the rear of which are unpleasant sights to 5th street; a manure heap in Buffalo street; a backyard full of refuse in Rochester near 3d street.

2d Ward: At 3d and Leitch a house in bad condition, and rubbish and refuse in yard; at Broadway and 3d a driveway is used as a dumping ground; a house in West street in the 500 block, outside toilet, garbage, etc.

6th ward: A house on the west side of 4th street occupied by foreigners in very bad condition; the entire neighborhood of 1st, 2d and 3d streets between Erie and Seward is being used as a city dump, in very bad condition; a barn at 609 Erie street needs attention. An old well of stagnant water at 613 Erie street; bad condition of Manhattan ave.; washed out roadway in 8th street; rubbish on property in 8th street.

In West Broadway between the L. P. Smith store and Wallace confectionery store a shed and barns in very bad condition.

A dumping ground for tin cans may be found on the east side in the 6th ward, between 4th and 5th street and facing Seward street. On the West Side, the foot of Broadway at the Lake will also receive tin cans, and contributors, at least the highest contributors will receive movie passes for the theatre on Saturday morning. The kiddies had better get their good work in on Friday.

The Clean-ups announce that tin cans if covered with earth will disintegrate in two years' time, while if left uncovered it will take them years to disappear.

Also they announce that ashes may be used to great advantage in gardening. If the soil is of clay composition dig about a foot in depth, place the ashes, and cover with about six inches of soil. If the soil is sandy they advise placeing directly on top of the ground and then covering with about six inches of good soil also.

The last two suggestions show what thoughtful, practical housekeepers the Clean-ups are.

EDITH PERRIGO GETS VERDICT FOR $1,300 AGAINST THIS CITY

Pulaski (Special).—A sealed verdict was handed up by the jury here immediately upon the reconvening of Supreme Court, Justice Hubbs presiding, in the case of Edith Perrigo, against the city of Fulton.

The verdict was for $1,300 in an action to recover $25,000 damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff who alleges she sustained injuries by falling over a stake in Utica st., Fulton, at a time when a concrete sidewalk was being laid.

The case was fought hard by City Attorney Hillick, who pressed for non-suit, but this was denied by Justice Hubbs.

The usual motive and appeal was made by the girl's attorneys and this may result in a new trial.

The Brosemer case is expected to reach the jury today.

RUSSIANS CAME TO FRANCE BY WAY OF SUEZ CANAL

Marseilles.—The second instalment of the Russion contingent for France landed here today after a land and sea journey of approximate seventeen thousand five hundred miles, from Moscow to Port Dalny, Manchuria, overland and thence by water transport.

The total number of Russian troops now landed, supplied with French rifles and sent on to Camp Mirabeau, three or four miles along the coast from Marseilles, for a two days' rest before being conveyed to the large French depot at Mailly, near Troyes, to prepare for service at the French front, is estimated at something under ten thousand.

(Since the foregoing was written three additional contingents of Russian troops have landed at Marseilles. On the basis of the size of the first two contingents something like twentyfive thousand Russians are now in camp or in the field on the western front.)

The voyage of the Russians constitute a record in military transport history for distance and diversity of route. The soldiers as already known are men specially chosen from every division of the Russian army. They were concentrated in Moscow under the supervision of General Lochwitzky, who landed with the first contingent last Thursday, and at Moscow entrained for carriage by the Trans-Siberian railroad across early seven thousand five hunred miles of country to Port Dalny, near Port Arthur, whence they were to start on a sea journey of about ten thousand miles.

Higher Life Never Sought by Fools, is a Peacock Belief

Evangelist Peacock's sermon this afternoon was taken from Proverbs, 11th Chap. 30th verse; theme, He that winneth souls is wise, and was in part as follows:

God sets before in the Scripture the importance of winning souls. Only the wise can win souls. No fool ever makes an attempt to help people up to a higher life. The foolish people are the ones who are living in sin. They are the ones who not only sin themselves but try to drag others down to a lower plain of living. Because of this spirit every man who believes in God should make an effort to help others up to a higher plain of living.

There are millions of people in this country opposed to God. There are only 38,000,000 who make any profession. That leaves us about 70,000,000 who have never identified themselves with God's work. Probably you could find a part of the 70,000,000 in Fulton. There are hundreds of people in Fulton who never darken the church door, never go near a religious service, never give a penny to carry on God's work. They drink, they gamble, they are impure, they not only live an ungodly life themselves but use their influence to drag others down. They are opposed to the commandments of God. They know no law but the law of their own desires. They are always talking about personal liberty when they should say personal license. They want to do just as they please. And they feel that no one has any business to interfere with them in any way. They are spiritual anarchists. It is the business of the church to try to win such persons to Christ.

The reason so many people are careless is because there is not a definite effort to win a definite person at a definite time. Now is the time to win people for Christ—not after the campaign closes. Many of the professed followers of Christ are lazy. If we want the blessing, we must put forth the effort. Andrew won Peter, Peter won 3,000 in one meeting. Kimball won Moody, Moody won thousands. Harry Monroe won Billy Sunday and Sunday won hundreds and thousands and has been a great blessing to the world and to humanity.

Probably some young man might be one in this campaign that would be a whirlwind for Jesus Christ. There are 13,000,000 young

ALL IN THE BUILDING

The one hundred and twenty-five bird houses made and erected by pupils in the local schools is a step in the building of junior citizenship. If one has not happened to think of the matter before there may not seem to be much relationship between bird houses and citizenship. Yet anything which tends to interest a people in their city, thus furnishing a common bond, is a community builder.

Last summer, the American City Magazine reports, Toledo conducted a bird campaign. It was designed primarily to enlist the activity of the children of the city in the protection of bird life in that region, and the interest grew and spread until not only thousands of children, but hundreds of grown people as well, were planning for the welfare of the useful birds around them.

Three thousand bird houses were made in the manual training departments of the public schools, from lumber furnished through the Museum of Art. These houses were shown in the museum in March, and were inspected by 11,000 people; they were built according to plans furnished by the United States Government, and were attractive as well as utilitarian. Many of them were given by the children to the city, and were put in place by the Boy Scouts, under the direction of expert ornithologists. Many others were placed in the school grounds and around the homes of the children; hundreds were purchased at the Art Museum and placed in private grounds. Although the houses were set up late in the spring, a surprising number of wrens and bluebirds availed themselves of the new homes. Food shelters and baths were constructed and maintained in great numbers. Illustrated lectures on bird life were given under the auspices of the museum on Saturday mornings, field trips on Saturday afternoons were organized, and lectures on birds were arranged in many neighborhood clubs and schools.

The splendid co-operation of Dr. Guitteau, Superintendent of Schools, Mr. Carl Cotter of the manual training department, the members of the Board of Park Commissioners, the Scout Executive with his vigorous and efficient troop of scouts, the School Protective Committee with Miss Gertrude Crim as chairman, the Traction Company, the lecturers who gave their services, and many donors of lumber, bird food, time and money, made the campaign successful. Through the School Protective Committee the children of the schools are kept in active touch with the work as it develops. In a contest which closed on October 1 the Museum offered twelve cash prizes for the best bird stories founded on personal observation, written by children of fifteen and younger.

The Museum Bird Club has been organized and is accomplishing much definite good. While it has given the children something to build of practical use and civic importance and has made them, in the giving, public benefactors, it also protects the useful birds who in turn care for the gardens and orchards by destroying devastating insects—and all of this work makes Toledo a better and more beautiful city.

THE PRACTICE OF "HOPPING" FREIGHTS

As Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Railway freight train No. 24 was coming north on the Rochester Division today the crew noticed some boys who were "stealing a ride." The train was stopped and the boys told to get off and a warning of the dangers involved in train-riding on freights was read to them by the conductor. The boys evidently paid little heed to the warning, for when the train started it was noticed that they got on again. This time brakeman Charles Connell, of Rochester, went after them to eject them from the train, and when within three car lengths of them they picked up some rock ballast and stoned Connell. One of the rocks struck him on the right side of the face, bruising it quite badly.

According to an official of the B. R. & P. Ry. a great deal of trouble is experienced in the spring from boys getting the "wanderlust" and stealing rides on freight trains. It is hoped that the local police officers will co-operate with the railroad detectives in an effort to abolish this practice before it leads to more mangled limbs or crushed out lives.

Boys should be kept away from the railroads, as it is a place where tramps and vagrants entice many young fellows to adopt a wandering career, some of them returning only to try to make a living by selling pencils on the streets or worse yet by begging.

Opinions

WAKE UP, REPUBLICANS

Events continue to show that President Wilson will have no opposition whatever in the St. Louis Convention, and they also indicate that there will be a straight out fight between the two old parties at the November election. One by one the Progressive organizations in the various States bite the dust. One by one they are showing an inclination to come into the Republican fold.

Connecticut is the latest example. The Progressives have a strong organization in the Nutmeg State, and the Progressive State Convention at New Haven yesterday clearly indicated the desire of the party to act with the Republicans. Indeed, the Connecticut Progressives were much broader and more patriotic in their utterances than the Connecticut Republicans were in their recent State Convention.

Wake up, Republicans!—N. Y. Herald.

WISE SETTLEMENT OF GERMAN SITUATION

Mr. Wilson's reply to the German note resembles the German note itself in one particular.

It is evidently written largely for home consumption.

We have our opinion of the spectacle provided by the governments of two great civilized peoples conducting themselves much after the fashion of schoolboys making faces at one another to prove their bravery before the staring eyes of the other little boys and girls. Still, all that is matter of small moment.

The important thing is that these two great nations are still at peace, with every reason to believe that the peace can be maintained by the exercise of good sense and reasonable allowance for the difficulties both labor under.

We congratulate the country that it is not to be plunged into the maelstorm of this insane and wicked war.—N. Y. American.

TO WORK WITH WOMEN

The decision of the suffragists to devote their energies this year more toward converting women to the cause of good politics. Not until the men can be shown that women themselves really want the ballot will the cause make permanent headway. It is not unlikely that the suffrage politicians realize that a large share of the vote for the amendment last year was complimentary, that it was cast with the conviction that the cause could not win. In other states the second referendum on the issue has shown a big falling off in the affirmative vote. The most effective argument of the men is that their women folk do not want to vote. When they can no longer make that statement, the movement will gain headway.

The suffragists ough to do well with the women. Their campaign carries a social glamor. Many women ambitious for social recognition find it in the local organization. By joining the association a woman pries the social door a little. If she gives money or becomes ardent she may soon get a social rating and be included in the set she aims to join.—Watertown Standard.

WHEN PLAY WAS WICKED

How far and fast the world has moved with regard to its view of children was impressed forcibly upon the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Saratoga Springs the other day, when Bishop Hamilton, in the episcopal address to the conference, remarked that among the 32 rules printed to govern the students of Cokesbury College, 130 years ago, was one like this:

"The students shall be indulged with nothing which the world calls play: Let this rule be observed with the strictest nicety, for those who play when they are young will play when they are old."

Close your eyes and see if you can imagine what life must have been for the young folk then. We have many still with us to whom this random thought will bring recollections of the Sabbath of their childhood; when smiles were considered godless and even a walk through the fields was unpardonable dissipation.

Nowadays the fear is rather that the children will not play enough. We have a long way yet to go, of course, before we have done for childhood our whole duty. There is child labor to be remedied, and conditions of child care and nourishment must be improved. But we have grasped at length the notion that if we are to have strong, brave and clean men and women, we must have happy, healthy children. This does not mean that they should be coddled and spoiled. It is only a recognition that fresh air, good food and plenty of fun are no more than every child deserves.—Albany Express.

Days You'll Never Forget

TALKS ON BANKING

SAVINGS BANK CENTENNIAL SERIES

No. 9.—RECONCILING YOUR BANK ACCOUNT

If you keep a checking account with a bank it is important both to you and to the bank to know that your accounts agree. Errors are liable to be made on both sides. A deposit that should have gone to your account may have been credited to one with a similar name, and likewise a check may have been wrongly charged against your account. Forgeries may have been committed through your checks, and errors incidental to keeping a large number of accounts are always possible. It becomes important, therefore, to frequently adjust your balance with that of the bank, both for the sake of protection and for the sake of accuracy.

A great many banks balance the pass books when left for this purpose, by listing on the adding machine the paid checks, deducting the amount from the total of the deposits, the difference representing the amount on deposit. Other banks now issue a monthly statement in the form of a typed sheet, containing all deposits made and checks paid, with the balance struck. This obviates the necessity of balancing the pass book, which becomes merely a memorandum of deposits made.

Whatever the method, you should not delay reconciling the balance. It is easily to be seen that the bank's balance will not agree with your check book, by reason of the fact that you have issued checks which may not have been presented for payment. It is a good plan to consider every check issued as immediately paid, and deducted from your bank balance. If you do this, you will never be deceived as to the condition of your account.

Number all checks consecutively and when returned from the bank arrange them numerically, and check them as to amount with the check book stubs. After you have ascertained what checks you have issued that have not been paid, subtract the amount from the balance shown by the bank, which should agree with your own balance. If any difference occurs, after assuring yourself that you are right, report the matter at once to the bank.

It is well to examine the checks returned to see that they are all signed by you, and that the amounts have not been raised, the latter being proven from the checking process above noted. If you will follow these simple directions, and see that your account is reconciled at least every sixty days, it will help both you and the bank officials, for they desire frequent reconcilements and do not care to have vouchers accumulate for a long period.—American Bankers Association.

DOG HAS LUXURY.

Lives In a Fifteen Room House In Boston and Has Valet.

Boston.—Few persons in Greater Boston know that Cohasset is the abode of royalty.

Yet down in Cohasset, off beautiful Jerusalem road, high up on a great estate, in a fifteen room house, with a splendid big bed for himself, with an allowance of $1.50 a day for meals and with a Japanese valet to attend him night and day, lives his imperial highness Prince, a monster Great Dane dog.

The palace of Prince is situated on an eminence. Far above it towers the residence of Ernest G. Howes, who lives in winter on Commonwealth avenue and who is a wealthy Boston man. He is gracefully permitted by H. I. M. to occupy one of the finest homes in Cohasset, just above Prince's palace.

This is in return for a favor done Prince by Mr. Howes. Mr. Howes, while still in his early days of youth, purchased him. Though the base mercantile transaction must have hurt Prince's dog heart, he never winced and swallowed the humiliation with royal fortitude and regal philosophy. Mr. Howes installed him in the palace just below, and Prince, out of gratitude, has permitted Mr. Howes' residence near him ever since. This was about a year and a half ago.

Should you desire an audience with his majesty an interview first with one Toku Kobe, valet, is desirable. In fact, the prince's valet is quite talkative in regard to his majesty's tastes and customs.

"It is pleasant to know that Prince likes one," said the reporter. "What does he usually desire for a repast?" he asked, with some apprehension.

"Ah, the expense is great, sometimes $10 in the month for meat alone and only the best."

"You provide"—

"Yes; each day I travel to the town to purchase provisions. I buy the best of meat. Cost it 22 cents or 25 cents, it does not matter if it is only good. He eats sometimes more, sometimes less, than two and one-half pounds each day."

"And besides?"

"He is very fond of bone—just bone. Few people care for bone, but he likes it. I expend, it may be, 10 cents, 15 cents, 20 cents, daily for bone. But that is not all. Speaking of the table, he requires some fifty to sixty pounds of dog biscuit each month, for he is also very fond of dog biscuit. That is most expensive. I have paid 10 cents, even more, for each pound of dog biscuit that goes upon the table.

"He will now go to the supper. Following that he goes to the bath, for he is most carefully groomed," said the Hon. Kobe, while the reporter thought of what they say about some folks' aversion to bathing.

"After the bath," continued the Hon. Kobe, leading H. I. M. into the antechamber, then into the interior of the palace, "he wanders about the house—there are actually more than fifteen apartments in it—and then when he desires he retires. It is my duty to see that the bath water is not too hot nor too cold; that he receives the medicines prescribed by the physician; that the bed is made properly and smoothly, the linen changed and the lights extinguished. I awake him in the morning, bathe him and give breakfast, after which he goes for a tramp in the woods, usually attended by me. Thus the day passes and keeps me very preoccupied. As Mr. Howes had no other place at Prince's disposal, he has kept this house open through the winter season especially for Prince."

JOURNEY OF AN EGG.

Consumer Paid 20 Cents a Dozen More Than Producer Got.

Russell, Kan.—A. J. Olson, a Russell county farmer, who sells hundreds of dozens of eggs annually, recently wrote on an egg a request for the consumer to write him and inform him where the egg was purchased at retail and what the cost was.

Olson sold his product to a Russell dealer for 25 cents a dozen. The eggs were then shipped to Ellsworth, from where they were shipped to Pendleton, Ore., by express.

The Oregon retail merchant paid 34½ cents a dozen, and they were retailed at 45 cents, that being the price paid by the woman in Oregon who broke the egg bearing Olson's letter. Olson received a letter from her this week, and she gave the details of the egg's career and end in the far northwest.

Trolling, Caught Baby Seal.

Portland, Ore.—A baby white seal, said to be a rare specimen, was presented to the city park zoo here recently, the gift of United States Deputy Marshal Frank T. Berry. The seal was caught with a spoon hook in the Siuslaw river, near Florence, Ore., while Berry was trolling for trout.

Dog Swallows Hatpin.

Pittsburgh.—A hatpin seven inches long has been removed from the stomach of Kink, a Boston terrier belonging to Miss Alice Stewart of Williamsburg, by a surgeon. The dog had been ill for several days, and an operation was decided upon. The pin lay lengthwise in the dog's stomach.

KING ALFONSO.

SPAIN'S KING BUSY

Acts as Medium In Sending News to Soldiers and Families.

Madrid.—The king and queen of Spain and their family have spent the past few months here, although the king has been on various shooting excursions, making visits to his friends in the country. Among his hosts have been the Duke of Tarifa, who has a great estate near Cadiz, and Count Gavea, who entertained his majesty at Santa Cruz de Mudela. Returning to Madrid from one of these excursions to open a workmen's club, the king was saved from running over one of his subjects by the quick wit of the chauffeur. As the royal car was entering the Puerta Del Sol a man attempting suicide threw himself before the car. The same person, who had been declared a maniac, tried to enter the royal palace last November, telling the attendants that the king owed him a small sum of money, and he wanted to get it.

The queen has been entertaining her brother, Prince Leopold of Battenburg, now returned to London after a visit to Paris. He has been recuperating his health and was allowed to leave the army through the influence of his mother, Princess Beatrice, who has been inconsolable over the loss of her youngest son, Prince Maurice, who was killed on the battlefield in October, 1914. Prince Leopold is now staying with his mother at Kensington palace, London.

Queen Victoria has not taken an active interest in social affairs during the winter and spring, having had some weeks of ill health and preferring to spend most of her time with her children. The youngest, Prince Gonzalo, eighteen months old, is a splendid big baby and the pet of the family. It is amusing to see the solicitude manifested for him by his eldest brother, Alfonso, Prince of the Asturias, who will succeed his father upon the throne. Prince Alfonso is nearing his ninth year, and while he formerly resembled his mother, there is now a striking likeness to King Alfonso. The prince spends about half of the day out of doors. He has been trained in various sports and is divided in his love for his pony and for his little motorcar, which he is sometimes allowed to run by himself around the avenues of the palace park.

King Alfonso and his private secretary, Don Emilio Torres, have been instrumental in bringing about communication between 120,000 families in France and their relatives among the soldiers who are prisoners of war. The king receives from 800 to 1,000 letters every day in connection with this work which he has voluntarily assumed, of getting news back and forth between the prisoners of war and their families. His offices are at the service of the humblest servant girl as well as the princess.

CHAMPION HAND FISHERMAN.

Penn Yan (N. Y.) Woman Catches Big Whitefish After Struggle.

Penn Yan, N. Y.—Mrs. Jennie Pratt is probably the champion hand fisherman. Mrs. Pratt, who lives at the foot of Keuka lake, caught a big palatable whitefish with her hands after a considerable struggle, during which she struck her face on a cake of ice.

She saw what looked like a piece of ice floating on the water. Investigation showed it was a whitefish swimming on the water surface. She caught it with her hands, but he wriggled away. Mrs. Pratt dropped to her knees, thrust her arm to her shoulder in the water, struck her cheek on a cake of ice, but caught that fish.

Robs Prisoner In Jail.

Very Valuable Household Liniment

Mrs. J. R. Higgs, New Hartford, N. Y., states, "About two years ago I used Chamberlain's Liniment when suffering from neuralgia in the face, and it affords me pleasure to say that I have never had anything equal to it. I have since used this liniment for lameness and soreness of my arms and shoulders with the best results. It relieves the pain almost instantly, and its effects are lasting."

STEAM AUTO FOR RAILWAYS.

New Car to Carry Forty-four Persons and Make Mile a Minute.

A steam automobile railway car, using kerosene as fuel, capable of making a mile a minute and carrying forty-four passengers, is being built by the Unit Railway Car company in Newton, Mass. The members of this concern consist of F. E. and F. O. Stanley, who manufacture a steam automobile that bears their name. For a long time the Stanleys have been working upon a plan of adapting the steam automobile engine to railroad and street railway purposes. They have now reached a point where the first car, which may be described as the steam automobile enlarged and applied to rail conditions, will be on the rails in the course of a month or two.

F. E. Stanley estimates that with the present cost of kerosene the operation of the car will be about a cent a mile. It has a baggage compartment and a compartment for the engineer, weighs about 35,000 pounds and will cost about $10,000. The body is of steel and is equipped with airbrakes, electric lighting system and standard equipment. Designs have been made for a smaller car to carry twenty-six passengers and adapted more for service similar to that of trolley cars.

WOMEN'S PART IN POLITICS.

Suffrage Prevails In States Which Have Ninety-one Electorial Votes.

When the Republican and Democratic parties meet in convention next June they will find that equal suffrage has a very different status from what it had in former conventions. At the time of the presidential election of 1912 the states in which women voted controlled thirty-seven electoral votes. At the next presidential election the states where women vote will control ninety-one electoral votes—more than New York and New Jersey combined.

Since 1912 six states—Arizona, Kansas, Oregon, Illinois, Montana and Nevada—have given women the right to vote. If Iowa, where the question of woman's enfranchisement comes before the voters on June 5, joins the equal suffrage commonwealths thirteen more electoral votes will be added to the ninety-one of the enfranchised states.

FAVORS SMALL SUBMARINES.

Simon Lake Says G-1 Boats of Our Navy Are Best Type.

Simon Lake, inventor of undersea boats, told the members of the New York Electrical society the other night that he favored a number of small submarines rather than a few large, high speed submarines, which were liable to have engine trouble,

"It would be wise to take a step backward in speed in order to take a step forward in reliability," he said. "A number of 200 ton boats would afford the best defense to the country. The kind of submarine I favor is what I term an 'amphibious' boat. By that I mean one which may be transported by rail from one part of the country to another. By building a system of rail communication between the principal points to be defended it would be possible to ship the submarines at the rate of fifty miles an hour from one point to another.

"The small boats could be built quickly at a cost of $300,000, one-tenth of the price of a large boat. They would have a surface speed of 10 knots and a submerged speed of 8 knots. They could run out 300 or 400 miles."

DANCING AND LATE HOURS HELP MAKE GOOD SOLDIERS

Physical Director Tells Why City Men Are Best For Sentry Duty.

He who would prepare to act as a sentry in case of war should spend these nights of peace tangoing until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. This will make him accustomed to staying awake until late, and he won't mind the lonely vigils of a night watch.

This may be gleaned from a statement made by Dr. Louis Welzmiller, physical director of a New York Y. M. C. A., who added that the city chap has the advantage over the countryman in his fitness for war. Dr. Welzmiller is now rounding a class of business men into shape to stand such hardships as Plattsburg will impose.

"City and country men ought to be prepared to be prepared for war," said Dr. Welzmiller. "But they are not fit to prepare for war because they are not ready to undergo the preparation. What they should do is to get in such physical shape that they can stand the military preparation."

Both classes are creatures of habit, he added, and, although the country rookie is physically harder than the city rookie when they first get to camp, a few days will offset that. The interruption in habits of the country rookie will break him all up, too, said Dr. Welzmiller.

"The country chap finds it almost impossible to go on night sentry duty," said he. "He is used to going to bed with the chickens, and the loneliness of a night post is too much for him. The city fellow who goes to tango parties and after theater suppers and gets home several nights a week long after midnight doesn't mind sentry duty at all. His only regret when assigned to it is that he has no partner with whom to dance through it."

Why Neponset Shingles Make a Good Roof

They give you a spark- and weather-proof covering over all the roof. As many a single-ply roof of this material is in perfect condition after 12 to 18 years' exposure, you can judge for yourself as to its durability when in a roof of several layers.

NEPONSET SHINGLES

are handsome (gray, dull red or green). They can't rust, decay, warp nor rattle. They cost less and weigh less than slate or tile, are more satisfactory than the best grade of wooden shingles and, being double width, cost less to lay.

HIGH COUNT FOR MILK DEALERS

Health Officer's Test Convincing Proof, It is Said, That Milk Dealers Are Careful.

Dr. Hall has completed the task of making bacteriological tests of the milk which he procured last Friday from the city's vendors. He says that the ratings are excellent—a pleasing reflection upon the care exercised by the vendors, adding that within his knowledge every one of the 12 dealers who submitted samples for the analysis is furnishing Grade B milk to customers.

Grade B milk is that which shows a count of less than 50,000 to the cubic centimer. It could be classed with the Grade A milk (certified milk selling at 14 cents a quart), it is stated Grade A milk is State certified, while Grade B is not.

The bacteria count in the tests shows that the peddlers are using every possible safeguard to prevent dirt and dust from contaminating the milk. Carelessness in handling, or even too long exposure to the air, will increase the bacteria count by thousands. While a high bacteria count does not necessarily mean an impure milk, or that the fluid contains disease bacilli, it reveals one thing—and that is, carelessness. The bacteria count need not have an effect on the quality of the milk as far as butter fat and other points are concerned.

The scores of the 12 dealers were as follows: George Ingamells, 10,900; Charles Cook, 14,000; B. B. Ingamells, 4,600; Harry Ingamells, 41,400; Salvage, 2,900; J. Murphy, 10,200; C. E. Church, 13,000; Charles Mangot, 5,700; Fred Vogalgsang, 2,200; Frank Mangot, 4,100; J. G. Ingamells, 5,100; E. Juirk, 7,000.

TRI-CITY BOAT SERVICE IN 1916

Captain C. S. Burleigh has his steamer, City of Fulton, ready for the season's service, which will embrace the three cities, Syracuse, Fulton and Oswego. The Captain will not wait for tide, wind or other favorable conditions next Monday morning, but will without fail, leave the starch city early bound for this city and Syracuse.

On Tuesday morning the steamer will leave Syracuse for this city and Oswego, and on Wednesday and Friday the same schedule will obtain each week.

Monday, Wednesday and Friday will be the sailing days each week from the port of Oswego. A point of particular interest to shippers and receivers of freight will be the early afternoon arrival of the boat at this port, viz: on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 4 p.m., and on the remaining days of the week at 2:30 p.m. This will enable consignees to secure delivery on the same day that the freight is shipped.

The City of Fulton this year will be under the direct supervision of Captain Burleigh who gave to the business men of this city such excellent service last year. It is a staunch craft and its decks are ample to provide against overcrowding. Captain Burleigh is seeking an engineer in other ports, and when one is secured a trial trip will be made over the canal route.

Limbs.

Limbs come on trees and people. They are seen on trees, in courtrooms, on the stage and at the seashore. They may be covered with bark, plasters or silk, as the case may be.

Limbs are useful in many ways. Pelicans, who are very economical and therefore never get into deep water, use only one at a time. Soldiers use them for various purposes, sometimes standing upon them and sometimes running away.

Limbs are made of cork, wood or bone. Cork limbs are useful as life preservers. Wooden limbs can be taken off and used for purposes of defense. Bone limbs often enable one to get on one's feet.—Life.

JUSTICE REFUSES TO DISMISS $8,500 VERDICT

Justice Andrews has refused to dismiss the verdict of $8,500 won by Mrs. Floyd Adle, against the Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co.

It was argued on behalf of the company that Hiram Young, one of the jurors witnessed the accident and failed to tell the Court and therefore was prejudiced. This was not established. Justice Andrews held.

The only damaging witness against Young was Frank Miner, a watchman at the plant of Nestle's Food company in Fulton. Miner broke down on the stand and could not finish his testimony. He was assisted out of the court room.

Miner said that Young told him that Adle had been electrocuted and one leg burned off. Stanley Hutton, another watchman, swore that he told Miner of the accident in Young's presence. Frank E. Whipple, a detective, testified that Young told him he knew nothing of the accident.

The motion was dismissed with $10 costs on the application of Olmstead, Van Bergen & Searl, Mrs. Adle's attorneys.

Christ's Mission is to Save All Those Willing to be Saved—Peacock

Last night, at the Tabernacle Director Warth sang very touchingly, "What will you do with Jesus?" Rev. Peacock then preached from Hebrews 7:25, "Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Christ's mission is not to judge or condemn the world, but to save all those who are willing to be saved. It isn't God's will that anyone go to hell, but people send themselves to hell. God can save the murderer, the drunkard, the profane man, the gambler, the Sabbath desecrator, the impure, the moralist and all races and classes of people.

Hebrews 7:25. Wherefore He is able to save them to the uttermost that coue unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them.

Name Above Names.

When God's only begotten and well beloved son was born in Bethlehem the angel of God did not announce to the shepherds that a creator was born nor did He tell them that the upholder of the universe had appeared upon the earth. Neither did he say that the judge of the world had come. But he said Be not afraid, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior who is Christ the Lord. This was the name by which he would be most familiarly and fondly known among the crowds of sinners to the end of time. Jesus Christ the Savior of the world. The name that is above all names. We might tell men and women that Jesus had the power to create the heavens and the earth and to raise the dead, and judge men and women before God's judgment throne but if we could tell them that Jesus has the power to save, these things would not touch their hearts and bring them into the kingdom of God. Christ's mission in coming to this world was not to judge or condemn the people in the world but to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him. He has the ability to save at all times and under all circumstances and among all classes of men. He can save the worst sinner that ever walked the face of the earth. He can save you. He can save me because He ever liveth to make intercession for us. As the shepherd has his sheep, who are objects of his special care and keeping, as the attorney has his clients for whom he pleads at the law, as the representative has his constiuency, for whom he stands and with whose interests he is charged to carry them through, so Jesus Christ sitting at the right hand of the father's throne, undertakes the case of all those who come unto God through Him. And if men and women are not saved it is because they have disdained Jesus Christ, and have refused to commit their souls into His hands. Now I think the idea in the mnids of the apostles in this passage of scripture is this:

That Christ is no half-way savior, that He has the power and is able to save all those who have implicit faith in Him and are willing to obey Jesus in all things. This was what distinguished Jesus from the Levitical Priests. They could only save in a measure while they were performing the office of the priest they died. They could not carry on the work through to completion. They only lead to the gateway of salvation and then pointed to the great High Priest that was to come. Now we are told in this passage of scripture that Jesus is able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him or through Him.

There Is Forgiveness.

Under the Mosaic law there were certain crimes or sins for which no expiation could be made, such as willful murder or blasheming. These were debarred from the priestly mediation. But the only sin debarred from the mediation of Jesus Christ is the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Even the murderer of Jesus himself can be saved by the very blood that was shed upon the cross, if they would truly repent and come unto God through Jesus Christ. Blasphemy against Jesus Crist is not an unpardonable sin. There is forgiveness through Jesus Christ for such a sin. The man taking the life of his fellow-man can be pardoned through the blood of Jesus Christ if he really repents and asks Jesus to intercede in his behalf. Saul of Tarsus, who was filled with satanic malice, who compelled men and women to blaspheme, and who threw men and women into prison for their belief in Jesus, was not struck down by the lightning flash of His love that he might be made to realize the folly of his sins and have the mercy of God manifested unto him. Hear his own words: It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinner, of whom I am chief. Sometimes we wonder if all the evil tempers and mad passions of men and women can be eradicated. We wonder if the men and women wandering among the tombs of sin raving and gashing themselves can be so thoroughly transformed and made new creatures as to be found sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in their right minds. And the answer comes, it has been done. It can be done again. Jesus Christ, God's only begotten and well beloved son, has the power to remove all these things from men and women and make their souls secure in the kingdom of God, i fthey will only come unto God thru Him. The man who has been wallowing in the gutter like swine a slave to the cause of drink, robbing himself and his family of the necessary things of life, driving out of his home al the blessings and pleasure of life, making earth a regular Hell for his wife and family, even he can be lifted from this gutter of sin and degradation and raised to the dignity of a man again by the Lord Jesus Christ. The profane swearer can be made to loathe the fiendish habit which has been devouring his immortal soul, by coming unto God through Jesus Christ are led to put off these sins and made to feel ashamed of themselves because they have been dishonoring God, have been trampling under foot his laws and they realize that in order for them to be saved them must come unto Him through Jesus Christ and cry out unto God to have mercy upon their immortal souls. Even those who have been defiling the temple of God by impurity can find rest and peace and deliverance from this terrible curse through Christ. Then Christ is able to save from all ranks and classes of people. One glorious thing about the gospel of Jesus Christ is that it reaches the strong arms of God down to the lowest depths of humanity and says, Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters and he that hath no money come. Come ye, buy and eat, yea come buy wine and milk without money and without price. The poor child of ignorance has the same chance as the child of learning and wealth, because he has made the plan of salvation so plain and simple that even children can understand it and come unto God through Jesus Christ. Some times people have an erroneous idea of Christ's gospel.

No Class Distinction.

They seem to imagine that Christ Jesus and His teachings were intended for those occupying prominent postions in this world, those possessing the things of this world and that Jeus did not come to save the poor ignorant. Go bakc over the life of Jesus while on earth, and where do you find him? In the homes of the poor and sinful, without taking race or rank into consideration He was willing to help all those who were in need. The condition is the same for all. Wheretofore He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him. I am a poor sinner and nothing at all, but Jesus Christ is my all in all. He knocks at the door of ever yheart rich and poor alike. Hear His own words: Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice and open the door I will come into him and sup with him and he with me. Then Christ is able to save us from temptation. Sometimes we have severe strifes with the evil one. The tempter comes upon us with all his hellish power and arts and if we depend upon our own strength will fail. But if we rely upon Jesus Christ He is opnipotent to save. Because He is living and is making intercession at the right hand of God. And becaue He ever liveth, the intercession cannot cease, but will go on until we have been entirely freed from the power of satan, and our souls secured in the Kingdom of God. Christ is always praying for His people. When Peter was in trouble and it seemed as if heaven and hell were contending for the apostle, Jesus said: Peter, Satan hath desired to have you that he might sift you as weak, but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not. There is the secret. We sometimes wonder how men are able to turn away from their sins and live for Christ but it is no wonder when we know Christ is praying for them. Christ's prayer has given power to many poor weak frames so that they have been able to go boldly to the stake and embrace the fiery cross of martyrdom. Then Christ is able to save to the uttermost those who have spent their lives in riotous living and have come dow nto the gates of death without God. At the last moment if such an individual will repent, Christ is able to save, because the blood of Christ can wash away the misdoings of a man even at the dying moment. Look at the theif upon the cross. Thou shalt be with me today in paradise. But the difficulty is just here. If a man puts off making his peace with God until his dying moment he is running a risk, because his life may be crushed out in a moment of time and he may not be permitted to speak one word to friends or God. Let us seek Jesus while he may yet be found let us call upon Him while He is near and realize that He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them.

I Save Drinking Men!

A Chicago Alderman Saved From A Drunkard's Grave. His Experience Free to All.

From The Tribune.—"Alderman J. H. Francis, probably the best known man in Chicago, was a respected, wealthy man until whiskey gripped him. He was a member of many of Chicago's leading clubs and commercial organizations; a Thirty-second Degree Mason; had a prosperous business; a beautiful home and happy family, automobiles, servants and everything that goes with health, wealth, sobriety and refinement. He fell a hopeless victim to strong drink; saw everything swept away, was in prison, had delirum tremens and was forced into the hopeless beggary of drunkenness. He was considered beyond redemption by his thousands of old friends."

From The Chicago Daily News.—"Today Alderman Francis is once more a respected citizen."

From Alderman J. H. Francis.—"Notwithstanding my awful condition I 'Came Back' and am today a sober, healthy and prosperous man In the interest of humanity I want to assist every drinking man that is burdened with the curse of drink. It makes no difference whether you are a moderate, occasional, or periodical drinker or a confirmed or habitual drunkard I can help you. I have saved thousands of men and if you drink yourself or have a member of your family, friend, acquaintance or neighbor who does write me. All letters confidential. I can remove permanently the desire for drink from any person. I want to tell everybody how I was restored to sobriety and health and the craving, desire and use for strong drink was taken absolutely out of my life forever. There is no human being so apparently helpless and hopeless from drink that I cannot save. Write me freely and fully regarding yourself or any case you have in mind. I treat all correspondence in strict confidence." Address

HE WAS ONLY A NEWSBOY.

But He Had a Motto That Pointed to the Road to Success.

A newsboy stood on a blustery night with a pile of newspapers at his feet watching for customers at a subway entrance in New York. In a bantering way as a gentleman hurried by he said to the little newsboy, "You can't sell all those papers tonight." The lad looked up with a smile and said, "I can try."

No bread line or bundle day for this sturdy American lad or for the fine, wholesome man he is bound to be as he grows up.

"I can try!" Good for the newsboy who said it; a motto for the girl at school poring over her lessons, for the mechanic toiling in the shop, the merchant busy in the counting room, the banker in his office, the professional man at his desk, the preacher in his study, the architect with his drawings and the astronomer at the telescope.

The world has been built by those who can and who do try. They put to shame the idler, the sluggard, the drone, the complaining and the ne'er-do-wells forever thrusting themselves forward to beg for special consideration.

The world would be better in every way if it had a revival of the good old fashioned spirit of self dependence that American fathers and mothers taught their children at their knees, mingling patriotism with their prayers. God speed the day when the spirit of young America shall be everywhere.—John A. Sleicher in Leslie's.

BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

An Ancient Legend That Every One Should Know by Heart.

There is an ancient legend of a man who faced the great day of final reckoning. He had lived as well perhaps as most of us while here below. At last he stood before the Judge of all the earth. His record was unfolded. The face of the Judge seemed to him to grow clouded as he traced its story. The record was pushed aside. The eyes of the Judge were lifted until they rested upon the man. The lips were parted as if the sentence was about to fall.

Suddenly from every quarter there gathered a shining host of forms which pressed about the judgment seat. They appeared to be in conference with the Judge. It looked as though with eager faces they were urging certain claims. Then they vanished from sight as mysteriously as they came. The Judge smiled, turned to a messenger clad in radiant robes of office and bade him conduct the man whose case he had just considered into the realms of the blessed.

As they moved away the man said to his guide, "Tell me, who were those who just now stood in numbers about the Judge and held converse with him?"

"Those," replied the conductor, "were friends who saved you. They were the deeds of kindness and of unselfish service you scattered far and wide while you lived on earth." — Detroit Free Press.

Tommy had returned from a birthday party, his round face wreathed in smiles.

"I hope, Tommy," said his mother, "that you were polite and remembered your 'Yes, please,' and 'No, thank you,' when things were passed to you."

"I remembered 'Yes, please,' replied the boy cheerfully, "but I didn't have to say 'No, thank you,' mother, because I took everything every time it was passed."

Some Job.

The man in the next flat was pounding on the wall.

SENDING MINISTERS HOME NOT NEW CUSTOM FOR UNITED STATES

But Never In History Has a German Ambassador Been Handed His Passports.

British Representatives Have Been Sent Back For Interference With Commerce.

WHEN the negro messenger of the state department in Washington, who for almost forty years has been the American government's official passport carrier, visits the German embassy—if the break with Germany comes—it will be the first time in the history of the United States that this country has severed relations with that empire or with any of the states which were united to form the kaiser's realm.

Since our government was founded many ambassadors have been sent home, but in the majority of cases the cause was their own indiscretions. The closest approximation to the present situation was in the case of the famous Citizen Genet, in the administration of Washington, and even that meddling Frenchman was more to blame for his recall than the Girondist government which had sent him here to enlist this country as an ally of France in her war with England.

Genet traveled from one part of the country to the other, campaigning for sympathy for his own country and rousing factional and racial strife. So ardent was he in his campaign that he publicly attacked the most prominent persons, and after a spectacular controversy with John Jay and Rufus King, wrote an insolent letter to President Washington. Soon thereafter France was requested to recall him. Passports were handed to him, but he never returned to France. He had married a daughter of Governor Clinton, and he lived in obscurity on his estates in the Hudson valley until 1836.

Arrange Treaty With British.

Hardly had Genet passed from public view when, in 1794, the British navy, and especially British privateers, seized American ships and cargoes by the scores under the pretense that they might be carrying aid to France. The indignation of the country was great, but as there was no ambassador to send home the house of representatives passed a bill prohibiting all commercial intercourse between citizens of the two countries. The senate voted it down, and then Washington sent John Jay to London as envoy extraordinary to arrange a treaty. The treaty was arranged, but when the senate advised Washington to sign it the whole country was roused to anger. Jay and Washington were bitterly denounced. Virginia threatened to secede, and writers in the newspapers even accused the president of venality. The treaty was so favorable to the British that the French saw in it a secret alliance with England, and as a result the Robespierre government demanded the recall of Gouverneur Morris, the American minister.

Morris was the first American envoy to have his passports returned by the government to which he was assigned, but the two countries did not go to war, although the international situation was as tangled as it is today, and Washington was bitterly assailed by his political opponents. Although the fact is forgotten nowadays, France and the United States were bound together by a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance, yet as soon as Great Britain declared war and attacked France the American government issued a proclamation of neutrality. This on its face was a breach of the national contract, and Washington was severely scored for not aiding France, for permitting the British to bring prizes into American ports, for allowing Englishmen to board an American ship in Long Island sound and for permitting English warships to be fitted out in American ports. But in those days France had troubles plethoric at home, and she sought no additional ones across the ocean, although it appeared to her that Washington was doing his utmost to provoke a war.

Minister Monroe Recalled.

James Monroe was sent to France as Morris' successor, but he aggravated the situation, the tenseness of which had been increased by the capture of an American ship near the Delaware capes by a French privateer. As a result of this capture the French minister, Adet, was called on for an explanation. He could give none, and Monroe was recalled. Charles C. Pinckney was sent abroad as his successor, but the French directory refused to receive him until her grievances had been righted. All America was incensed, the president proclaiming a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer; congress was called; President Adams denounced "the refusal on the part of France to receive our minister is the denial of a right." But war did not follow. Nor did it follow soon thereafter when Pinckney, Gerry and Marshall, who had been ordered to heal the differences with France, were boldly told by Talleyrand that money would mend all the ills of the Paris government. American anger was great over this demand for tribute; war resolutions were introduced in congress, the navy was increased, crowds shouting "Down with France!" paraded the streets of Philadelphia, New York and Boston; commercial intercourse was suspended, cities were fortified, and even the navy and privateers were ordered to capture the cruisers of France. Yet France did not declare war.

During the Napoleonic wars the foreign interests of the United States were constantly menaced by one or the other of the belligerents. The decrees of Napoleon were usually aimed at Great Britain, but they almost invariably hit American commerce, and the British orders in council just as frequently harmed the interests of the United States. In those days no European power permitted any foreign ships to carry on any trade with her colonies, and as the United States had no colonies of her own, these orders in council worked a great hardship on the American merchant marine. On Nov. 15, 1806, a law went into effect forbidding the importation from Great Britain of a long list of goods. This was regarded as a polite way of breaking off diplomatic relations.

Blow to American Commerce.

One week after this bill was passed and before the law became effective a British warship attacked an American ship two miles off Sandy Hook and shot off the head of the helmsman. The body of the sailor was viewed by indignant crowds in New York. President Jefferson ordered British warships to leave American ports and sent commissioners to England to demand redress. They arrived abroad just as Napoleon issued his famous Berlin decree blockading the British islands and practically wiping out American trade. The British countered by prohibiting neutral trade with France, and as America was practically the only nation then trading with France, the blow was a most serious one to the commerce of this country. The United States was ground between the two millstones—England trying to drive America into a war against Napoleon, France trying to force her into strife with England.

At this crucial juncture the British Whigs fell from power, and while the new government was studying the situation a bomb upset everything. The Leopard, a British warship, which had been assisting in a high handed blockade of the American coast for three years, made an attack on the Chesapeake, an American warship suspected of having British deserters aboard, killed three and wounded eighteen of the crew and almost sank the vessel before the American commander hauled down his flag. Again the country was aroused over the outrage. President Jefferson issued a proclamation shutting our ports to armed ships of England, troops were called out, congress was gathered and a commissioner sent to England to demand redress. After many delays Great Britain disavowed the Leopard's acts and recalled her commander. Then congress, to cure all the ills that Napoleon and Britain had heaped on America, passed a law prohibiting American ships from leaving the ports of the United States for those of any foreign power.

But plenty of ships left American ports surreptitiously and so crowded the harbors of Spain that Napoleon saw his opportunity and seized them all. Again the war cry was raised, and the French minister was about to be sent home when the Spaniards rose, drove Napoleon out of the country and liberated every American ship.

Meanwhile Pinckney, the American minister at London, tried to heal the breach between the two countries growing out of the orders in council. He was unable to make progress, and, taking advantage of the failure of the British to appoint a minister to succeed Jackson, who had been sent home because he had insulted President Madison, asked for his passports and in 1811 left London in a threatening manner. This was the only time in history that an American minister returned from England in a huff. In the following months the relations between the two countries grew more strained over the impressment of American seamen and the seizure of American cargoes, and in June, 1812, war was declared. Then the British minister received his passports, but in a different spirit from that in which his predecessors had received theirs.

Other serious breaches of diplomatic relations, of course, occurred preceding the war with Mexico in 1846 and the more recent war with Spain. The United States for a long time had no diplomatic relations with Servia after the king and queen were slain in Belgrade, nor did this country recognize Huerta in 1913-14, although the United States legation in Mexico City was kept open during the absence of the American minister. In 1868 the American government withdrew its minister, General McMahon, from Paraguay and declined to hold any diplomatic intercourse with that country because President Lopez had arrested, imprisoned and tortured an American and an Englishman who were in the personal suit of the American minister. A congressional inquiry placed the blame on the minister, and no war followed the breaking off of relations.

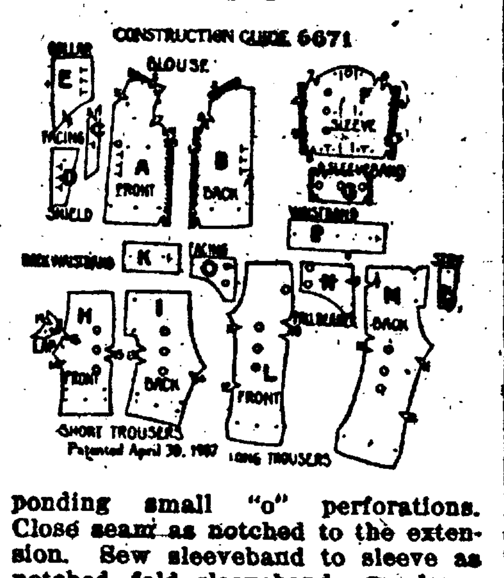
Sailor Suit of Splendid Design.

An ideal suit for the small boy is this sailor design. Developed in serge, linen or khaki cloth it is also very serviceable.

After all the sailor suit is the ideal model for the small boy. The design illustrated is well suited to development in serge, linen, sail cloth or khaki. The trousers may be long, finished with cuffs or knee length. The blouse has a sailor collar, a shield and one-piece plaited sleeves. In medium size the design requires 3⅛ yards 27-inch material, if made with short trousers, or 4¼ yards for the long trousers. For the trimming 3½ yards of braid are required.

The blouse is made first, and with little trouble. Slash the left front along small "o" perforations and insert a pocket. Slash down the fold at center-front from upper edge to large "O" perforation. Line facing and adjust on left front, center-fronts and upper edges even. Sew an extension lap about 1 inch wide to right front edge. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Turn hem at lower edge on small "o" perforations. Sew collar to neck, notches and center-backs even. Adjust shield underneath front, corresponding small "o" perforations, and center-fronts even.

To make the sleeve, form a box-plait, creasing on line of slot perforations, bring folded edges to small "o" perforations and press. Plait lower edge bringing "T" to corresponding small "o" perforations.



Close seam as notched to the extension. Sew sleeveband to sleeve as notched, fold sleeveband on large "O" perforations and fell remaining edge over seam. Sew in armhole as notched, large "O" perforation at shoulder seam easing any fulness.

The first thing to do to the trousers is to slash the fall bearer between small "o" perforations. Next insert pocket. The large "O" perforations indicate the center front. Sew to back section as notched and close leg seams as notched leaving the outside seam free above single large "O" perforation in front section. Close center seam from upper edge of front to extension in back; turn under extension on small "o" perforations, work eyelets for lacing. Turn hem at lower edge of leg on small "o" perforations. Close center seam of facing (indicated by small "o" perforation), adjust under front, upper edges and seams even stitch upper and side edges to position. Work buttonholes in front, and sew buttons on fall bearer.

Braid in self-color is the most fashionable this season.

The Buttermilk House

How a Trust Was Busted by a Rich Young Man. By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Did you ever hear how a hotel came to be called the Buttermilk House? It was first called the Mountain House. But a trust in buttermilk was smashed there, and that changed the name.

When the hotel had been running for a couple of years the buttermilk craze spread from east to west, and it soon found its way to the Mountain House.

There was only one man within ten miles of the Mountain House who saw money in buttermilk, and his name was Stebbins. He bought five cows, a big churn and cans, and he delivered buttermilk to the hotel in gallons and charged 25 cents for every gallon that he delivered.

Away off in New York city was young Carroll Harper, who held a situation in his wealthy father's bank. He was an industrious young man instead of a dawdler. He was anxious to learn the banking business, and, though rich in his own right, he stuck to his work like some of the employees who were getting salaries of only $20 a week. By and by a crisis came—that is, young Harper found his appetite gone, his nerves all aquiver and his ambition about faded away. He went to a doctor, and after being questioned and thumped and pawed over the doctor looked him in the face with sternness and said:

"Go west, young man! Go west, sir!"

"But why?" was asked.

"To breathe in great chunks of ozone and drink a gallon of buttermilk every day and to come back here in about sixty days feeling as well or better than you have in the past ten years."

And the doctor, who had heard of the Mountain House and had sent three or four invalids there, advised the young man to make straight for that spot and to order a supply of buttermilk as soon as he had registered. His advice was heeded, and one morning the young man descended from the stage and entered the hotel. The place was off the railroad by fifteen miles.

They generally find out all about you very soon at a country hotel, and it was scarcely two hours before it was generally known to the landlord and among the guests that Carroll Harper had a financial and social standing in the big city in the east. It was also known to Mr. Stebbins, and when he called to take the order for buttermilk he raised the price from 25 cents to double that sum because he was dealing with a rich young man.

"Isn't that double what the others are paying?" he was asked.

"Oh, it's a little more," was the reply, "but you are rich and can afford it. What is a quarter a day to a man of millions?"

"But it strikes me as extortion."

"Well, you can take it or leave it. I am the only one around here with buttermilk to sell, and I can put any price on it I like."

The young man who was the victim of an extortioner planned to get even. He took the landlord into his confidence, and there was a conspiracy to smash Mr. Stebbins' trust.

After a ten mile auto ride down the valley and back only one family was found so situated that they could help Mr. Harper carry out his plans. This family was composed of a widow and a strapping daughter. They owned and worked a little farm together, but they did not even have one cow nor any outfit with which to deal with the buttermilk question. In a conversation the young man had with the strapping girl on the doorsteps he asked:

"Can you and your mother milk and take care of six or seven cows?"

"Yes, or ten of them," she answered.

"Can you drive a horse and wagon?"

"You bet."

And what did young Mr. Harper do? He sent an agent out to buy six or seven cows, a big churn that turned with a crank, small cans and big cans and a horse and wagon to contract for a supply of alfalfa to feed the cows on during the winter. When all these had been secured everything was presented to the widow and the daughter as a free gift, and they were told to go into the buttermilk industry for all they were worth. They had to sign a contract to supply the guests of the Mountain hotel with all the buttermilk wanted for the next five years, and they were not to ask above 15 cents a gallon. It was figured that at this price the profits would be about 12 per cent.

One morning the mighty Mr. Stebbins, who had run a one man trust for two years, drove up to the hotel in his mightiness and began to unload his cans of buttermilk. The guests ranged themselves on the veranda with smiles on their faces, and the landlord kindly but firmly announced to Mr. Stebbins that no more of his buttermilk was wanted. The Stebbins buttermilk trust was smashed. It was smashed as flat as a pancake. It was smashed by a young man, a widow and a strapping girl.

And when the strapping young girl drove up to the Mountain House for the second time with the light of triumph in her eyes and about a barrel of buttermilk in her wagon she saw a painter on a ladder in front of the house, and he was painting out the old sign preparatory to painting in a new one which should read "The Buttermilk House." And the hotel is there yet, and the sign is there yet, and every guest there is following the doctor's orders and is drinking cool, good buttermilk. There is a two woman trust, but it is a trust to be praised and not busted.

YOUR RAINY DAISY.

Dress as Well For Storms as You Would For the Opera.

The up to date business woman refuses to work in unbecoming garments, no matter what the weather may be. Rain or shine, she insists upon looking well dressed, knowing that her appearance is no small part of her success. The time has passed when the efficient worker was content to wear any sort of clothes. She dresses herself for the office just as immaculately as for a drawing room.

An essential to a neat, attractive appearance on a rainy day is some sort of waterproof coat. This need not be a hideous affair of rubber, drab in color, shapeless as to fit. Really smart waterproof coats are to be found in these enlightened times, one seen recently being in pewter gray waterproof tweed, designed to withstand the wickedest weather. It was lined with a lovely wedgwood blue shade of silk. The coat buttoned at the top with two large tweed covered buttons, or it could be worn open. It had two capacious pockets at the sides, and the garb was completed by a jaunty and sensible little hat in blue straw, with a gray ribbon and untarnishable steel buckle, and a pair of high waterproof boots.

The whole was a judicious mixture of the picturesque and the practical and proved that we can wear the most perfectly weather resisting garments and still look quite charming on a wet day. The idea that "any old clothes" will do for bad days is quite exploded nowadays.

Bulbous Plants.

Many amateur gardeners when their bulbous plants are through blooming are in great haste to let the bulbs dry out and pull them up. This is a mistake. As soon as crocuses, hyacinths, tulips and narcissuses are through flowering remove blooms and begin a systematic preparation for next season's flowers. It must be known that just after a bulb has finished flowering is the time when it stores up nourishment for the next season, and if the flowers are not to degenerate in a few years the bulbs should be given attention. Give doses of liquid manure once a week for at least a month after the flowering is done and do not neglect to water the dry stocks. In this way one can materially help them to store up food. Rich soil is not necessary for very young plants, as they derive most of their sustenance from the air and moisture. The soil should, however, be kept light and porous.

How to Retick Feathers.

Get your new ticking ready for the beds, have it all sewed up, but have about ten inches open at one end. Now take your old tick from which you wish to change the feathers and rip it open about ten inches at the end. Then take your new ticking and sew it on to the old ticking, having the two openings together. Now you can shake the feathers from the old tick into the new without losing one of them. Before closing up your new tick turn your old tick inside out and pick all the down out of it and put into the new ticking. Now you can close up your new tick.

MAGGIE AND A MYSTERY.

The Dark Secret Was Revealed After the Maid Had Gone.

"And so," said one north Pennsylvania street matron to another, "you let Maggie go?"

"Yes, and I made the mistake of my life, but I came to be afraid of her."

"Afraid of her, for goodness' sake! Why, she always seemed so quiet!"

"You noticed perhaps that she always had one or two lead pencils stuck in her hair? Well, we began to find pencil marks everywhere—on the paper lining the pantry shelves, on the packages that came from the butcher and the grocer—the strangest, most mysterious marks."

"Well, I never!"

"Yes; I had read of thieves marking on gateposts and all that kind of thing—the way they gave information to each other. So I let her go. One day when my brother Fred was here I told him about it and showed him some of the pencil marks. Then he laughed and read them right off. One of the markings said:

"'Don't forget to tell her we need mustard, macaroni and cheese.'

"Another was interpreted by Fred to read, 'Two quarts of milk for Sunday,' and another, 'Bluing and salsoda.' 'Why,' said Fred, 'that's shorthand and mighty good shorthand at that. Sister, you have let a bird go.'"—Indianapolis News.

Trees of Alaska.

The two national forests of Alaska contain about 78,000,000,000 feet of merchantable timber, and it is estimated by the forest service that more than 800,000,000 feet could be cut every year forever without lessening the forests' productivity.—Tree Talks.

A Word to Dyspeptics

Mr. Dyspeptic, if you knew how quickly and surely Chamberlain's Tablets would give you relief, you would certainly give them a trial. Read what Edward Gaffey, Newport, N. Y., says about them. I have been troubled with indigestion and constipation for the past three years, and this is the only medicine that relieves these attacks."

FOOTGEAR.

A Vivid Comparison of This and Last Year's Styles.

Anybody who predicted that so called "fancy footwear" would be out of fashion this spring made a wrong guess. It may be true that last autumn many of the extreme styles of ornate footgear that had been worn during the summer were discarded, but it is also true that they were discarded simply to make way for other styles of fancy footgear.

This spring the shops are as far from showing plain black boots and shoes as they were last year. Yet the boots and shoes of this spring are quite unlike those of last.

To begin with, a novelty is the return of the colonial pump. It is here in all its glory of tongue, and most women are thankful to see it again, for surely the colonial pump is comfort itself. It stays on without rubbing at the heel, which is something few other cuts of pump do.

Colonial pumps are made in patent leather, in black kid and in colors. Tan kid in various shades shows buckles of brown enamel or brass. Some of the black kid pumps have cut steel buckles, and the colored ones have either silver buckles of true colonial pattern—which also grace some of the smartest dull black kid pumps—or buckles covered with the colored kid.

Buckskin shoes are worn this spring. There are some very good high cream and light tan buckskin boots, both buttoned and laced, with French heels, that are admirable for street wear with light frocks.

The blind eyelets are still used for laced boots and the round laces. Cut work is shown on some of the white kid and buckskin boots and also on those of black patent leather. It forms a decorative band on each side of the front lacings.

Although leather or kid of two colors is not combined so much as it was last year, there are many sport shoes of white buckskin or canvas and tan leather. The combinations differ. Sometimes tan heel and toe caps on white boots with tan laces are found. Sometimes the vamps will be tan, with a white top and toe.

There are high buttoned or laced suede boots in violet, dusk blue, green and other colors to wear with silk frocks of the same color.

Three buckled straps are found on some of the new low shoes. The buckles, of nickel, are small, but heavy. Sometimes the straps come from the edge of the sole.

Whooping Cough Cured

"About five years ago two of my children were cured of whooping cough by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," writes Mrs. John Burns, Hamburg, N. Y. "This remedy relieved them the first time they took it, and in a few days' time they were entirely cured."

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

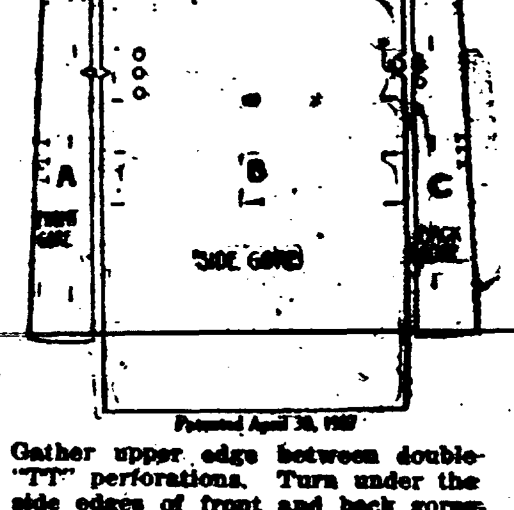
This Suit Features A New Skirt.

The tailored suit of taffeta is always distinctive, and this design featuring a new four-piece skirt promises to prove exceedingly popular during the summer.

Skirts add more than the usual variety and interest to tailored costumes this year. Taffeta is the popular choice this season and adapts itself congenially to the latest skirt modes. The model shown here is cut in four parts, with the front and back gores in panel style, while the side gores are gathered and tucked.

In medium size the entire costume requires 7 yards 40-inch material, but if made separately the skirt calls for only 4½ yards.

The making is very simple. First form tucks in the side gores, creasing on crosslines of slot perforations; stitch 1½ inch from folded edges.



Gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations. Turn under the side edges of front and back gores on slot perforations, lap on side gores to small "o" perforations, notches even; stitch 1 inch from folded edges to any desired depth, leaving edges to left of center-back free above large "O" perforation in back gore for a placket; press plaits. Turn under lower edge of skirt 3⅝ inches for a hem.

Adjust the stay to position underneath the skirt, bringing single large "O" perforation to center-front and small "o" perforation to center-back. Then stitch the upper edges of skirt and stay together.

This model is well suited to linen and tub materials frequently used for separate skirts.

CANADA SETS CLOCKS AHEAD ONE HOUR

Watertown.—Tourists who plan to go to Canada this summer should keep their eyes on their watches, not because there is any danger of losing them, but Canada has decided to conserve day light and during the summer months the watches and clocks in the Dominion will be moved an hour ahead. This is following out the policy of the other belligerent nations. By getting up an hour earlier i nthe morning this much day light is saved, and the daily schedule is set ahead one hour, those in the habit of retiring at 10 p.m., slipping into the covers at 9. The theory is that all through the country a large sum would be spent in using artificial lights during this hour that is saved, and the money expended for lights could be used to buy shells.

Dangers of Draft

Drafts feel best when we are hot and perspiring, just when they are most dangerous and the result is Neuralgia, Stiff Neck, Sore Muscles or sometimes an attack of Rheumatism. In such cases apply Sloan's Liniment. It stimulates circulation to the sore and painful part. The blood flows freely and in a short time the stiffness and pain leaves. Those suffering from Neuralgia or Neuralgic Headache will find one or two applications of Sloan's Liniment will give grateful relief. The agonizing pain gives way to a tingling sensation of comfort and warmth and quiet rest and sleep is possible. Good for Neuritis too. Price 25c. at your Druggist.

Germans Renew Fight for Verdun, but Fail

Paris.—Renewed fighting around Verdun is growing more intense, and the bombardments of the last two days have been as violent as any since the beginning of the German attack, on February 21.

East of the Meuse there has been an intense artillery duel in the region of Eix and Chatillon, southeast of the recent main attack, and also on the part of the line between Douaumont and Vaux. This leads to the belief that the Germans intend to attempt to push back he French right flank simultaeously with a similar attack on the left.

Further north, on the French lines running from Haudromont wood to the rear of Fort Douaumont, the French recaptured part of the trenches northwest of the Thiaumont farm, which had been taken by the Germans in the previous day's fighting.

West of the Meuse, after a violent bombardment of the French positions on the west of Hill 304, the Germans attempted an advance at three o'clock this morning, but the attack was completely repulsed, according to the official report issued at noon.

The battle shows every sign of continuing. Artillery preparation now proceeding foreshadows fresh attacks on both banks of the Meuse. The fighting might even be extended to the Woevre Plateau, as the German artillery was redoubling its fire there last night.

It is generally believed here that the Germans have transferred considerable forces to Verdun both from other sections of the western front and from the Russian front. It is noted that since the present offensive began on Thursday the Germans have not renewed attacks such as were made in the preceding week on other parts of the western line, especially those held by the British.

SOME DONT'S FOR AUTO-DRIVERS

Eyes of the Law Will Be Upon Them Within a Few Days.

Albany.—Six automobile inspectors in the meploy of the State will begin their duties within the next few days. The entire number has been selected from a list submitted by the Civil Service Commission following an examination of some months ago. On a lookout for violations of the motor vehicle law ,the duties of the inspectors will take them over the entire State. From now on motorists will do well to bear in mind these few don'ts, that may save them time and trouble:

Don't run an automobile with last years' license plates.

Don't think that one plate is just as good as two, or that you can get along without any. The idea may cost you a few dollars.

If you are a chauffeur, don't forget that the State requires a badge and a card, and what is more these are not to be left at home or at the garage.

If you are a dealer, don't take a chance with the inspector by using extra plates intended soloy for demonstration purposes, on commercial or pleasure cars.

Don't operate a car while intoxicated. There is a possible imprisonment for a year or a fine of five hundred dollars or both staring you in the face.

Don't forget the lights at night.

Incidentally, it's not a bad plan to wash the mud from the license plates.

While the State inspectors do not have the power to make arrests, they can, however, report violations to the local authorities which are generally productive of results. Some idea of the importance of the work done by the inspectors is shown in the fact that nearly ten times the amount paid in salaries to the six last year, was taken in by the authorities in fines resulting from reported violations. One inspector stationed at the New York city ferries on a lookout for New Jersey cars entering this State more than fifteen times allowable yearly without the purchase of a New York plate, brought in something like $9,000 in fines.

MUCK LANDS SOLD FOR A HIGH PRICE

A consideration of $40,000 is given in the deed transferring the muck lands in Oswego Town and Granby this county, by the Wagemaker & Freer Farm Company of Williamson, N. Y., to Daniel E. Wagemaker of that place. The company purchased the property several years ago. Nathaniel E. Wright of Oswego was interested in the project and a large acreage was under cultivation. Mr. Wagemaker is also the owner of muck lands near Williamson. The transfer is made subject to a mortgage for $11,200.

Verner D. Calkins, et al., vs. Clair W. V. Whitlock, et al., property in Mexico, $2,500.

Myra J. Sisson to Emma G. Demster, property in this city, indicated consideration $2,500.

Nunzia Cosentino and Bartolo Famularo to Bartolo Biancavilla, property in East Tehth street, Oswego, $750.

MISS JORDAN WAS CHARMING

Last night the Fulton people who attended the music festival in Syracuse felt amply repaid for their effort. The work of Leopold Stokowski was heard at its best, and Miss Mary Jordan, sister of J. J. Jordan, of this city, charmed the entire audience with her marvelous contralto voice.

The Post-Standard reported her work as follows:

Miss Mary Jordan, who was the contralto soloist of the evening, didn't wear any hoop skirts with her wonderful gown of shimmering blue satin and white lace, but she sang to the people and the people responded. At the finish of the opera number she was called back several times to bow her acknowledgement of the applause.

She insisted that George Hamlin and Arthur Middleton, the other soloists, should share the honors with her, and she tried to persuade Prof. Ward to take one of the "calls" with her, but the professor modestly stood back, preferring to think it was all meant for the singer.

An Utter Lack of Faith

It is surprising to know how many people there are, particularly women, who are utterly miserable in body and mind only because they have not enough confidence in Chamberlain's Tablets to give them a trial. Mrs. Sarah Hughes, Booneville, N. Y., was troubled with indigestion and constipation. She had bilious spells and would feel most miserable at times. She says, "Chamberlain's Tablets helped me from the first, and since using two bottles of them I have been in theb est of health."

Navy Will Blockade Every Mexican Port; El Passo Terrorized

Washington.—It is learne authoritatively today that the navy has formulated a programme of action which will be laid before Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and President Wilson for consideration in case of serious trouble with the Carranza forces in Mexico. This program calls for the immediate blockade of every important Mexican port on both oceans should the Carranza forces take the field against the United States expeditionary force.

High naval officers who have worked out the schemes believe that the government of General Carranza would quickly collapse as a result of such action.

El Paso.—This city is seething with excitement that portends open hostilities between the United States and Mexico.

Fearful of an uprising among the 20,000 Mexican residents of this city or of a covert attack from across the border, United States troops were late this afternoon distributed at strategic points about the city.

While these forces were marching to their vantage pltaces the Obregon-Scott confab was unexpectedly resumed. The conferees were together three hours and thirty minutes, but still failed to reach a definite agreement.

The conference was resumed at the suggestion of General Obregon, it is stated, in an effort to prevent immediate hostilities between the two countries.

BRYAN QUITS GRAPE JUICE FOR ORANGE JUICE

Davenport, Iowa.—William Jennings Bryan has quit grape juice, not in the "never again" style of the penitent but in a speculative "possibly again" fashion. He climebr off the grape juice wagon on his visit her and mounted the orange juice wagon.

The juice of the orange is now his favorite drink and so popular with the one-time Secretary of State that he carries a case of fruit with him. Today in his hurried departure some one forgot to load the oranges on Mr. Bryan's special train. No one knows what he drank when his train reached neighboring cities where he is speaking on prohibition.

HARD COAL RISE WILL BE FOUGHT BY U. S.

Washington.—The Federal Trade Commission announced today that if the anthracite companies increase the price of cial, assigning as a reason th recent agreement for paying higher wages to their employes, it will start a thorough investigation of the operations and accounts of these concerns. The action followed a recommendation made by Thomas W. Gregory, Attorney General, that past performances warranted such an inquiry.

Tribute to the Mule.

The mule has earned all the decorations that are worth while—the medaille militaire, the iron cross, the Victoria cross, the medal of honor, etc. As a campaigner he has no equal in any climate under the sun. He is the philosopher and stoic of animals. Even his stubbornness is sometimes a virtue. The mule is permanently associated with the army's bill of fare. Strategy has saved many a beleaguered force, but the mule with his pack has often routed starvation, the worst enemy that ever threatens troops. The mule does not crave respect, but every soldier loves him. Long may he balk and talk! —New York Sun.

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

The masses are marching on and on to reach the goal of life: Success. We will never have success unless we are willing to refrain from knocking other people, who may be thinking a little different than we do. And those who yell at the top of their voices about the very bad things in the human being, instead of trying to really educate then in the good things that can be accomplished in life, will LOSE OUT IN THE END.

In the days of old you could get quite a distance with SENSATIONALISM. In modern times, however, the average man and woman is too well educated to be humbugged about certain matters pertaining to our daily walk in life.

* * *

A man who is trying to make an honest living by hard work is a great deal better than the fellow who roars and thunders about others on the corners of the streets or anywhere else, trying to make a living in an easy way.

* * *

Let them yell; let them roar and thunder; let them knock all they will, but you can't get away from the fact that the FULTONIAN spirit in the clean-up campaign is about the BEST thing that was ever witnessed.

* * *

FULTON, the city of RIGHT MINDED people; people who are trying hard every day to accomplish something in life and do some good for the fellow man.

Have you ever heard of a city without people who were not willing to follow the flag of civic pride? No, you have not and you never will, because such a city does not exist. But, you can work hard to make it better just the same.

* * *

Never before in the history of communities was there such a spirit shown for a Clean-up campaign than right now in FULTON. In other words the citizens of FULTON are a clean people and will be clean until the last day of recorded time.

* * *

Some wit has said that if we never itched we would never know how good it feels to scratch. And so it is in business and life. If we didn't collide with a misfortune once in a while, we wouldn't appreciate our meetings with Miss Fortune. So, those of who are itching—let us rest in anticipation of the scratch that's coming. That's Optimism.

* * *

The Big Crowd:—Those who are willing to give advice.
The Little Bunch:—Those who are willing to give assistance.

Living on hope is like living on wind—a good way to get full, but a poor way to get fat.

Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel;
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatched, unfledg'd comrade.—Hamlet.

The fellow who's always prophesying some portentious evil, and croaking, "The country and the town is going to the devil, Sir," may be found among kindred spirits at store-box meetings, or on the street corner obstructing the way of decent folks, while his wife is doing washing for the general neighborhood.

* * *

Keep a stiff upper lip and you will find out sooner or later that after all FULTON is not a bad place in which to live and work and be happy.

* * *

Keep everlastingly hammering on that FULTON spirit, because that spirit is the right one and no one can deny it.

* * *

Clean-Up, Paint-Up, Brighten-Up, and Live-Up and FULTON will do the rest.

You people in FULTON are all right; we guarantee that the average city is not better than ours. Three cheers for ON, so loud that it may be heard over the entire country.

* * *

We say: FULTON FIRST, LAST AND ALL THE TIME, and you can't BEAT IT.

Absence of Provision for Emergency Fund Blocks Relief Work

Although several citizens have expressed a willingness to loan the city Department of Charities enough money to enable Commissioner James R. Somers to continue the work of the department, the situation remains unchanged because the Commissioner is legally unable to guarantee the payment of the loans under the charter.

Mr. Somers stated his position and outlined the condition of affairs in his department this morning. According to the Commissioner, the sum of $1500 which was appropriated in the last city budget is far from being sufficient to care for the poor of the city, particularly at this time, when the local industries are below the normal level, and unemployment among the foreign element is frequent.

In several cases the condition of the applicants for city assistance is pitiful. One woman, who lives on the West Side, is attempting to support her husband, who is slowly dying of tuberculosis, and two small children, and has managed to continue the fight with the small assistance she obtained through the Charities Department. On account of the financial condition of the department, however, Commissioner Somers was forced to refuse this woman aid yesterday, and other applicants, all of whom are worthy and in need of assistance, also met with disappointment. Mr. Somers' hands are tied, and any orders he may issue at the present are beyond his legal rights.

During the months of January, February, March and April of this year, the expenditures of the Charities department totaled $1900. The original appropriation of $1500, as well as an additional $500, which was transferred to the department, has now been spent, and there is no legal way by which the funds of the department can be increased.

Private individuals are willing to loan money to the department, and both Mr. Somers and Mayor Lewis have received several offers, but as the city is unable to legally secure the payment of the loans none of the offers has been accepted.

Although Governor Whitman has signed the bill which authorizes the Common Council to issue bonds to the sum of $15,000, with which to pay the indebtedness of the past administration and to make up the deficit in the current budget, none of this money, in the opinion of City Attorney Hillick, can be used for the Department of Charities. The emergency clause in the city charter which permits of the borrowing of money to defray expenses in some city departments in cases of emergency, does not apply directly to the Charities Department.

At the present time, the funds of the department total $2.58, and there is not even sufficient moneys with which to bury a pauper, in the event that such a contingency arose before the charities department muddle is straightened out.

WILL PROBE TAX ASSESSMENT

Deputy Commissioner William Van Allen of the State Tax department arrived in this city yesterday to make a thorough investigation of the tax assessment and collections here for the past year, in co-operation with the city Board of Assessor. Mr. Van Allen is to investigate the methods of assessment and valuation and will make a personal survey of the city in an effort to determine whether or not the present methods can be improved. Mayor Lewis and the Board of Assessors are furnishing Mr. Van Allen with complete information and are assisting him in every way possible in his work.

EVERY FULTON BIRDIE TO HAVE A HOME

The Clean-ups have brought to the front a lot of healthy enthusiasm that cannot fail to stimulate civic pride.

The arts and crafts department of the high school became so enthusiastic in makin gtheir own bird houses and landscaping the school lawn that they have hit on another plan. On Saturday morning these young citizens will place on sale one hundred bird houses. You will surely want to buy at least one model. They may be purchased at the places named in a display advertisement found on another page of this newspaper.

The proceeds of the sale will be used to further beautify the school grounds. The youthful workers need encouragement, so keep Saturday in mind and buy a bird house for your yard.

OLD HOME WEEK IS NEXT BIG EVENT OF LOCAL INTEREST

Blessed be the man or woman who was born, or who lived years ago, in this good old town on the banks of the Oswego river, as he or she shall have honors showered upon his or her head in abundance during the week following the second day of July, 1916. That week will go down in history as Fulton's first Old Home Week, when, according to the belief expressed today by Secretary Hollenga, this city's population will be increased many fold, or to be exact, until the boundaries shall contain no less than 30,000 souls.

The week of July 2d will be made notable for more than a tripled population. There is no gainsaying that statement. It will be a week of kindliness, charity, brotherly and neighborly love, tenderness and much Christianity—these are the inheritances of the persons who will return to the fold to participate in the celebration which will be prepared for them by the Fulton Chamber of Commerce committee of one hundred seventy-five citizens, whose names are as follows:

CITY MAY APPEAL IN PERRIGO CASE

William S. Hillick, city attorney, announced this morning that he would appeal the verdict rendered in the Supreme Court at Pulaski yesterday, by which Miss Edith Perriog was awarded $1,300 damages, in her suit for $25,000 against the city of Fulton, for injuries received when she fell over a stake on Utica st., during the construction of a concrete sidewalk. Immediately after the verdict was rendered, Miss Perrigo's attorneys moved that the verdict be set aside, and in the event that this motion is refused by Justice Hubbs, who presided, and the plaintiff's attorneys decide to let the verdict stand, Mr. Hillick will appeal. It was the contention of the defense that Miss Perrigo fell over the roots of a large tree.

BETTER DWELLINGS FOR IMMIGRANTS

According to the National Americanization Committee, of which Thomas A. Edison and Gen. Leonard Wood are leaders, the way to turn foreigners into good Americans is to enable them to live like Americans.

The committee is trying to arouse government officials, educators and business men to the fact that "the adoption and maintenance of an American standard of living is fundamental in the Americanization of immigrants." Its plan is to establish model industrial communities for the housing of immigrant workmen. To solve this housing problem it has instituted a competition among architects and builders.

The architectural requirements afford an interesting commentary on industrial living conditions as they are and as they ought to be. The competition is based on an imaginary industrial town of 35,000 population. It is to have not more than 65 persons to the acre. The competitors are to provide plans for private dwellings and for boarding houses for thirty single lodgers living two in a room. Some of the dwellings are to be one-family houses with two or three bedrooms; others are intended for one family, with accommodations for four lodgers.

No bedroom is to have less than 100 square feet of floor area. Each house must have a cellar, kitchen, combined living and dining-room and a bathroom. An important feature of the dwellings for families keeping lodgers is that the two groups are to be definitely separated, their only meeting-place being in the dining-room. This alone would do away with one of the chief objections to the present boarding-house system, which gives little privacy either to family or to lodgers, but crowds them all together in a manner injurious to comfort, health and decency.

It may be too early to begin talking about the condition of this city after the clean-up campaign has ended—and then it may not be. The campaign will end tomorrow. But in reality there should be no reason to believe that it will end this week, or next week, or the week after that, or for that matter as long as there is a Fulton on the map.

MONEY IN AMERICAN ART

The Worcester (Mass.) art museum has just paid $30,000 for a sea painting by Winslow Homer, a New England artist who died a few years ago. This price seems to establish a record for American landscape art. The most important thing about it, however, is the hope it holds out to American artists. It is proof that at last American art-lovers are recovering from their infatuation with old masters and foreign names, and are turning to a recognition of native art whose only claim is its merit.

There are other examples almost as striking as this. An Inness painting recently brought $24,000 at a public sale. An art museum has paid $20,000 for one of Blakelocks's landscapes. A Wyant picture has brought as high as $12,000. In none of these cases did the artist himself get more than a small fraction of the final selling price; but the gratifying thing about it is the comparatively short time it has taken for their work to obtain recognition and command a high figure in the market. We may soon arrive at a state of public appreciation that will enable a first-class American artist to get, immediately, somewhere near what his product is worth, instead of having to peddle masterpieces for a pittance while old, careless work done by foreign masters in their immaturity brings a huge price.

There is a vast amount of artistic talent in America, and it is just beginning to find its true expression. American art may dominate the world's art in a generation or two, if our artists remain true to their inspiration, portraying American life in the American spirit instead of merely imitating foreigners—and if American patrons give them the necessary financial encouragement.

There are some people who ought to be glad they have now merely a thinking part in the war on dirt—waged by the Chamber of Commerce—thinking being dangerous only to the dirt.

ONLY FOUR WEEKS AWAY

The Republican National Convention will be in full swing a month from today, and while very much may happen in politics in this country in a month, it now seems quite doubtful whether there will be greater certainty as to the nominee at the opening of the convention than there is now. So far as known now, not a single candidate is within hundreds of delegates of victory. There will be at least a dozen candidates on the first ballot, perhaps more than that, for a number of "favorite sons" will be sprung in with the idea that in a big field some of the dark horses may turn up as winners through compromise or for other reasons. There are some indications that an attempt will be made to stampede the convention for Roosevelt, but on the other hand comes the assurance that the convention will be made up largely of men who have been in at least one and perhaps several national conventions in the past, and that they are not to be stampeded by noise or by manufactured enthusiasm.

The fact is, Roosevelt sentiment appears to be on the wane. The failures in California, Montana and Massachusetts to show a big following for the Colonel in the primaries, seems to have taken some of the "tang" out of the Colonel's sails. His constant harping upon himself, and his very short-sighted attacks upon the Wilson administration have driven from his support thousands of former admirers. The voters are becoming tired of his constant complaining, as well as of the assumption that he is the only man in the country in whom there is sufficient wisdom to permit him to stand as the executive of the country. Also, there is increasing fear that the third term issue would turn thousands from Roosevelt in every State, and it is known that the Democrats have plenty of ammunition on this issue, as a great many of the Republican speakers and papers in 1912 were not at all careful about attacking the Progressive candidate upon that line. To republish these utterances in a campaign this year would be to throw confusion into the enemy's camp.

There are some reasons for thinking at this time that the nomination lies between Root and Hughes. Were either one eliminated from the field, there is strong probability that the other would be nominated.

In the event of the election of the Republican candidate, there is no doubt which of all the suggested candidates would make the ablest President. Elihu Root is head and shoulders above any of those mentioned as competitors in the Republican convention. It is not just sure, however, that the convention will be guided by a desire to secure as a candidate the ablest man. The thing that seems to be uppermost is to name the strongest man, and so they are turning their attention to Hughes for the simple fact that he is an unknown quantity and that some strength appears to attach itself to him because no one knows of anything of great moment that he has done, or of any high stand that he has taken upon the present questions of the day. Hughes made his reputation as a sharp lawyer in an investigation, very much as Whitman made his reputation in some criminal trials. He was elected Governor because he had come before the public in uncovering a lot of fraud, and he picked a couple of catchy issues. He made a raid on race-track gambling, which was the least of a number of evils affecting our social life as a State, and he bucked the machine in favor of direct primaries, which have turned out to be the most effective handmaid a political boss or a machine ever had. He was mighty glad to get away on the Supreme Court bench when the appointment was offered him, and he has made no brilliant record in that distinguished place.

But it is between these two, Root and Hughes, that the nomination appears to stand, judging the situation from the outlook four weeks in advance. "Big business," "special interests" and great corporations are ranging themselves behind the Root movement.—Utica Observer.

Are You Ready to Play Your Part?

THE power of a nation in time of need is the producing power of her industries.

America must find out what this producing power is and then develop it. The capacity of every plant must be gauged. The ability of every man must be known. For War is Mechanical. It is Electrical. It is Chemical. It is Mining, Manufacturing, Transportation. It is EVERY phase of Engineering fused into a single industry—

"THE NATION'S DEFENSE."

Thirty thousand Engineers today are serving YOUR COUNTRY without pay. They are making a survey of YOUR COUNTRY'S Industrial Resources. They are helping YOUR COUNTRY to FIND ITSELF ---and You! They are charting the channels of commerce. Sounding each source of supply. So that, should the Day break when War must come—

YOUR ARMIES in the field will be but the crest of a Wave of Industry, as wide as the American Continent and as deep as the American Soul.

That YOUR COUNTRY may know what the Engineers are doing, the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World have pledged their services to the President of the United States. And this advertisement, published free by this paper, is part of a nation-wide series to secure YOUR co-operation with the Engineers.

"WHAT CAN I DO?"

This is, doubtless, the question you are asking yourself. Here is the answer: If you are a manufacturer co-operate fully with the Engineers so they can do their job quickly and efficiently; if you are a working man help your employer to help the Engineers and be prepared, if so needed, to be a Soldier in Industry, behind the firing line, which is just as important as being a soldier on the firing line; if you are a business man or a professional man, or whoever you are, help mobilize "GOOD WILL" behind this patriotic task of the Engineers in behalf of National Defense and International Peace.

Opinions

TRIBUNE URGES T. R.'S NOMINATION

The Tribune believes Col. Roosevelt should be nominated. It now finds its readers in overwhelming agreement with its own conviction. The platform on which it believes the next Republican nominee should stand was not made for it. The Tribune has steadily affirmed its faith and its purposes. It accepts Colonel Roosevelt as its candidate because it finds him in accord with its views on the main issues. It accepts him not because of what he did in 1904 or in 1908; it accepts him in spite of what he did in 1912, because it believes that in 1916 he best represents a sturdy, courageous Americanism, which has been and must continue to be the basis of our national existence.

Other men may perhaps decide hereafter to adopt the principles now advocated by Colonel Roosevelt, but in all the storm and passion of the recent months, when nearly every man in public life thought first of votes and only last of principles, Colonel Roosevelt has stood squarely by the principles and let the votes go hang. He has written most of all that the next Republican platform must contain.

The Tribune believes he is the man who should stand on that platform, and it finds new strength for its conviction in the vote of its readers.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST

The raising of the price of coal to pay the increased wages of the miners in the anthracite fields is another illustration of how the public, the innocent bystander, gets hit in these industrial wars. In an article in the "New Republic," Professor Ripley points out that while the people pay the freight, the public is almost wholly unrepresented in negotiations looking to a settlement of such disputes. The interest to the public is not less than that of the miners or the mine owners, or of the carriers and railroad brotherhoods, and is only the innocent third party who pays the bill. It should have both the right and the ability to say how such disputes shall be settled by the orderly means appropriate to a civilized community. It should be a party to the settlement to guard its interests. Take it in the case of railroads, which are public carriers, it is ridiculous that a row between the employers and the employes should paralyze the whole transportation system of the country and stop all business and all comfort and convenience of the public. Professor Ripley says that the obligation to serve the public, "so long dictated to the railroads, must now be brought home to their employes as well, just as it rests upon the army and navy or the postal service. Professor Ripley asks if it is not about time for an administrative wage commission with power to deal with controversies authoritatively. His suggestion should command respectful consideration. They do these things better in France, where employes of railroads are in the government service and enlisted as in the army. When the railroad telegraphers threatened to strike and tie up the railroad service, as they are now doing in this country, they were ordered to the colors and assigned to telegraphic duty. To disobey would be like disobeying a military order and bring its penalties and the strike was quickly disposed of. Professor Ripley says that wages and rates should be coordinated. A wage commission properly constituted could perform this work in a way calculated to bring industrial peace as far as the railroads are concerned. That might lead, however, to government ownership of railroads and under present industrial conditions, perhaps that is the only solution for the protection of the public's right to open and free transportation facilities.—Watertown Times.

IRISH REVOLT STIRS ENGLAND

How Casement Planned to Land Arms For Rebels.

NOW IN TOWER OF LONDON

Arrest on Charge of Being a Traitor Did Not Come as Surprise, For He Had Always Shown Animosity Toward England—Climax of Remarkable Career.

The recent revolutionary uprisings in Ireland, while not altogether a surprise, have proved one of the most interesting developments of England's part in the European war.

The arrest of Sir Roger Casement on the charge of being a traitor caused little surprise, but the sensational manner in which it occurred stirred the entire world.

Sir Roger, under a military guard, is occupying the same apartment in the Tower of London in which Karl Lody, the German spy who was executed in the early part of the war, spent the night before his execution.

Lody was arrested in Killarney. On April 14, when it was stated that Sir Roger had been arrested in Germany, he was actually aboard a German submarine in Kiel harbor, which, in company with a harmless looking tramp steamer of comparatively small tonnage, flying the Dutch colors, set out upon the voyage which ended in west Ireland ten days later.

20,000 Rifles Aboard.

The tramp was a German vessel manned by twenty picked men of the German navy and commanded by a lieutenant, with a junior officer as second in command. Its cargo was not of the innocent character described by its forged manifest, but consisted of about 20,000 rifles, machine guns and ammunition hidden beneath a layer of goods which the manifest declared as the vessel's sole cargo.

The tramp steamship, with the submarine generally close by, crept through the Gattegat, up along the coast of Norway, always keeping within territorial waters. The journey was made at a leisurely pace. Both vessels struck north and west on a course which left the Orkney islands, the Shetland islands and even the Faroe islands, far to the south.

But a British patrol boat bustled up suddenly and demanded the reason for the presence of a peaceful Dutch trader so far north. The Germans pleaded the perils from mines and submarines in the English channel as an explanation and produced the ship's papers, all of which were in perfect order.

There was nothing warlike about the ship, and of course there was no sign of the convoying submarine, which submerged when the British patrol was sighted. Even the tramp's crew was not suspicious looking. Many spoke English, expressing sympathy for the allied cause and the hope that they would not meet a ruthless U boat.

The vessel was allowed to proceed. Once the British patrol boat had disappeared the tramp steamer's course was shaped southward, and before long north Ireland was sighted. Again the pace was leisurely. The "Dutchman" kept close to the coast.

Suddenly another British patrol boat appeared. A shot was fired across the tramp steamer's bows, and the peremptory signal "I am boarding you" was hoisted. Then the tramp was ordered to accompany the patrol. After some distance had been covered the patrol sent armed boats for the crew. The "Dutch" crew then confessed that they were German navy men. Their ship, which they had just scuttled, was a small auxiliary of the kaiser's fleet intent upon running guns to Ireland.

A boat which did not belong to the sunken vessel also was found. It was a collapsible of the pattern carried by German submarines. In it were two men, one of whom admitted that he was Sir Roger Casement. He and his companion, two officers and twenty men of the crew of the auxiliary were made prisoners.

Sir Roger was promptly landed and sent to London. The others were treated as ordinary prisoners of war.

Climax of a Remarkable Career.

This latest and perhaps final adventure of Sir Roger Casement is an amazing climax of the persistent efforts of this Irishman since the war began against the country which he had served as consul and consul general for eighteen years and which had honored him with knighthood.

Previous to the opening of the great conflict in Europe Sir Roger was known to the world at large only through a report which he made in 1912, while consul general at Rio Janeiro, on the atrocities committed on natives by employees of a British company operating in the Putumayo rubber fields. As a result of his report a British royal commission, headed by him, investigated the situation and brought about reforms in the treatment of men employed in the industry.

Sir Roger was in America when the European war began in August, 1914. While here he addressed on Sept. 17 an open letter to the Irish press, in which he advised Irishmen to remain neutral, while he would see to it that the country did not suffer the fate of Belgium.

"DESERT STUFF" UNPOPULAR WITH PATHE PLAYERS.

Jose's "Light That Failed" Company Nearly Perish From Cold on "Burning Desert Sands."

A certain beautiful and popular song is built around the theme "till the sands of the desert grow cold." The burning love that vowed to endure until such an unheard of and unexpected calamity occurred would have met an untimely end had it been exposed to the biting winds that swept over the "Sahara Desert" location which producer Edward Jose and his Pathe players found on Fayerweather's Island off the city of Bridgeport, Conn., recently. Kipling, when he wrote "The Light That Failed," which Mr. Jose is now putting into a Pathe Gold Rooster Play, little reckoned when he placed his characters in the blistering heat of a Hades-like desert of the troubles he was causing an earnest, able and artistic director anxious to get his picture full of real atmosphere. But it was so, and old Boreas of the nasty disposition kicked out Aeolus, Zephyrus, and all the rest of that gentle mythological crew and set out to do his darndest. He succeeded.

The stately caravan of shivering Arabs, British soldiers, camels and horses moved across the sands under the eagle eye of Mr. Jose, which eagle eye was shedding tears under the promptings of the heartless gale.

"Remember, men," shouted the producer, "you are fairly shrivelling from intense heat! You are parched, exhausted and dripping with perspiration. You must register all that!"

Frozen fingers sought for handkerchiefs and mopped brows that were blue with cold. The man who touched his icy rifle barrel once with his bare hand showed a surprising reluctance to do it again. The "ships of the desert" ploughed through the sand as stiff-legged as so many automatic toys, squealing with protest.

It came time for a "close-up" of Robert Edeson. The camera was planted and the miserable leading man placed himself in front of it. "Mr. Edeson," said Mr. Jose from between his teeth, which chattered like castanets, "you are in the throes of mental agony——" "Quite right," interpolated Mr. Edeson very feelingly. "You must register that," continued Mr. Jose, "and hold it until I give the word."

The cameraman turned. From Mr. Edeson's lips as he breathed issued jets of steam like vapor, a tribute to the potency of friend Boreas.

"Heaven!" said Mr. Jose, "this will never do in a desert scene! Mr. Edeson, you must hold your breath."

And so Robert Edeson registered mental agony and held his breath while the cameraman turned and turned, until his face became as purple as an Egyptian sunset.

"Say, friends," said Mr. Jose, "we'll finish this desert stuff in Nogales, Arizona!"

FARM LANDS OF NATION ARE INCREASING IN VALUE

Five Dollars Per Acre Added During the Past Twelve Months.

The value of farm lands of the United states, without improvement, is estimated at $45.55 per acre, as compared with $40.85 a year ago, $40.31 two years ago, $38.10 three years ago and $36.23 four years ago. The census reported the value of farm lands in 1910 as $32.40, and in 1900 as $15.57 per acre.

In recent years the value of farm lands has been increasing at the rate of about 5 per cent a year, or approximately $2 per acre per year. The exceptional increase of the past year may be explained partly by the reaction in the southern cotton states following a temporary depression last year and partly by the stimulus given by the war to prices, particularly of grain.

Increases have been general throughout the United States, the only noteworthy exceptions being orchard lands and some irrigated lands in the northwest, which apparently had been overvalued before.

The percentage increases in value of farm lands in the past year by sections of the United States are: North Atlantic states, 10 per cent; eastern part of north central states, 9 per cent; western part of north central states, 12 per cent; south Atlantic states, 19 per cent; south central states, 11 per cent; far western states, 11 per cent; entire United States, 11.5 per cent.

The percentage increases in farm land values in four years—that is, since 1912, are: North Atlantic states, 17 per cent; eastern part of north central states, 20 per cent; western part of north central states, 28 per cent; south Atlantic states, 23 per cent; south central states, 25 per cent; far western states, 34 per cent; entire United States, 25.7 per cent.

These estimates are based upon reports from crop reporters of the bureau of crop estimates of the department of agriculture.

The Man With the Iron Mask.

"The Man With the Iron Mask" was a mysterious French prisoner of state, whose identity has never been satisfactorily established. He was closely confined under the charge of M. de St. Mars at Pignerol in 1679, at Exiles in 1681, at St. Marguerite in 1687 and finally was transferred to the Bastile in 1698, where he died on Nov. 19, 1703, and was buried the following day in the cemetery of St. Paul under the name of Marchiali. Dumas made him a twin brother of Louis XIV.

Days You'll Never Forget

PEARL WHITE'S MARVELOUS "IRON CLAW" WARDROBE

Costumes Worn by Her in This Thrilling Serial Cost the Pathe Producers $25,000, a Record Sum Even in the Munificent Movies.

Even Will Shakespeare, in the first dim years of the drama's development, realized the fundamental theatrical principle that little can be done "without a make-up," and he was, possibly, the first manager to take advantage of the popular appeal of elegance in stage attire.

Handbills announcing the premier performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," at the old Globe Theatre, told of "a greate companie of player folk caparisoned with muche splendoure." Years later Edwin Booth set all London marvelling by appearing in "Richelieu," wearing a cloak which cost "one hundred guineas."

Since then theatrical managers the world over have vied with each other in the production of attractions, calculated, in the words of their press agents, to "eclipse all former offerings in magnificence of properties and splendor of costumes." It has, however, remained for the moving picture producer to set the high mark of expenditure for stage "finery," and a glimpse into the wardrobes of many of the American film favorites would make the most carefully frilled and furbellowed society leader green with envy.

The question as to how much the management of a film producing concern is willing to spend on her clothes is one of the first considerations of the popular screen star who is asked to sign a contract, and before she agrees to lend her art to any production she must be shown that the gowns will be sufficiently numerous and "right up to the minute" in style. The first week or two of her engagement will be occupied with running up a bill of anywhere from $2,500 to $10,000 with some exclusive modiste. The amount will vary in accordance to the length of the film play in which she is to appear. When she is to appear in a serial photoplay the amount is often much greater.

Miss Pearl White, the daring heroine of "The Perils of Pauline," and "The Exploits of Elaine," who is now starring in "The Iron Claw," a new and even more thrilling Pathe serial, has been equipped with no less than thirty-four gowns, thirteen suits, eleven cloaks and coats, innumerable hats and other accessories costing the Pathe Company $25,000, a record sum even in these days of extravagantly produced screen plays. Miss White declares she will do better work in "The Iron Claw" than in any of her previous successes. "To be well dressed is half the battle," she says, "and I know I can take care of the other half."

One of the most striking of Miss White's gowns is one of sapphire blue sequin on shaded green and blue chiffon, bound at the edges with silver ribbon and trimmed with small silver balls. The skirt is of sequin, finished with an eight-inch flounce of blue net and hemstitched in silver. The bodice is of sequin with draped tulle sleeves. This creation cost $1,000, and while wearing it Miss White is required to struggle with the villain down a flight of stairs.

Another sartorial triumph is an afternoon gown of dark blue Georgette crepe trimmed with ruffles of old blue taffeta and dark blue ribbon. French rosettes of dark blue and silver tassels provide a further trimming for the bodice which has a deep white chiffon collar, trimmed with Krimmer fur.

A sapphire blue chiffon velvet evening coat, worn by the peerless Pathe star in another episode, should make the fair members of the audience gasp at its gorgeousness. It is trimmed with solid gold ornaments set with jet. Another masterpiece of the modiste is a Russian dark blue chiffon velvet suit with a cape edged with Krimmer fur and collar and cuffs of the same material. There are fifty or more gowns, cloaks and whatnots to describe which would take up columns of space. "The Iron Claw" is the most sensational fashion show ever staged.

Some of the costumes are worn by Miss White only in one scene. After the camera handle has been turned on them for a few minutes they have served their purpose as far as the Pathe Company is concerned, and before long will probably find their way into the auction room or second-hand store.

TRULY PROTEAN, SHE PUTS OVER "HIGH LADY STUFF"

"Waddyemean, drawing-room experience," said the director of whom Jackie Saunders, "The Maude Adams of the Screen," first applied for a job. Jackie hadn't ever posed for a picture before, but she'd seen many and had made a mental decision that the most difficult part of the screen work to negotiate was the society stuff. Now Jackie hadn't ever mixed with the 400, but she had posed for artists, so her "drawing-room experience" was a reality. When the director found what her "drawing-room experience" had been, he took a chance on the girl's native keenness to supplement her good looks and forthwith hired her. This incident was brought strongly to mind by the title of Miss Saunders' latest picture, "The Girl Who Won," a three-reeler released on the Pathe Program.

"WHAT'S WHAT IN STYLE," ACCORDING TO ANNA NILSSON

It is expected that the gowns worn by Anna Nilsson in Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series will make much food for conversation among the ladies who view the film throughout the country. A well-known firm of modistes has gone to the limit of their resources in making these creations for the star and they are the very last word—le dernier cri—of what's what in style. In each episode she appears in a new set of frocks, all of which will set the feminine heart flutter.

Warming Gold Dishes.

Castle Kilkenny is one of the oldest inhabited dwellings in the world, some of the rooms being 800 years old. Among its ancient treasures is a service of gold plate. Besides the ordinary plate service, Castle Kilkenny has the whole series of gold cups used at coronation banquets down to the time of George IV. The gold of the service plates is almost without alloy, consequently very soft and easily marred. Hence the plates are warmed and presumably also washed after use by being dipped into hot water held by a pair of tongs whose tips have been muffled in chamois leather.—London Globe.

CHARM OF BIOGRAPHY.

It Leads the Reader Into Quaint and Delightful Byways.

Reading biography will furnish you with a peculiar and rare form of entertainment, for besides the subject in hand biography legitimately treats of the foibles, the fashions and the peculiarities of the age with which it deals, says Youth's Companion. History, although it may have its lighter moments, is essentially sober, but biography, although it is never merely farcical or satirical, may touch vividly upon the lighter phases of life and take you, as it were, into quaint and delightful byways, through private parks and into remote and lovely fields.

"Indeed," wrote Boswell in his introduction to his famous biography, "I cannot conceive a more perfect mode of writing any man's life than by not only relating the most important events of it in their order, but by interweaving what he privately wrote and said and thought, by which mankind are enabled, as it were, to see him live and to live o'er each scene with him as he actually advanced through the several stages of his life."

Biography, treated in that manner, must inevitably include much that is delightfully diverting. It will give you "the table talk of the great;" it will recount those fascinating little incidents and anecdotes that history so often regards as beneath its notice. It will afford far more than a running account of a life, "beginning with a pedigree and ending with a funeral."

CONTRASTS IN ICELAND.

A Curious Land of Fire and Ice, of Volcanoes and Glaciers.

Iceland is known as a "land of contrasts." The land of Iceland boasts in comparatively small compass fire and ice, volcanoes, glaciers and geysers. There is magnificent scenery in its desolate plateaus. It has more than 100 volcanoes, of which the largest is Hecla, 5,100 feet high. There are thousands of craters in Iceland, the chief among them being Askya, with an area of thirty-four square miles.

Of glaciers there are more than 120, with aggregate areas of about 5,200 square miles. The largest is Vatna. Not far from Hecla is the so called geyser region, where there are many hot springs. The Great Geyser is sixty feet in diameter. One geyser was found to have water at a temperature of 262 degrees F., which makes it possibly the hottest spring in the world. One-eighth of Iceland is glacier hidden, and there are ice clad mountain domes, of which the highest is Oraetajokull, 6,424 feet.

There are not many settlements in Iceland. The capital is Reykjavik, with a population of 11,600, and after that the two chief towns are Akureyi, 2,089, and Isafiord, 1,859 inhabitants. The people of Iceland are described as unusually intelligent, and one authority states that "perhaps in no other country of Europe are so many books in proportion to the population printed and sold as in Iceland."

DIPLOMACY COLLEGE COURSE.

Eighty Universities to Give Lectures on International Relations.

Eighty universities, colleges and normal schools in the United States will co-operate with the division of intercourse and education of the Carnegie endowment for international peace by offering during their summer sessions courses on international law, international relations, American diplomacy and Spanish and Latin American affairs. The Carnegie endowment, acting through the American Association For International Conciliation, will supply the instructors in some cases or will grant allotments to defray part of their salaries in others.

The subjects are to be offered as part of the regular college curriculum and are to be given by experts.

The work was offered in about seventy-five institutions last year, and the total enrollment was approximately 2,000. The object of the work, successfully carried on in 1915, is to spread a wider and more accurate knowledge of international polity and international relations.

FRIVOLS $1,000,000 A DAY.

That's What New York Does, Upstate Rector Says He's Heard.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, rector of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church of Rochester, N. Y., at the special meeting of the convention of the national campaign of the laymen's missionary movement in New York city said that a recent estimate placed the daily amount spent in dissipation in New York city at $1,000,000 and that moving pictures cost the nation $500,000,000 a year.

"Our religion is not costing us enough," he declared. "We give to God a part of what we have left after we have amply provided for ourselves."

EGG OF PET PARROT.

After Much Treatment Opal Finally Lays One.

Riverside, Cal.—The hurried administration of red pepper pills under the orders of a veterinarian and the hurried application of hot flannel cloths and other family remedies, all designed to save the life of Opal, the pet white parrot at the Mission inn, occasioned great excitement among the patrons of that hostelry.

Frank A. Miller, master of the inn, took personal care of the bird, which was found to be writhing in seeming paroxisms of pain and making the air vocal with squawkings. After submitting to the sympathetic treatment of its friends for a time the bird calmly laid an egg, Opal's first achievement along this line, although she is twenty years old.

ABLE TO SHOE HORSE AT 90.

Aged Blacksmith Kept Vow Made Years Ago.

Parnell, Mo.—Josiah Collins of this place celebrated his ninetieth birthday recently, and to keep a vow that he had frequently made, he went to the blacksmith shop on his anniversary and shod a horse.

Mr. Collins, who is a native of Ohio, began his trade when he was nineteen years old. He has followed the blacksmithing business all his life and has often declared that, if he lived, he would shoe a horse or mule on his ninetieth birthday, no matter how unruly the animal might be. He kept his vow and was much pleased again to perform the familiar task.

A Street Car Miracle

The baby laughed—and through the car
  Of dull eyed folk at the nightfall weary
The little silver ripple ran,
  And in its wake the smiles began
  Like sunshine over waters dreary.

The baby laughed—and shoulders bent
  'Neath weight of toil and trouble tragic
Straightened with motion swift and strong
As if that burden, carried long,
  Had lifted been by merry magic.

The baby laughed—and one who came
  As slumber stilled that music's ringing
Looked wondering down the crowded car,
"How brave, how kind these faces are,"
  He thought, with hope and faith upspringing.

HAROLD LLOYD

"Lonesome Luke," of the Pathe Comedy Series, Has the Missouri Mania—Must Be "Shown."

Harold Lloyd, the "Lonesome Luke" of Pathe's Lonesome Luke comedies, produced by the Rolin Film Co., is a scoffer and a disbeliever in the old adages. Nothing makes Harold madder than "a-penny-saved-is-a-penny-earned-start-at-the-bottom-and-work-up" stuff. To prove his point that the man who starts at the bottom of the ladder invariably does it because he hasn't brains enough to take the elevator, he tells the following story to young hopefuls who set out to conquer the world with nothing but persistency: "Ah, yes, perseverance is a great thing! A wonderful thing! Why, ten years ago I knew a man who hadn't a cent to his name. He hadn't even any particular talent or training, but he was persistent and said he would persevere till he made his pile. So he started out by gathering up old bones. He found there were more bones to be gathered than he could hold without the aid of some container, so he went to a basket-maker in the city, told his story and got a basket on credit. Then he went about his business again gathering up old bones. Today that man is worth—well, what do you think he's worth today?" Here the aspiring one's eyes usually gleam and he stutters something to this effect: "Oh, I don't know—millions, I suppose." "Not at all," says Lloyd; "he still owes for the basket!"

DAMAGE CLAIMS ARE SCRUTENIZED

State Officials Here to Acquaint Themselves With Conditions Affecting Battle Island and Other Claims.

State officials were here today, coming from Phoenix and going on through to Oswego, on a tour of inspection connected with the claim of the Battle Island Paper Company against the state in an action for $1,187,000 damages. This is believed to be necessary in order to sift the many claims for damages presented the Court of Claims arising from the construction of the Barge Canal. The party included Frank M. Williams, state engineer; E. E. Woodbury, attorney-general, and Major-General W. W. Wotherspoon, state superintendent of public works, constituting a committee from the Canal Board; Judges Ackerson and Fennel of the Court of Claims; Cary D. Davis and Edward J. Mone, deputies attorney-general; D. B. Ladu, special deputy state engineer, and Richard E. Phillips, engineer of claims.

Richard E. Phillips, representing the State Engineer in the Battle Island case, announced yesterday in Rochester that the state officials are anxious to see for themselves the source of the many claims against the state.

An argument of the Battle Island claim was concluded yesterday before Juge Fennel, presiding alone in the Court of Claims. As at the previous day's session, argument revolved afound the wattmeter upon which the state bases some of its most important evidence.

Counsel for the claimants centered all their efforts upon that phase of the action, and through the efforts of Charles E. Spencer, of counsel for the paper company, were able to re-open the water power question to such an extent that the case was not finally closed until late yesterday afternoon.

The claimants sought to show that during the period the wattmeter was in operation the production of pulp in the sulphide mill was curtailed, thus accounting for a decrease in the use of power at that time. In the same connection they introduced evidence to show that during a period of two months in 1913, the Battle Island Paper Company bought power from the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company.

At least a month will be consumed in the preparation of briefs. Final argument of the case may not take place for several months.

SOMEBODY'S BRINDLE ACCUSED OF BADNESS

James W. iPtcher, a Civil War veteran, was attacked by a neighbor's dog Tuesday night near his home, 455 S. 1st st. The dog leaped for Mr. Pitcher as he was walking down the street. In attempting to ward off the dog Mr. Pitcher extened his arm and the dog fastened its teeth in Mr. Pitcher's hand.

For the last few weeks there have been any number of happenings of a similar nature in the city, some of these attacks being traced to the brindle bull pup which was brought here on the cowcatcher of a train from Oswego. The strange dog has already killed one dog and attacked a number of others and so far as is known is still at large in the city.

I. O. O. F. PROPOSE TO MAKE IMPROVEMENTS

Plans were discussed last night by the Odd Fellows for making extensive improvements to the temple in Oneida st., in the near future. Particular attention is to be paid to the exterior of the building. The east porch it is proposed to tear down and a new one erected to extend the entire front of the building.

FATHER AUSTIN WAS ELOQUENT

Women Formed Last Night's Audience---Upper and Lower Church Open Tonight for Women Exclusively.

"The Mercy of God" was the theme of the sermon of Father Tustin, O. M. C., at the mission services under the direction of the Fransican Order at the Church of the Immaculate Conception last night. The services this week are for women only, and the mission is being attended with interest not only by Catholics of the city, but by many members of other denominations.

The services tonight will be held both in the lower and upper church. Father Austin will preach to the unmarried women in the lower church and Father Stephen will deliver the sermon in the upper church, which will be reserved for married women.

Tomorrow night Father Stephen will deliver a sermon on The Passion, and a large attendance is expected, as this sermon is one of his strongest appeals.

Saturday night a service for women and school children will be held, which will consist of a dedication to the Virgin Mary, the recitation of the Rosary, and a short instruction which will be followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament and congregational singing.

Father Stephen will preach the sermon at the high mass Sunday morning, which will mark the opening of the mission for men, to continue throughout next week. A special mass for the working men will be read at 5 o'clock every morning. This service will conclude at 5.45, affording the men plenty of time to go to their work on time. There will be a sermon and instruction each evening, and confessions will be heard in the morning and evening. A special invitation is extended to non-Catholics of both sexes to attend the mission services.

NURSES OF THREE CITIES WILL VISIT TABERNACLE

THE QUIRK TODAY

"The Question," the next release of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, comes to The Quirk today, when patrons will have their first opportunity of seeing Marguerite Leslie in a celluloid role.

Miss Leslie, perhaps the most charming and dignified of all Europe's stage favorits, and recently seen as leading woman for Sir Henry Irving and Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, was induced to enter filmland through Roy L. McCardell, author of "The Question." The story in itself deals with the efforts of women of culture and refinement to avoid becoming mothers. Miss Leslie plays the part of the frivolous girl who prefers her poodle to a baby. She is surrounded by a superb cast of supporting players. The picture was visualized by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation under the suspices of Director Harry Handworth. It is in five parts and contains sufficient dramatic material for a much longer film play.

Appropriate.

The worshipers in a certain chapel had some trouble to keep their faces straight a short time ago. During the service some commotion was caused by a gentleman who accidentally ignited a box of wax matches in his pocket and was trying to put them out, while his alarmed neighbors struggled equally hard to help him. The minister, being shortsighted, could not make out the reason of the disturbance, and, thinking diplomatically to cover the incident, he innocently said: "Brethren, there is a little noise going on. Until it is over let us sing 'Sometimes a Light Surprises.'"—London Answers.

ITALIAN YOUTH STOLE AND SOLD IRON PIPE

Philip Ryan, a young Italian lad, living on the West Side, was arrested this morning charged with stealing a piece of pipe from the premises of Mrs. Kitty Jones, of West 2nd street. Young Ryan sold the pipe yesterday afternoon to Dan York, the West First street junkman.

Although the boy's parents are good clean people, he has been connected with several questionable deals in the past few years, and has served a short term in an institution.

When arraigned this morning, young Ryan was properly penitent, and asked for time to repay Mrs. Jones for the pipe. Chief Dyer ordered him to go to York's shop and get the pipe, then hire a plumber to install it in its former place.

The boy has no job at present, and Judge Wilson advised him to get work at once, or he would be committed to an institution.

Miss Kennedy is very well known in this city, and practiced as a trained nurse here for several years. For the past few years she has made her home in Buffalo. Mr. Edgerton is a prosperous lumberman. Mr. and Mrs. Edgerton will live at Lawton Station, which is a suburb of Buffalo.

THE QUIRK TO-DAY.

Stephen Orry, indolent ne'er-do-well, wins the love of Rachel, daughter of the Governor of Iceland. He marries her, and the irate governor disowns his daughter.

Their happiness is short lived. Stephen's mother turns him against his bride and he deserts her and stows away aboard a ship bound for the Isle of Man.

Years pass and Rachel dies, leaving a son, Jason, who, at his mother's deathbed, vows vengeance on his father. Meanwhile Stephen, in the Isle of Man, has married again and his son, "Sunlocks," is almost as old as Jason.

Jason makes his way to the Isle of Man where his father dies in his arms. Balked of his vengeance, he vows to kill "Sunlocks" who has gone to Iceland.

Jason loves Greebo, daughter of a Manx official. She however loves "Sunlocks." She follows him to Iceland and Jason follows both. Jason and "Sunlocks" are both condemined to the sulphur mines. Some strange attraction draws the unknown half-brothers together, and when a premature blast blinds "Sunlocks," Jason hoists him on his shoulder and carries him to the capital city.

Jason is declared free, but "Sunlocks," guilty of a more serious crime, is condemned to death.

Then Jason receives a terrible blow. He learns from Greeba that the man he had rescued from the mine is the hated "Sunlocks." Greeba in her extremity begs him to save her loved one, in supreme sacrifice. Jason substitutes himself for the condemned man, and with calm eyes and quiet heart faces the new dawn that is to be his last.

ABOUT THE TOWN

The Rowan Stars will meet the Red Men of this city on the Fair Grounds next Sunday afternoon. Some one bet a certain city official yesterday that the locals would not reach first base. That looks like easy money, as Feeley is going to pitch for the Rowans.

* * *

The Fulton delegation of Elks left last night to storm the heights of Peekskill. Nine members of the Fulton lodge will have a voice in the convention proceedings.

* * *

Frank Rumsey, superintendent of public works, stated yesterday that work on the Fremon street sewer is handicapped by lack of men. He says he can place about ten men on the job, and preference will be given to American citizens.

* * *

Under the caption, "George L. Pratt," the photograph of Edward Quirk, former Mayor of this city, appeared in the Syracuse Herald last night. The picture headed a story which announced the election of Mr. Pratt as president of the Peacock Men's Club. George Washburn, correspondent for the Herald, wishes to announce that he had nothing to do with the error.

* * *

Glancing through the city charter last night, we came upon several startling passages. Very few citizens, doubtless, are aware that it is against the law to sell gasoline after dark in this city, under penalty of a fine. This section was called to the attention of Mayor Lewis this morning, and he said insofar as he knew it had never been amended. The charter also states that no awning shall hang nearer than seven feet from the side-walk, and there are few in the city which comply with this rule.

In connection with the rejection of the application of Edward Van Amburg for permission to install a gasoline tank, there is nothing evident in the city charter which empowers the Board of Public Works to refuse such permission. The superintendent of the Board can regulate the storing of gasoline in quantities of more than one barrel, however.

Recently an out of town manufacturing company sought to engage the services of several men in this city through the medium of an advertisement in this paper, offering increased wages, and other inducements. A manufacturer in the same line in this city allowed the breadth of his mind and the depth of his heart by remonstrating against the publication of the advertisement, saying it would "take men out of town." The fact that the men might better themselves by the change never seemed to occur to him, nor did he offer to meet the wage scale of the out of town concern in order to keep his employes in this city. And still they talk about Russia!

WANTED!

MACHINISTS and HELPERS

DILTS MACHINE WORKS

HERE IS NEW POWER AVAILABLE FOR IMMEDIATE USE

6,000 Horse-Power, Water---Steam---Electric---Ready for the Manufacturer to Move His Plant in and Start Turning Out Goods

The scarcest thing in the manufacturing world today is new power. As many a man knows to his cost—the machinery market is stripped bare of power equipment, boilers, engines, and steam turbines—both new and second-hand.

Furthermore, the supply of coal and gas is diminishing and their cost is increasing. With electricity produced by water power the manufacturer is not concerned with coal strikes or delays in delivery of coal.

Fulton, N. Y., is located on the Great Falls of the Oswego River, 25 miles north of Syracuse and 10 miles south of Oswego. It is served by three important steam railroads and one electric railroad, also by the Barge Canal with water transportation to and from all points on the Great Lakes, the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Hudson River and Tidewater. Good factory sites—ideal labor market.

Over-night from New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Montreal and Boston.

Are you considering another Eastern factory? Let us send you details of our power facilities and our rates.

Close to your raw material market— in the heart of the Eastern selling area, plus cheap power, makes Fulton the practical city for your factory.

6,000 electric h. p. connected and ready for your factory. If your need more power, it can be provided by installing wheels and generators to utilize water now running over the dams.

DO YOU NEED POWER AND EQUIPMENT FOR SPECIAL WORK?

We will sell or lease one hydro-steam 1,800 h. p. electric plant located on the Barge Canal; also have available a new steam turbine plant, 2,300 h. p. capacity, located on private trestle switch from New York Central and N. Y., O. & W. Railroads. Both these plants fully developed electrically —good factory sites. Further information on request.

DRAFT MEASURE BEFORE COMMONS TODAY

London—The British Premier, Mr. Asquith, announced yesterday to an expectant Parliament that the government had at last agreed on the much disputed recruiting question and had decided to introduce a bill for immediate general military compulsion for the duration of the war.

The Premier claimed that the condition he had all along stipulated as the only justification for such a step—namely, general consent of the nation—had now been obtained, as proved by the speeches delivered in the House of Commons last week when a bill providing for the extension of military service was introduced by Mr. Walter Hume Long, President of the Local Government Board, and later was withdrawn.

Mr. Asquith added that the Ministers agreed that the needful men could not be obtained by the existing cachinery, but that they were available and could really be spared from the industries essential for the successful prosecution of the war. Having given interesting details of the nation's success in its prodigious effort in raising 5,000,000 men for the army and navy, the Premier expressed confidence that the bill proposed would still, once for all, thep rolonged controversy, and in a general statement of the war situation challenged the House to indicate if theg overnment had lost the country's confidence.

BRITISH FAILURES

Always in England you have the sense of these little men, these empty politicians, this eternal talk, the words that disguise the truth, these words of the men who told England that no enemy was in sight when the German army was already on the road and could be seen not alone from the watch tower but from the streets. These little men who fight among themselves for office and for influence, who cling to salaries and to prominence and answer each other with words that are as empty as the very ashes of Belgium's ruined cities. They cannot understand. Nothing of all that has happened since this terrible world tragedy began has affected them. They denied that it could come, they deny that it has come. Over there in France a million British are under arms. All over the world men of English race and tradition have responded to the call. There has been something of commanding splendor in the response of the men of Australia and Canada and South Africa. Never in the long story of British history have men died more splendidly or lived more nobly. But to show for it you have just the shambles and the shame of the failures. those unnecessary failures, the waste and the sacrifice; you have the loss of prestige, the decline of that tradition which since Waterloo has been the real force of the British Empire. The men who yesterday felt themselves competent to rule the world cannot manage England or Ireland or even Wales at the hour of supreme crisis.—New York Tribune.

GOOD HEALTH.

Guard your health as you would a priceless jewel. The first wealth is health. Sickness is poor sighted and cannot serve any one; it must husband its resources to live. A TRENCH WORKER

One of the Suffragists Who Helped In New York State.

"ASK FANNY LAWSON," IS SAID

Of the 200,000 Women Who Worked For Suffrage In New York In 1915 No More Than 1,000 Broke on to the Front Page.

The soap box orator and the suffrage leader get into the limelight and on the newspaper front page, but the canvasser and the volunteer worker have the good of the cause for their main reward. Yet the cause depends on the workers in the trenches for its success. In the New York state suffrage campaign in 1915 there were 200,000 women who worked for suffrage. Of these perhaps no more than 1,000 were known to the news headliner. The other 199,000, who canvassed the voters, ran meetings, worked overtime and went without their proper meals, didn't even appear in fine print at the foot of the column.

Among the suffrage trench soldiers of New York city Miss Fanny Lawson is widely known. "Ask Fanny Lawson" has grown to be a suffrage headquarters' stock phrase. And Fanny Lawson always knows. She knows every assembly, senatorial or congressional district by heart. No one ever stumps her on a suffrage question. What she doesn't know she finds out at once, and where she is needed most there she arrives "prompt as time," whether it is to climb tenement stairs and canvass voters' lists or to organize a meeting and drill a new squad of volunteer workers. She marshals hosts of canvassers as deftly and as quietly as if she were stirring a one egg drop cake in an immaculate kitchen or dusting the drawing room bric-a-brac. She may be found perched on a packing box eating a much overdue sandwich at almost any hour of the day or night or carrying a host of letters to the latest possible post, for every suffrage worker in New York city knows Miss Lawson will not quit her job until it is done.

The Wherefore.

"Flubdub's home seems badly neglected."

"Well, his wife is interested in prison reform, better roads, pure politics and clean plays."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

They Don't Like to.

"Why did she give up her lessons in painting on china?"

"Seems it was necessary to wash the dishes before you painted them. Now, you know, no girl is going to do that."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Masonic Bodies Will Attend Tabernacle

Next Wednesday night, May 17, has been set aside as Masonic night at the Tabernacle, and already arrangements are under way for having a monster turnout for the occasion. It is proposed to have the building on that night filled entirely by Masons and their friends. Hiram Lodge will combine with delegations from Oswego, Baldwinsville, Phoenix and Hannibal and march to the Tabernacle in a body.

May 19th, O. U. A. M. night will also see a large attendance at the Tabernacle. The Daughters of Liberty at a meeting last night made arrangements for marching with the Mechanics to the Tabernacle.

Last night's sermon was as follows:

The dance hall was assailed by the Evangelist to 2,200 women and girls last night.

Women have always occupied a very prominent place in the history of the world and the work of God. When God wanted someone to lead the children of Israel in song after their deliverance from bondage in Egypt, he selected Miriam, the sister of Moses. When God wanted someone to lead against the greatest curse this country ever looked upon—the curse of intemperance, he selected Frances E. Willard. When Jesus Christ was born to the world, God conferred upon woman the greatest honor that could be places upon her by permitting a woman to be the mother of the son of God.

We admire and respect womanhood in every sense of the term. We have crowned her queen of the home and of the church—and of the nation.

They talk about a woman's fear as thought it had a limit,
There's not a place in either earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whispered yes or no,
There's not a life or death or birth,
That has a feather's weight or worth,
Without a woman in it."

Unlimited Influence.

This reveals to us that God has given to women a very important place in the world. God has given to you the greatest opportunities that have been given to any individual, the opportunities to be shining lights in the world for God. Woman should live not simply for the pleasures of the world but she should live for the good of humanity. Your influence should be for God, should be for righteousness, temperance, and should be elevating to the people in general Woman should be the last person on earth to stoop to anything degrading because God has endowed you with honor above any other creature. A good woman is a blessing to the home, she is a blessing to her husband, and if she has no husband, she is a blessing to the home where she lives. She is a blessing to the community and she is a blessing to the kingdom of God. Her influence is helpful. I admire the refined woman—a woman of culture and refinement—one who stands for purity. Women who are rough in their manners and loud in their dress grate upon my nerves. A good woman looks after the spiritual side of our nature. She is not satisfied to develop the intellectual side of our nature but develops the spiritual side also. A good woman never compromises with the devil. She stands for her rights and is careful of her company.

The Higher Plane

Oftentimes women associate with men and walk down the street with men who have whisky on their breath. Men would not walk down the street with you if you had whiskey on your breath. They would not walk with you if you were smoking cigarettes. I have always had too much respect for Mrs. Peacock to walk down the street blowing cigarette or cigar smoke in her face. If you women would let men know you are not going to stand for these things it would be a mighty sight better for every person concerned. It is your business to life men up to a higher plane of living. Let them understand they must be gentlemen when in your presence. A good woman is careful of her company. When girls associate with ungodly, impure, profane and intemperate men—men who are of questionable characters, it will not be long before the tongues of the gossips will begin to wag about them. I know a girl in the South who was keeping company with a young lawyer who had a brilliant future before him. This girl was brought up an an aristocratic home, a college graduate, a girl of culture and refinement. She became engaged to this lawyer. Two weeks before the wedding was to occure, he went with a group of men to a summer resort on a drinking spree. He did not think this girl would know anything about it. After returning home, he came to call. She met him at the door and informed him she knew what had taken place. She said "You have disgraced me. You have disgraced my parents. You have trampled my good name in the dust. If you have no respect for me before we are married you will have no respect for me after we are married. This is where our ways part. Out of my home, out of my heart, out of my life forever." This girl had good sense. You should not marry a man to reform him. If a man wants you to reform him, inform him that you are not in the reforming business. Sometimes men take liberties with women they have no business to take. Because they are college graduates or have a little money or have a permanent position, they seem to imagine they are privileged characters. Some of the lowest characters this side of perdition are college graduates. Sometimes men who have money are degenerates. These things do not give a man license to do as he pleases. Let men understand that they must have a respect for every woman and that they must be gentlemen in order to associate with you.

Evils of the Dance

The dance has ruined more women than anything else. 80 per cent of the fall of women can be traced to the dance. Parlor dances, hall dances, moonlight dances, or any others kind of dance. Mr. Falker, a converted dancing master of Los Angeles, Cal., investigated the case of 200 fallen girls in the city of Los Angeles. This is what he found: 163 started on their downward course from the dancing school; 20 through drink; 10 wilful choice, and 7 abuse. This is the testimony not of a minister but of a converted dancing master. There are 500,00 fallen women in this country. 370,000 of them started on their downward course through the dance. This should be sufficient evidence to make every woman an enemy of the dance hall. Probably it doesn't hurt you but if it hurt some other person, then we ought to be willing to deny ourselves for the sake of others. Where do you find the best dancers in the world? In the places of impurity. This should be enough to keep women from engaging in such things. If men were compelled to dance by themselves and women by themselves you would kill every dance in this country. Why do not men dance with their own wives and why do not women dance with their own husbands when they go to dance. It is the other fellow's wife, the other fellow's daughter, the other fellow's sister they want to dance with. Some people say it is altogether different among the class I associate with. This is simply a fallacy. Oftentimes the higher up you get the more dangerous things become. And mothers sometimes send their daughters to hell. They push them out into the company of ungodly degenerates that have more money than brains. I would rather have my daughter marry a man without a penny who had a pure mind and a clean character than have to associate with those ungodly degenerates who have no respect for God or man. God expects you women to have high ideals. God expects you to hold up the standards of Jesus Christ. God never intended any woman to be a flirt. God expects you to have a good influence over all those with whom you associate. Women, keep the temple of God clean. Live pure lives. Honor God. Are you careful about your companions? Are you careful about your thoughts? Remember God expects you to be leaders in spiritual things.

DEVICE MAKES BOMBS HIT.

Range Finder For Air Craft Bought by Government After Tests.

The government, after tests by naval officers, has purchased the invention of a Philadelphia youth which will drop bombs accurately from an aeroplane.

The inventor is Alfred J. Erickson. He is nineteen. His father was working on the bomb dropping device when he died. The boy took up the problem, finally got a patent and brought the invention to the attention of the government. Tests made at Norfolk with a hydroaeroplane are said to have shown that bombs can be dropped within a radius of twelve feet.

The device adopts the idea of an automatic range finder for guns. In a frame before the face of the aviator is an indicator by which he can plot out any object in sight on the ground and time the release of the bomb.

North Tonawanda.—The problem of getting enough unskilled laborers is becoming serious for local manufacturers, lumber yard owners and contractors on construction work, despite the fact that the highest wages in the history of industry in the Tonawandas are being paid today. The only men available for this kind of work seem to be foreigners, and they are getting as high as $2.50 and $3 a day.

Watertown.—George W. Taylor and Thomas Rooney, two local plumbers, have just received a patent from the United States patent office on what is known as "bottle closures." The device is of rubber construction and is manufactured in various sizes so that it can be applied to any bottle or jar containing fluids. The rubber closure is a sort of a nipple which is placed over the bottle when the cap or cork has been removed. By squeezing the end of the nipple the rubber and small springs are relaxed allowing the fluid to be poured out. When the pressure is released the nipple closses and is perfectly air tight.

Sincere Regret.

A seedy looking individual in a West street saloon turned from the free lunch counter, where he had been helping himself most generously, and said to the barkeeper:

"Friend, can you trust me for a glass of beer till tomorrow?"

"No," said the barkeep.

"I am sorry to hear that," said the seedy one. "It seems kinder mean to eat the amount of free lunch I have and then not buy nothin'."—New York Globe.

Barnacles and Birds.

As a rule, the Scottish fishermen believe that the common ship's barnacle develops into a bird. How has this metamorphosis been so long held to be a fact, with no experience in its favor and all experience against it? It is so held not only in Scotland, but, for instance, in Jersey. It is not long since a Jersey parlor maid ran to her employer in much excitement with a barnacle in her hand. "Look, ma'am," she said: "it's off a ship, and it will soon change to a goose!"—London Mail.

TROOPS IN MEXICO FACE HARDSHIPS

Not a Murmur of Discontent Is Heard, However.

INDIAN SCOUTS AT WORK.

Ready to Search All the Mountains For Some Trace of the Outlaws—Efficiency of American Soldiers Leaves Vivid Impression on Mexicans—Some Are Friendly and Some Are Sullen.

As troop column succeeds troop column, horse, foot and guns, marching southward over the primitive trails of Chihuahua uplands and through the rambling towns and villages, it would appear as if the entire regular establishment of the United States land forces were being concentrated to encompass Francisco Villa and his brigand following, says a correspondent.

To the white troops and the black that have succeeded one another in the several phases of the man hunt has been added a force of Apache Indian scouts. These red men arrived at field headquarters the other day attired as are the white and the black, in the regulation olive drab of the United States army, uniform in garb as in purpose with the others of Uncle Sam's fighting men.

The Apaches appear to be intent upon performing their particular function in the broadly laid military scheme of General Pershing. Therein they differ not at all from the other units of the expeditionary force detailed to exact retribution for the Columbus atrocity.

As the most mobile of the troops are being thrust into the mountain gaps in every direction through which the fugitive fox of the Sierras might elude his pursuers all manner of rumors are flying over the face of the land.

Troops Impress Natives.

The strength and obvious efficiency of the American troops have left a profound impression upon the Mexicans. Not all of the Mexicans of northern Chihuahua are inclined to brand Villa for what he is, for many regard him with superstitious fear and awe. They know him for what he was.

Others, and these are many, who have suffered grievously in their peaceful pursuits by his indiscriminate forays look with relief, if not with sympathy, upon the advent of the foreign troops upon their soil. There might have been anxiety in the beginning, for the United States border is nearly 800 miles away, and these peacefully inclined farmers never travel far and know but vaguely of the nation to the northward. With the scrupulous observance of all the rights of the inhabitants of the territory over which our troops are operating and the unaccustomed sensation of security from all molestation accompanying the occupation of this section by the expeditionary forces, the Mexican farmers are daily growing more friendly.

Anti-American Propaganda.

That Villa and his lieutenants are carrying forward a carefully prepared propaganda, with the purpose of effecting a union of several factions to war upon the United States, is indicated by the rumors that are wafted abroad in guarded tones by a section of the population. There can be no effective resistance offered, however, so long as the Mexican government remains friendly, for the expedition, besides disintegrating at San Geronimo and Ojo Caliente the military organization of Villa, has been of immense educational value. All along the direct line of advance, at Casas Grandes, Galiena, El Valle, Las Cruces, Namiquipa and the lesser towns and villages, it was noted that the Mexicans regarded our troops with great respect. The attitude of these communities is indicative of the impressions left because of the scrupulous regard by the commanding general of the expedition for the national sensibilities of the people. At the same time the caliber of the troops—the superb condition of men, mounts and accouterments—was not without its effect in stimulating the general feeling of amity.

Like the mathematical calculation of gasoline and oil consumption by the indispensable truck trains is the measure of the troop and battery horses' endurance in the field. Infinite care is exercised at all times so that no trooper or fieldpiece may become ineffective, for without his mount and without a full complement of horses in a gun team the cavalryman and the artillery lose their worth in a field force. So also are the men being scrutinized by the surgeons and the food supply maintained at the requisite standard of quantity and quality in nutriment. So far from the supply base and with no other means than truck and wagon train, the maintenance of these supplies represents no inconsiderable phase of the operations.

Throughout the march, although they touched no water for twenty-five miles one day, not a murmur of discontent from any soldier because of hardships endured was heard and not a horse faltered in spite of the terrific strain. On the mountain summits, where the trail led sometimes, the rarefied air currents swept with such force on occasion as if to drive the uniformed horsemen from their precarious perch. Then only a few hours would intervene ere the mounts, with their riders, were picking their way on again.

A TERROR OF THE SEAS.

This Fish Resembles a Torpedo and Is Just as Dangerous.

His shape resembles a torpedo, and his attack too. Fishermen and bathers in seas where he is found regard him as almost as deadly as the torpedo and far more common in peaceful waters. Fishermen and fish alike are enemy to him, and he will attack with a ferocity surpassing even the shark. He's called the barracuda.

His body is long and round, and his head pointed. His wide mouth bristles with large, sharp teeth. There are more than a dozen varieties scattered over the oceans, all of them fierce and hungry.

Sometimes they grow to a length of six to eight feet. These giants are the ones dreaded by the fishermen. Even when they have him fast on the end of a hook and line he's a veritable load of dynamite and will attack and bite and snap at the hands that are hauling him in.

Fishermen have to guard against poisoned flesh in the barracuda. Sometimes the big fish eats a poisonous kind of fish, which in turn poisons its own flesh. The barracuda's bite is regarded as poisonous in itself, and the wounds caused by the giant fish's teeth become inflamed and infected.—Philadelphia North American.

SKETCHING MARK TWAIN.

Cartoonist Ward Found the Humorist an Impatient Subject.

Many of the difficulties experienced by the cartoonist are related by Leslie Ward in his volume, "Forty Years of 'Spy.'" He writes as follows with reference to America's great humorist:

"Mark Twain was another subject who came under the category of the 'walkers.' I had a good deal of difficulty in getting hold of him, but when I eventually caught him at his hotel I found him decidedly impatient.

"'Now you mustn't think I'm going to sit or stand for you,' he told me, 'for once I'm up I keep on the go.'

"The whole time I watched him he paced the room like a caged animal, smoking a very large calabash pipe and telling amusing stories. The great humorist wore a white flannel suit and told me in the course of conversation that he had a dress suit made all in white that he wore at dinner parties. He had just taken his honorary degree at Oxford, and he wanted to put his gown on, but I preferred to 'do' him in the more characteristic and widely known garb. He struck me as being a very sensitive man, whose nervous pacings during my interview were the result of a highly strung temperament. The only pacifying influence seemed to be his enormous pipe, which he never ceased to smoke."

Henry James' Style.

Stevenson spotted the unconscionable repetition of certain adjectives in "Roderick Hudson," but probably the most marked characteristic of Henry James' style was his passion for adverbs and adverbial clauses. He was the most adverbial of English writers. You will find more adverbs to the page than even in Meredith. And he had a quaint habit of putting the adverb before the verb when most writers would put it after. One of his ladies (the examples are taken at random) "thankfully felt," another "quite beautifully and tenderly smiled." And "after all" crops up all over the place. But one would not have these things altered; they were part of the man. One does object to them, however, in his imitators, who have learned the trick, but missed the spirit behind it.—London Chronicle.

World's Future Fish Supply.

The sea beats upon 26,000 miles of Alaska shore line, a distance greater than the circumference of the earth. All of that vast stretch of waters is teeming with the most edible fish on earth. Every bay is a harbor where these fish can be prepared for the markets of the world, and the greatest ships afloat can anchor in safety while taking on their cargo of food for the hungry of all climes. In a few years Alaskan fish will be famous wherever ships sail and men exchange the products of their toil. This is but one of Alaska's sources of wealth. — Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Who's the Public?

By F. A. MITCHEL

I was to write a scenario for a moving picture, having received an order from Forman, the editor of a large film manufacturing company, who had said to me:

"I want something up to date. People in these days are very restive under the chains of matrimony. Give me a play on this subject, and don't be squeamish about it."

I held a dialogue with my characters with a view to finding out their feelings, utilizing a fictitious audience as a sort of Greek chorus. This is what was evolved.

"Mrs. Trevelyan," I said to my leading lady, "you are the mother of a boy four years old, Reginald. Your husband is a spendthrift and is using up the family income, as you suspect, on other women. John Guilford, an old flame of yours and a splendid fellow, sympathizes with you. He would supply the deficiency caused by your husband's extravagance, but there is a barrier to his doing so in your having a husband."

"Kill him!" shouted a virago in the audience. (A virago is a masculine woman.)

"The husband?"

"Yes."

I ran my eye over the rows of filled seats for approval or disapproval, but got nothing definite.

"Is my boy Reginald to appear as one of the characters?" asked Mrs. Trevelyan.

"Well, yes. He is one of the elements of the scheme. I would much rather leave him out, for he will be the hardest character of all to handle."

"He would be much better off," cried the virago, "with a good man for a stepfather than his real defective father."

"Guilford," I said, "how do you feel about your part?"

"Am I to be the villain of the play?"

"No; you're to be the hero—I mean the leading gentleman."

"I like that! How the dickens do you expect me to make a hero of myself and at the same time make love to another man's wife?"

"I'll tell you what you do," said Mrs. Trevelyan. "Bring out in your play that my husband repents or turns out to be a good man after all."

"In that case," bristled Guilford, "where do I come in?"

Advancing toward my audience, I noticed a very ladylike woman with an impressive face sitting in a proscenium box. I asked her for a reply to Guilford's question.

"He should never have come in at all."

I was not getting on. My heroine was not satisfied to take a new husband; my hero was unable to make a hero of himself while making love to another man's wife, and I had a child to dispose of too young to understand what they were all doing.

"Come; get to work," I said to the players, and I began to lay down the scenario. I labored through three acts and succeeded in reaching the fourth, in which I proposed to dispose of the husband and marry his wife to a noble, good man.

I was relieved to see in my hypothetical audience that the wife held their sympathies pretty well, but the whole scheme broke down under a scene that Forman had suggested as being worthy to be handled by a genius. The parties involved were Trevelyan, his wife and Guilford. The scene was the culminating point of the break between the Trevelyans. I had nerved myself up to the work with the help of ten cups of strong tea and was moving on swimmingly when little Reginald must needs come in and, seeing his mother delivering an address to his father that I had spent much time and pains on, ran up to him, threw his little arms about him and cried out:

"Mamma, why do you scold papa? You mustn't scold papa. I won't let you."

"Shoot the villain of the play!" cried a voice in the audience.

"Do you refer to me, sir?" asked Guilford hotly. "I'd have you understand, sir, that I'm the hero of this play."

"Give Trev another chance!" cried a countryman in the audience. "He didn't mean nothin'! My ole woman has lots more agin me than he's done—if she only knowed it!"

"Then you're a brute!" cried a feminine voice.

"What are you going to do with the kid?" called a voice loud above the hubbub.

"Send him to an orphan asylum," suggested a woman in the gallery. "That's better than a father that isn't his father, and a hypocrite at that!"

"Better sink the whole lot of 'em!" was the last call I heard above the din, which now became confusing. Jumping up from my desk, I ran to the telephone, called up Forman and said to him:

"Who wants that kind of a play you have given me an order for?"

"The public."

"Who's the public?"

"Why, the public is the—the public, of course."

"You mean that the public is the creation of men who make a living by producing rotten plays and novels! Get some one else to write your play for you. I'm out of it. Goodby!"

If as clean a play as mine on this subject creates displeasure what should be the feelings of those who are not "the public" at seeing one wherein the wife and mother is bad?

"Of Another Kidney."

BROILED KIDNEYS.—The best lambs' kidneys, absolutely fresh, should be chosen for broiling. Wash them thoroughly and plunge them into salted boiling water. Remove from the fire and leave five minutes. Then cut the kidneys almost in two, not severing them, but spreading each flat and fastening it open with a skewer. Dip in melted butter and broil brown. Serve with croutons.

Kidney and Bacon.—Chop fine a medium sized onion and mix it with a teacupful of breadcrumbs, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, the grated rind of half a lemon and one well beaten egg. Spread this mixture on slices of bacon and wrap each slice of bacon around a well washed kidney. Skewer the bacon in place and bake the kidneys in the oven until done. Serve with a brown gravy.

Sauted Kidneys.—Slice the kidneys in three or four slices and put them in a skillet with a tablespoonful of butter. Cover and cook for five minutes. Then uncover and cook until well done, turning often. Thicken the gravy in the pan, season well and pour over the kidneys on a hot dish.

Kidney Omelet.—Boil kidneys until tender, drain and slice very thin. Add to an omelet when it is ready to roll.

Kidney Croquettes.—Boil kidneys and chop fine. Mix them—two cupfuls—with two tablespoonfuls of breadcrumbs, a teaspoonful of chopped onion, pepper and salt to taste and a beaten egg. Form into rolls, dip into breadcrumbs and beaten egg and brown in deep hot fat.

Kidney on Toast.—Boil kidneys tender, drain, chop and mix with cream sauce. Serve on slices of crisp hot toast.

Kidney Patties.—Prepare the creamed kidneys and put them into patty cases. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Kidney Rolls.—Mix one-half cupful of stale breadcrumbs, one-half onion finely chopped and one-half tablespoonful finely chopped parsley. Season with salt and pepper and moisten with beaten egg. Spread mixture on thin slice of bacon and fasten around pieces of lamb's kidney, using skewers. Bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

Foxhounds.

Foxhounds are extraordinarily swift, as is proved by the fact that a dog of this breed once beat a thoroughbred horse, covering four miles in six and one-half minutes, which was at the rate of nearly eighteen yards a second.

INTERESTING MENUS.

If You Must Be Economical, Read This Food Schedule.

Sunday.—Cream of pea soup, fricasseed chicken, sweet potatoes, cauliflower, apple nut mayonnaise salad and fruit souffle.

Monday.—Bouillon, ham en casserole, white potatoes, spinach, beet relish, tapioca pudding.

Tuesday.—Tomato soup, chicken pot pie (left from Sunday), peas, rice, egg-sardine salad, pastry.

Wednesday.—Cream of potato soup, beef loaf, macaroni or white potatoes, carrots, lettuce-tomato salad, cornstarch pudding.

Thursday.—Consomme, roast pork, white potatoes, parsnips, squash, onions, apple-celery salad, acid gelatin dessert.

Friday.—Cream of onion soup, broiled fish, white potatoes, tomatoes, beets, lettuce, cheese salad, light steamed pudding.

Saturday.—Vermicelli soup, baked beans, tomatoes, coldslaw, stewed fruits.

On Monday the ham should be just enough for one meal.

Tuesday the pot pie is made from leftover chicken from Sunday dinner.

Wednesday there can be enough of the loaf left for a lunch on Thursday.

Thursday buy a small roast of pork, some may be left, or two chops could be reserved and broiled for Friday's lunch.

Fish on Friday. As we seldom care for leftover fish, enough should be purchased for one meal. If boiled fish is preferred extra may be purchased so as to have a leftover which may be creamed for lunch Saturday.

Saturday there will be baked beans, and of course enough for one or two breakfasts or a lunch. These are considered perfectly balanced meals and are merely samples of what may be done if the woman will plan ahead and devote time and thought to her menus.

Skirt Hangers.

Nothing can be said against the ordinary skirt hangers of wood; but, as every woman likes useful things to be as ornamental as possible, there is a great deal to be said in favor of the strips of ribbon or linen that can be embroidered to form skirt hangers. Each strip has a brass ring attached to one end and a brass clasp at the other. The ring is intended to be slipped over the nail or hook from which the skirt suspends. In the teeth of the clasp the skirt is held securely. The hangers can be made for oneself or they can be made as a shower gift.

Many Ribbons.

Ribbons are used generously as trimmings for afternoon and dance frocks these days. They are made into panels, loop upon loop, and are sewed around wide skirts in graduated widths. Very broad ribbons of soft brocade patterns are draped over the bodice under a veiling of tulle, and very narrow ribbons are plaited and used as an edge trimming. Gay little bowknots and rosettes of ribbon flutter from dance frocks captivatingly.

An Excess of Nerve.

"I like to see a young man energetic and able to push himself," said the old banker sadly. "But when he borrowed the money from me to buy an automobile in which to elope with my daughter it was carrying things a little too far."

Collected Some Alimony Also.

She—This is Maud's third husband, and they all bore the name of William. He—You don't say so! Why, the woman is a regular Bill collector.—New York Times.

ANALYZING A HAIR.

Science Reads It as Expert Woodsmen Read the Trees.

To the German analyst hair is packed with information. The approximate age and physical condition can be constructed by an examination of a single hair.

The hair of every animal has certain distinguishing characteristics. It is not to be mistaken by a competent investigator. Some animals, as for example the cow, have three types of hair. These will be known by their structure. Under a proper microscopical examination hairs will be as easily distinguished by an expert as varieties of trees in a grove will be distinguished by a forester.

There was a case in which a dagger found on the prisoner had a few short hairs caught entangled in a nick of the blade. He explained this by saying that he had used the dagger to kill a rabbit that he had found trapped in a hedge. The authorities reported to the police, after an examination of the dagger, that the hairs were not of human origin, but they also added they were not rabbit hairs; they were squirrel hairs.

The police were extremely puzzled until they finally discovered that on the night of the homicide the prisoner had worn a great coat trimmed with squirrel fur. He had, in fact, carefully washed the knife after the assassination and thereby removed every evidence of his act; but, unfortunately for him, he made the mistake of attempting to dry the dagger by wiping it on the fur lining of his great coat.—Melville Davisson Post in Saturday Evening Post.

INSECT MARVELS.

These Tireless Creatures Are Built For the Strenuous Life.

Many interesting facts, the result of long study, are given by Mr. Harold Bastin, an eminent entomologist, in his book, "Insects, Their Life Histories and Habits."

"Contrary to popular belief, spiders are not insects. Insects have six legs, neither more nor less, and another peculiarity of the insect is that it has wings—sometimes two, more often four. Spiders have eight legs and no wings; therefore spiders are not insects.

"Insects have no backbones and no skeletons, but skins with a hard, durable surface called chitin, which makes up a light shell of armor that forms the outside of the body, to the inside of which the muscles are attached. Insects do not breathe through their mouths, but through holes in the bodies called spiracles. Insects have neither veins nor arteries; the blood is pumped directly from the chambered heart into the body cavity, where it bathes and nourishes the organs. Insects have wonderful and enviable digestive organs and feed upon and digest almost any substance from which nourishment may be extracted.

"Because of the way they are built, insects are particularly fitted for the strenuous life, and a tired insect is a thing unknown. They are always busy traveling, buzzing, biting or seeking some work to do."

Blossoms That Bees Love.

A person who has had no experience with bees commonly makes the mistake of supposing that the roses, peonies, sweet peas, dahlias or other gaudy blossoms of his garden will furnish a quantity of honey. Their value is almost negligible, except that some of them yield a little pollen. It is to the modest white clover in the orchard or on the roadside or the weeds of pasture or woodlot or the blossoms of trees like the basswood that the bees go for the bulk of their honey. It does not pay to cultivate any plant for its value as a honey producer. The orchard is a splendid place for the apiary, where the bees can build up on the first nectar in the spring, and the blossoms have the benefit of the bees' visits.—John W. Love in Countryside Magazine.

A Cent.

A cent is a little thing, but in the aggregate it is mighty. We speak of the "copper cent," but it is not entirely copper. Its composition is 95 per cent copper, 3 per cent tin and 2 per cent zinc. That alloy is in reality bronze, and the official name of the cent is "bronze." There used to be a copper cent, but an act discontinuing its coinage was passed in 1857. For seven years (1857-64) we had a nickel cent and up to 1857 a copper half cent.

YOUR SHOES.

How to Take Care of Your Nether Garb and Keep Neat.

If it were possible to lay in a spring and fall supply of, say, three or four pairs of shoes we would give our feet a good chance of always looking neat. However, it is possible on a more limited number to accomplish the same end if we are careful with those we do buy.

In the first place, it is much more advisable to pay a good price for one pair than to buy two pairs of cheap shoes. Cheap shoes get out of shape so quickly they are never an economy. Cheap shoe leather is dear at any price. To preserve the shape of a shoe you must have a pair of trees, and immediately you take off your shoes put them on the trees. Never allow your shoes to run down at the heel. As soon as they show the least signs of wear send them to be fixed. If you wear them until they are right down at the heel it is not only bad for your foot and looks most slovenly and untidy, but you get them so out of shape that no amount of subsequent repairing will put them right again.

If you happen to get your shoes wet don't put them near the radiator to dry. This cracks the leather and makes them hard. Put them on the trees and let them stand somewhere warm and dry. Wait until they are quite dry before having them cleaned.

You can keep patent leather shoes from cracking by rubbing vaseline into them before wearing them for the first time.

Mock Tatting in Clover Leaf Crochet.

There are many uses for this mock tatting in crochet of clover leaf design:

Begin with ch 27, catch back into the 15th st from beginning of chain, forming a loop. Into this 1 cr 5 s p of 3 ch, (2 s-p) four times, 5 s, catching with first p into 5th st from beginning of chain; join. Ch 12, catch back at base of first leaflet. Fill in this 1 the same as the first, joining first p of 2d leaflet to last p of first leaflet. Third leaflet the same as second. Slipstitch along 5 of remaining 15 ch for stem. Ch 5, catch into last p of 3d leaflet. Repeat, joining second clover leaf to first by 3d p of opposite leaflets. Crochet a heading of trebles with 2 ch between each.

Home Suggestions.

Many laundresses waste time and labor pursuing clothespins when a clothespin bag made to slide along the line would save both.

Give the average girl a pretty shirt waist or dress bag and see if the best things are not more carefully put away.

Give the average boy a good looking shoe bag for his closet wall and see how quickly he will display pride in keeping his shoes clean so that the bag will not be soiled.

Eat Ripe Olives.

Eat ripe olives and take four tablespoonfuls of olive oil every day, says one who knows. Why ripe olives? Because they are picked and packed just at that stage of their development when they are richly nutritious and edible. Each olive contains a large percentage of olive oil. Do try them if you have not as yet. Purplish black in color, the more one eats of them the better one likes them.

Flying Hen Drops Egg.

Bluefield, W. Va.—What is believed to be the first time on record of a hen laying an egg in midair was the unusual accomplishment of a brown leghorn in the express office at Graham. The hen was in a coop of chickens. After the coop had been placed on a truck the brown leghorn escaped, and while flying dropped a snow white egg into space. John Jones, a colored roustabout, who was pursuing the hen, caught the egg as it dropped.

Embroidered Voiles Much Worn.

The summer wardrobe can not afford to be without a smocked frock. This design in embroidered voile, is trimmed with a vest and collar of white organdy.

Here is a very attractive way to make one of the embroidered voiles in such great vogue this season. The waist closes in front over a vest of white organdy and the skirt is trimmed with smocking. This may be replaced by gathers, where one is inclined toward stoutness. In medium size the dress requires 8¼ yards 32-inch material, with ¼ yard 36-inch organdy for the trimming.

In making the waist, bear in mind that the center is indicated by large "O" perforations. Underface the front edge of the waist about 1 inch deep. Then gather the upper edge of front, and lower edges of front and back between double "TT" perforations: gather 2 inches above lower edges. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched. Adjust stay in position underneath gathers, center-backs even, small "o" perforation in stay at under-arm seam and bring front edge to center-front.

Long Sleeve—Close seams of sleeve and cuff as notched leaving back seam of cuff free below small "o" perforation and finish for closing. Gather sleeve between double "TT" perforations. Sew cuff to sleeve as notched; bring the front seam of cuff to seam of sleeve and bring the back seam of cuff to large "O" perforation to sleeve. Sew sleeve in armhole, notches and small "o" perforations even easing in any fulness.

If the plaited skirt is used, cut off the left back end along double "oo" perforations. If trimmed with smocking, use a pattern for the trimming and smock the space between double "TT" perforations, gather upper edge between double "TT" perforations: if desired shirred, gather between double "TT" perforations, and make 4 rows of gathers below upper edge, 1½ inch apart. Form plaits, creasing on lines of slot perforations, bring the folded edges to corresponding small "o" perforations; stitch to position any depth desired, leaving edges to left of center-front free above single "o" perforation for an opening; close seam. Turn hem at lower edge of skirt on small "o" perforations.

Adjust skirt to position stitching upper edge over upper row of gathers in waist, center-fronts and center-backs even.

Pictorial Review Costume No. 6759. Sizes, 34 to 44 inches bust. Price, 15 cents. Smocking No. 12234. Price, 15 cents.

FACTS ABOUT "THE BIRTH OF A NATION"

Following is a Bird's Eye View of Gigantic Spectacle to Bepeated Here May 19 and 20

Premier performance March 3, 19.. at the Liberty theatre, New Y.. Some of subsequent productions were: Tremont theatre, Boston, M.. beginning April 10; Illinois the..e, Chicago, Ill., starting June 5; B.. on Beach Music Hall, N. Y., Ju.. 3; Nixon theatre, Atlantic City, N.. July 18. All these were long run of many months, the five separate companies aggregating a total attendance of 58,000 patrons weekly. N.. before has a play run half a ye.. multaneously in so many cities, in..ing also seventeen weeks in Los A..es and eighteen weeks in San Francisco.

Produced by David Griffith, the foremost of directors and pioneer of the new art. Suggested by Thomas Dixon's novel, "The Clansman."

The play contains 5,000 scenes; presents 18000 actors and 3000 horses; cost $500,000 for actual production expense, and took eight months to produce. Story divided in two acts. Total time of performance, 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Some of the greatest battles of the Civil War re-enacted. A reproduction of Atlanta as it was in 1864, built ... to be destroyed by fire, in the picture of Sherman's march to the sea. Lee and Grant shown at Appomattox; Ford's theatre, Washington, reproduced to the smallest details for the Lincoln tragedy. Reconstruction pictorialized in the actual South Carolina scenes, climaxing with a series of wild Ku Klux Klan rides that commandeered a county for a day and cost $10,000.

Women's dresses used 12,000 yards and Ku Klux Klan costumes 25,000 yards of cloth.

Night photography of battle scenes invented and perfected at a cost of $5,000.

Wonderful artillery duels in which real shells—costing $80 apiece were used. Miles of trenches, thousands of Confederate and Federal fighters—"war as it actually is."

First time in the history of theatricals for a motion picture to be handled and presented as a regular attraction. It requires two sixty foot cars to transport the equipment. A regular travelling organization of 50 people, with its own stage director, crew, musicians, operators and mechanical experts to readjust the theatres to scientific focal requirements.

Not depending solely on the local musicians, a complete symphonic orchestra is carried. The musical score is synchronized to the several thousand distinct and individual scenes.

The spectacle has met strong opposition at various times but has been approved by every Board of Censors with one exception in the United States and by scores and scores of the most eminent United States Senators and Representatives, Governors of States, Judges, Publicists, diplomats, educators and clergymen. It has been viewed and commended by a larger number of priests and ministers than had ever previously approved a theatric entertainment.

Receipts and attendance have likewise made a new page of theatrical history. Within the first eight months the gross attendance was approximately 1,500,000. Receipts have dwarfed those of "Ben Hur" and every other great spectacle hitherto presented.

Artistically, "The Birth of a Nation" combines exquisite domestic comedy and romance with the grandeur and thrill of history's greatest moments, inculcating the lesson of patriotism that springs from the "nation re-born" as the result of war between the States and Reconstruction.

ONE-HALF MILLION RUSSIANS MAY GET TO FRANCE SOON

London.—The recent order of the Russian government in closing hte White Sea to all but government traffic is looked upon in military circles as presaging important troop movements from that locality. The ice in the White Sea is now breaking up and, according to recent information as published in these despatches there were more than one hundred merchant steamships before Archangel awaiting a chance to discharge cargoes and clear from the White Sea.

Within the last few weeks all information relative to ship movements at Archangel has been a closed book.

This situation is in marked contrast to the giving out of news from Archangel during 1915. It is known that the railroad from Petrograd to Archangel has been changed during the past winter from a narrow gauge to standard gauge and, furthermore, this railroad has been double tracked. The distance by railroad from Moscow to Archangel is only 742 miles as against nearly five thousand miles by the Trans-Siberian to Dalny, on the Pacific coast.

The dispatches indicated, on the The New York Herald dispatches indicated, on the occasion of the first landinf of Russian troops at Marseilles, that these forces came from the Pacific, a surmise which has since been confirmed by recent admissions from France. The sea journey from Dalny to Marseilles is approximately nine thousand miles, and the distance from Vladivostock to Marseilles by sea is 9,526 miles.

When Ice Breaks Up.

Archangel could ont be used during spring because of ice conditions, but with the breaking up of the pack in the White Sea an dthe liberating of a great fleet of more than one hundred steamships the Russians have it in their power to despatch on vessels which would otherwise leave Archangel in water ballast a contingent estimated at one hundred thousand men. That a force of this size can be transported on one hundred steamships of the type employed in the trans-Atlantic-Archangel service is made all the more practicable, it is said, by reason of the fact that the Russians are not sending any arms or fiel dequipment into France.

Their soldiers destined for service on French soil are leaving Russia void of all but the clothes they stand in, plus overcoat and blanket. For the Russians France is the country where they are to be armed and equipped, and France is able to render this service.

As against the nine thousand miles of sea journey required in voyaging from Dalny to Marseilles, the steaming route which it may be expected that transports will take from Archangel to the French coast should not cover, it is estimated more than 2,750 miles. This is less than the high latitude run between New York and Queenstown of 2,842 miles.

Obregon Seeks Delay; Deadlock Continues

El Paso.—The United States government has taken a firm stand on the questions pending between itself and the de facto government of Mexico, and tomorrow morning a last chance will be given to General Alvaro Obregon, Mexican Minister of War, and his colleagues to accept or reject the tentative agreement reached a week ago, whichw as signed by General Obregon.

The period of quibbling is over. All counter proposals made by General Obregon have been rejected flatly. General Scott and General Funston are content to have one more meeting with the Mexican official, but tonight they made it plain that it would be the last one unless the de facto government is ready to yield.

Officially the conference ended last Monday night, when General Obregon served notice on General Scott that the United States must vacate Mexican territory at once or take the consequences. The meeting yesterday was informal, but the Mexicans took advantage of it to submit several proposals, some of which were so absurd that they are almost unbelievable. All were rejected.

Conference Is Postponed.

General Obregon left with the understanding that he would return today for a final talk. Instead of doing this, however, General Obregon sent word that he would like to postpone the meeting until tomorrow. General Scott assented to this, but made it clear that this was as far as he would go. He firmly but politely informed General Obregon that the United States had no intention of receding from its position concerning the American punitive expedition and that it was useless to discuss the matter further.

Either General Obregon must come here in the morning prepared in behalf of his government to sign the tentative agreement under which the United States is permitted to keep its soldiers in Mexico for an indefinite period, or he may as well not come at all. Unless ordered otherwise by Washington, General Scott and General Funston will grant no further interviews.

There is a growing suspicion in official circles that the Mexicans have been playing for time and that the United States has been an easy victim of their wily methods. If the delays have been for the purpose of effecting troops movement in Mexico the Mexicans are now fully aware of the fact that the United States has not been idle in the same direction.

H.-R. ARE STRONG IN MIDDLE WEST

Republicans Say Candidate Musjt Reunite Party to Defeat Democrats There.

Chicago.—Republicans in the Middle West believe that their Presidential nominee will be either Theodore Roosevelt or Justice Hughes. Those are the only names heard among the rank and fie of the party. I have asked probably a hundred representative party men in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois whom they think the majority of the voters prefer and who they believe would stand the best chance of being elected, and about eighty-five have named Justice Hughes. They all seem to think there is no doubt he would accept.

Here, as in the East ,there is apparently an organized move among some of the leaders to crush the Hughes boom. The word has spread through the cross roads organizations that Mr. Hughes is a destructive political force, that he would close the White House doos to all those who help to elect him, and that at the end of a four year term if one came to him, there would be no more Republican party.

But there is no indicationthat such a campaign has made much headway. On the other hand, there can be no doubt in the mind of any one who talks withthe wage earners, the farmers, the small business men and people generally in this great Middle West that Theodore Roosevelt is politically very much alive.

The leaders in the West ,who correspond in a measure with William Barnes, W. Murray Crane, Franklin Murphy and Boies Penrose in the East, say that Mr. Roosevelt has been "politically buried" so far as the party nomination is concerned. But there is best of reason for believing that the people do not generally take that view of the situation at all.

There is a condition in the Middle Mest and Mississippi Valley region, however, to which the attention of the Republican managers may, with profit, be directed. Unless all present indications are misleading, the Republican party is not likely to have the easy walkover it has been counting on.

OGDENSBURG GETS PUBLIC MARKET

It Will Come As a Result of Public Spiritedness of a Citizen---Its Advantages Appear.

Ogdensburg is another city with an eye open to the advantages to be obtained by conducting a public market. The Post-Standard of today contains the following comment on Malone's progressiveness:

The dean of the Ogdensburg bar looking about for an investment for his frtune which should produce the greatest dividends in helpfulness for his city, gave all his money for the establishment of a public market.

In cities which have never had markets there is difficulty in getting them started. Available property in a convenient location is expensive. To make the market serve its widest use there should be a considerable investment in refrigeration. To get the farmers to bring their produce to market and housewives to come to market it calls for persistent advertisement. But if the process of getting a market established and used is often slow, the value of it, when its place in the community is understood, is beyond measure.

It not only gives the householder of small means fresh products of the garden at reasonable prices, it gives the farmer a guaranteed market for his goods. He knows when he loads his wagon—or better still he loads a trolley car at his own farm—where he is going to take his fruits and vegetables and what he is going to get for them. The producer and the consumer both profit by a simple scheme of salesmanship which reduces risks to the minimum, which reduces costs to the minimum, and which cuts the middleman's profits to the minimum.

If Syracuse had a market, serving the seller and the buyer in the broad way that the Cleveland markets do, we should not be importing a large part of what we eat from a distance. Within a twenty-mile radius of Syracuse there is a great acreage that could be profitably used for market gardening, there are the transportation lines to bring the fruits of the soil to the town at small cost, and there are the farmers ready to undertake the supply, not only of this city but of others, if the market conditions were stable and right. A public market under intelligent and far-sighted management would make those conditions right.

Ogdensburg has been given a rare opportunity by the beneficence of Mr. McNaughton. A shrewd investment of his bequest should work an appreciable influence upon the cost of living within the city and the prosperity of the farmers near it.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

The gigantic struggle of humanity to better conditions has been shown all over the world and especially in FULTON. We have been fighting bad times as long as we possibly could and we know that we have succeeded, notwithstanding the fact that some of the citizens would rather trade in other cities and perfer to patronize certain Musical Festival events in a neighboring city and refuse to patronize HOME INDUSTRY in the form of the FULTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S second concert. We are still here and we shall be here UNTIL THE LAST DORP OF BLOOD THAT'S IN US.

We all know that an institution that's calling everybody over the telephone in the open, giving thereby the secrets of these people's business away, is a BUM institution. It's about time that you people of FULTON take a stand in this matter and show your color.

* * *

CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN was the biggest success the city of FULTON has ever seen. For the first time the women took a hand in this campaign and made a marvelous success out of it, notwithstanding the fact that some of the RICHEST men in our city seemingly refuse to be GOOD citizens. The shoe should fit somebody.

The more money some people make the more they THINK they are going to be admired; but CHRISTIANITY tells us different.

Speak ye every man the truth to his NEIGHBOR; execute truth and peace in your gates; and yet none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his NEIGHBOR. Be at peace amongst yourselves. Have peace one with another. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. Blessed are the PEACEMAKERS:

You FULTONIANS, please remember this.

Peacock's Audience Last Night Largest During Campaign

With large representations from the city churches, and delegations of Grangers and Brotherhood and Bible classes the Tabernacle building last night was filled to capacity, about 2,200 persons being present.

No more afternoon meetings will be held, it was announced yesterday; however, this afternoon the Bible class will meet at 2:30. A large attendance is expected tonight when delegations from the W. C. T. U., Good Templars and other organizations are present. The town of Hannibal will be out en masse at the services tonight, an invitation to the entire community having been extended and accepted.

The sermon tomorrow night will be on "Hell," Mr. Peacock announced today. He also wishes that every person who attends the Mothers' Day services Sabbath morning wear a white flower, or white ribbon, in honor of his or her mother.

EVERY MAN'S NEED IS PERSONAL RELIGION

Evangelist Peacock preached last night from Luke 10:42, "One thing is needful"; Mark 10:21, "One thing thou lackest;" John 9:25, "One thing I know;" and Philippians 3:13, "One thing I do." He said the one thing needful in every man's life is personal religion. Martha was anxious to please Jesus by getting him a fine dinner, and complained to Jesus because Mary would not assist her. Jesus wanted to impress on her mind that the most important thing in the world is to prepare to meet God. No one should spend all his time seeking the thing of the world, but should find time to seek Jesus Christ. The rich young ruler was probably the best man in the community morally, but he lacked true religion in the heart. Morality nor riches never saved a man. The blind man knew that Christ had restored his sight and so every one should know that Christ has power to save, and like Paul decide to cast aside his besetting sin and "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ." The sermon follows:

In reading these texts, one might imagine that the path of salvation is a very narrow way and that the word of God set forth only one idea. The way to heaven is spoken of as the straight and narrow path, but this path will accommodate a vast multitude. Millions and millions of hungry souls can travel this road at one time an dno one will be crowded or trampled underfoot. The Bible sets forth one idea, but this one idea is more comprehensive than all others. It covers the whole plan of salvation and will lead the person having that oen idea to heaven. The one thing spoken of in God's word cannot be understood as we understand the term "a man with one idea." We understand this term to mean a narrow-minded person. A person with small mental caliber. But in the word of God this one thing is wide in its scope. This one thing means to the Christians all things. For him to live is Christ and to die is gain.

Speaks to Martha.

The first passage mentioned here is when our Lord speaks to Martha. One thing (He says) is needful. That one thing is personal religion. The [illegible] Creator stands before this poor [illegible] and says that she lacks the essential thing. She was troubled about many things. She was caring for her household duties and was very anxious to please her master but she lacked the one thing needful in preparing for eternity. This woman came to Jesus complaining because her sister would not help with the duties of the house but was sitting at the feet of Jesus listening to His teachings. She was giving heed to the one thing needful. In place of rebuking Mary for not helping with the household duties and commanding her to help, He said, "Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

Vain Excuses

These excuses are vain and will not be acceptable at the judgment throne for the answer will come, one thing is needful. t is the person who is continually learning from eJsus out of His word, out of His daily providence that is making the rapid strides in the kingdom of God. It is not in trying to make an outward show of trying to demonstrate to the world that we are the leaders in the church, but it is the working of Gods' spirit in the hearts of men that will bring the one thing needful. The busy worker who can go out among the destitute and degraded, and day and night seek them for Christ, may sometimes complain of those whose work is more retiring and less public, as if they were doing nothing in that quiet home

Cleanest City Ever Result of Splendid Public Spiritedness

The final spurt of the Clean-up Week is being made today by the members of the Chamber of Commerce committee in charge, under the direction of Secretary D. S. Hollenga. Several teams, loaned for the most part, by members of the Chamber and public-spirited citizens, are making the rounds of the entire city gathering up the refuse and rubbish which was placed along the streets in boxes and barrels by the residents of the city this morning. All over the city the Clean-up squad had met with the earnest cooperation of the citizens, and those who have not given their property a thorough cleaning during the past week are few and far between.

Under the stringent state sanitary laws, the city officials and health officers are at liberty to resort to legal means, if necessary, to compel property owners to maintain clean and sanitary premises, and in a few cases in this city such action is being considered.

The huge bonfire of the rubbish collected will be touched off tonight at 8 o'clock on the Flats, north of the city. Although the band concert which was to have been given tonight, has been postponed on account of the cold weather, a large crowd is expected to witness the bonfire.

Balloon Drifts Over Canadian Border Line

The European war atmosphere was thrown into a condition resembling peaceful quietude in the farming section adjoining the Gilbert & Van Sanford ginseng beds on the Emery road yesterday, the occasion being a find by "Del" Reed and George A. Rappole. It was a balloon which had been blown over to these parts from Canada.

At first sight, the balloon aroused suspicion on account of its peculiar construtcoin, there being fastened to it lattice work of sticks, from the ends of which streamers hung. In the center of the lattice work was fastened an aluminum cylinder. The cylinder was open at one end and contained a card upon which was printed the information that the finder of the outfit would received a reward of $2.50 upon returning the aluminum case to the Meteorological Service of Canada, the finder to first notify the society of the find.

The construction of the balloon and its parts is unique and many persons have been attracted to view it. Mr. Rappole brought the remains to his home in S. 5th st., and awaits word from the Canadian society.

FACTORIES LOOM BEFORE HIS EYES

Mr. George [illegible] Warner, of New York city, was a visitor in this city yesterday. Mr. Warner held several short conferences with local merchants and manufacturers in connection with the advertising campaign he is conducting for the benefit of Fulton in the larger cities of the country and was optimistic concerning the chances of securing additional industries for the city. At present, in his advertisements, which are being handled by the George L. Dyer Company, one of the best agencies in New York city, Mr. Warner specifies two manufacturing sites which are available at the present time, and negotiations are already in progress with interested manufacturers. Mr. Warner is using such mediums as the New York Sunday Times, Chicago Tribune, Boston Post, Cleveland Plain-Dealer, and other newspaper of equal reputation, and the advertisements present the advantages of Fulton in a very attractive manner.

GLASS THROWERS HAD BETTER WATCH OUT

Somebody is going to get into trouble. The reason is this.

In East 2d street, between Rochester and Broadway, broken glass has been found in the street. Now because the glass is there somebody must have put it there, so the Automobile Club, President McCully states, is doing some detective work, and woe to the guilty one when found.

Ten dollars is offered as a reward to the person bringing information to the club of the offenders.

A YEAR-ROUND JOB

The clean-up of the week has meant wonderful things to our city, but there is still much to do. In the short space of time the bigger problems of making clean and sanitary, in all the full sense of the word, has not been possible. For instance, our river banks are still unsightly, and to make these truly clean and beautiful would require the expenditure of a substantial sum of money. The work could not be accomplished in one month, and no one organization should be expected to foot the bill for such a procedure and the city surely could not take from its treasury the amount when it hasn't enough to feed its hungry people. However, the work could be accomplished, and since the Women's Committee in the Clean-up campaign has shown its ability to work it should be made the permanent auxiliary of the Chamber of Commerce and the problem left with them.

An article, "A School Garden on a Canal Bank," contributed to the American City Magazine by Felix Koch, is most suggestive of what might be accomplished with our river banks. The pictures illustrating the "before" and "after" conditions seemed to prove the effort worth while. The article reads as follows:

When the clever idea came to Miss Bertha Franklin, assistant principal of the Raschig Public School in Cincinnati, of hiding the unsightly banks of the almost unused canal nearby with flowers, through the volunteer work and contributions of the boys and girls, she soon found that she had almost more workers than she could employ. The largest part of these children are emigrants—boys and girls from the farms of Germany, Austria, England, Italy—and after two or three years in the sordid tenements of the cities they are eager indeed for a chance to play with the soil as they did in the homeland.

Last year all of the long canal to southern Ohio was an eye-sore, except here, where the children had taken matters in hand, and near their school its banks bloomed indeed like a garden. A little forest of castor plants hid the scarred walls of the canal embankment from view, and gave background to the lovely flowers near the water's edge. The work was begun in the winter and the early spring, when beds of bulbs were started—tulips and hyacinths and narcissus—for setting out later on. For these bulbs the children contributed pennies—there were some five hunred of them giving in all—this in order that they should feel a proprietary interest in the beds and protect them against any vandals in their midst. The beds were covered in the winter, and with spring the uncovering had to be done. Then the more interesting stages succeeded. About nine beds of bulbs were set out at proportionate intervals, each bed 5x16 feet, as near as feasible to the edge of the canal, in order that the effect of water and flowers might be combined. With the sluggish old canal, and the little foreign children working among the lovely hyacinths, the picture was such as one might find in the bulb country of the Netherlands.

After the earlier bulbs had bloomed other flowers supplanted them, until, with the re-opening of the school in the fall, brilliant cannas flared in triumph along the canal. This year, by way of variety, dwarf sunflowers will be set out, and in subsequent years there will be other flowers.

Nor was it only the ornamental plants that were encouraged; children who desired it were helped to undertake truck gardening also. One boy, for example, went into raising beans; and over and above what his family consumed he sold a dollar and a half's worth. Another boy set out turnips and netted almost as much. Often in the yards of the tenements where they live, the children, whose ages range from nine to fourteen years, are putting into further practice what has been learned here.

GETTING SOMETHING OUT OF HYPOCRISY

How nice to grow old gracefully. It reads well; but too many people grow old fretfully, even some of those who write the other way. One of the most delightful articles we have read on the subject was written by a woman nearly sixty who would be dignified if she did not attempt to appear twenty-two, and whose hair would be a wealth of grandmotherly white if she did not deluge it with dye. With the pen she says: "Next to youth the most beautiful thing in life is serene old age unadulterated." With the face and hair dope and in harmonious attire she says: "Don't you believe it!"

Hypocrisy!

How the world teems with it. A roue preaching virtue; an adventuress prating virtue; a shylock talking generosity; a coward urging war; a rogue advocating reform.

Sooner or later, however, the more pretentious dissembler falls, the biggest cheat is exposed—and, after all, uplifting words perform some service even when uttered or written by those who do not live up to their own teachings, for happily we all do not have personal knowledge of their habits.

A Bohemian Italian, a devotee of paganism, painted an imaginary figure of Christ that the world has ever since copied with reverence and held as sacred.

Some of the most beautiful and inspiring contributions to English literature were written by Oscar Wilde.

A chicken-hearted loafer encouraged a regiment to a glorious achievement.

Providentially, therefore, some public deceptions are not without value, some hypocrisy not wholly bad in its effects.

The practice of commonplace deceits is condemned; but would it be possible for everyone to be absolutely truthful and candid? Try it. Begin the day with a resolve to tell to all you meet the exact truth and carry out your resolution literally. Not only will you be the most miserable person at the end of the day but you will have made more people miserable than you might have done through distribution of cunning devised fabrications.

Hypocrisy and deceit cannot seriously be defended. It were as fatal to do so as to damn virtue, because it is more honored in the breach than in the observance; and the fact that we urge impossible standards itself constitutes prime evidence of inbred dishonesty under a strict construction of the term.

But as there is a measure of blessing in adversity and as even the lofty teachings of Sybarites and frauds may bear elements of public benefit, so the advocacy of high standards by those who cannot attain them, and their adoption insofar as possible by auditors and readers constitute upward steps along the highway of moral improvement.

If we aim low we may miss the target.

If we aim too high we may miss it; but there is no chance of hitting the mark if we aim below it.

The great barrier to perfection is human nature. It has been so from the beginning and will probably be so to the end—and the end, we are led to believe, will come with perfection and not after it.

As human beings we can only proceed a step at a time, and if we stumble occasionally, or if we indulge in cant, let it be hoped it will at least serve as a warning to us and to others that will be heeded.—Boise (Idaho) Statesman.

MEXICO

It is useless to discuss the latest Mexican incident; it is useless to look for any amelioration of a shameful condition until Mr. Wilson puts aside the delusions and the inveracity which have obsessed him from the very beginning of the Mexican trouble.

The United States, under the direction of Mr. Wilson, has destroyed orderly government in Mexico. It has allied itself first with Villa, and then less completely with Carranza. The limitations on the later alliance are mainly due to the frank recognition by Carranza that the first principle of all Mexicans is hatred of the United States.

Having destroyed orderly government, having bargained with bandits, having invited reluctant South American nations to join us in subduing revolt by rhetoric and exercising anarchy by proclamation, Mr. Wilson found himself obliged again to have resort to arms and again to invade Mexico.

The latest slaughter, once more on American soil, surprised Mr. Wilon at the moment when he was preparing to scuttle out of Mexico again, covering his retreat by new fictions and further phrases. It demolishes one more edifice of words completely.

There can be no settlement, no improvement of Mexican conditions; until there is a realization in Washington of what these conditions are.—N. Y. Tribune.

PUT TO SLEEP IN COMMITTEE

The Methodist Episcopal denomination, through its General Conference, now in session at Saratoga, on Tuesday refused to sanction what was regarded as a covert attack upon the United States army, and referred to a comittee a resolution palpably intended to bring discredit on the entire military establishment. It will probably be allowed to sleep the sleep which has no awakening.

The resolution took the form of urging Congresss to prohibit the importation of intoxicants into the Hawaiin islands. In view of the well-established and well-known attitude of the denomination in the matter of intoxicants, it would have caused no surprise if the unqualified resolution had been adopted after informal debate. But one of its sponsors amplified its terms and explained that it was based upon the riotous conduct of a small number of United States soldiers, on the way home from the Phillippine islands, who went ashore at Honolulu. The resolution met with strong opposition, led by a delegate from Pittsburgh, who declared that it gave the wrong impression; that it criticised all of the American soldiers, when only a few were concerned in the incident. This delegate asserted that such action was unjust and he urged that the resolution be not adopted, "for," he said, we may soon need these very men to stand between ourselves and a foreign army."

It is significant that at the time the incriminating resolution was being discussed at Saratoga Springs, every available regular soldier other than those required for routine post guard duty, was being rushed to the Mexican border, while several thousand men are now on Mexican soil. More than that, the National Guard of three states has been summoned to prevent the repetition of raids on American towns by armed and organized Mexicans.

The representatives of the great Methodist Episcopal Church demonstrated the patriotism of those whom they represented by refusing to be stampeded. Without compromising the attitude of the church towards intoxicants, they declined to place the denomination back of a cowardly slur upon the nation's defenders, who are even now fighting and dying in Mexico and on American soil along the border, fighting and dying to preserve the peace and integrity of the nation.

The Honolulu incident is regretable, and may well demand individual discipline; but it is wrong to hold the military establishment as a whole, responsible for the misdoings of a handful of soldiers on shore leave at a territorial port.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

THE ANNUAL

When the soap is on the stairway and the rugs are on the lawn,
And the paperhanger's coming while the plasterer has gone,
When the men are all dejected and are bothered with the blues.
While their wives are madly shuffling
in enormous overshoes,
O, the house is in a turmoil at the very blush of dawn,
When the soap is on the stairway and
the rugs are on the lawn.

When the cullud lady's smashing all the marble statuettes,
And the hardwood floors are ruined
by the roller-skating pets,
When the grand piano's damaged by a can of color spilled
In its innermost recesses by a man who should be killed
O, it's then we see a picture never painted, nay, or nor drawn,
When the soap is on the stairway and
the rugs are on the lawn.

When you're eating from the gas range and are sleeping in the hall,
And you sit down in the kalsomine intended for the wall,
And the batter cakes are tinted with a dash of indigo,
And your coffee tastes of benzine and theres' borax in the dough,
O, a broom will send you sidewise like a timid, startled fawn,
When the soap is on the stairway and
the rugs are on the lawn.

Ah for somewhere east of Suez, where the best is like the worst,
And a human habitation by house-
cleaning is not cursed!
For there's tumult in the attic, and the cellar is a mess,
And you have to screen the windows with a bureau when you dress,
And you have a very doubtful spring-
less cot to sleep upon,
When the soap is on the stairway and
the rugs are on the lawn.

The Dog.

I've never known a dog to wag
His tail in glee he didn't feel,
Nor quit his old time friend to tag
At some more influential heel.
The yellowest cur I ever knew
Was, to the boy who loved him, true.

I've never known a dog to show
Halfway devotion to his friend
To seek a kinder man to know
Or richer, but unto the end
The humblest dog I ever knew
Was, to the man that loved him, true.

I've never known a dog to fake
Affection for a present gain,
A false display of love to make.
Some little favor to attain.
I've never known a Prince or Spot
That seemed to be what he was not.

But I have known a dog to fight
With all his strength to shield a friend,
And whether wrong or whether right,
To stick with him until the end.
And I have known a dog to lick
The hand of him that men would kick.

And I have known a dog to bear
Starvation's pangs from day to day
With him who had been glad to share
His bread and meat along the way.
No dog, however mean or rude,
Is guilty of ingratitude.

The dog is listed with the dumb.
No voice has he to speak his creed.
His messages to humans come
By faithful conduct and by deed.
He shows, as seldom mortals do,
A high ideal of being true.

THROW AWAY YOUR RUBBISH.

The Wisdom of Cleaning Out Accumulations of Gowns and Mustiness.

In some houses the first thing that greets one is a faint musty odor arising from carpets which have grown old, but which, though probably swept frequently, have never been sent to the cleaner's and, being down for years, have accumulated deposits of dust underneath them. In old houses, too, the flooring will have shrunk and provided receptacles for insects under the carpets. Constant traffic and the soil of the street brought in on dirty boots also get into both carpet and flooring.

It is cheaper to do away with rubbish of all kinds than to suffer the results in ill health. Bedrooms are often used as receptacles for stores of old clothes, old trunks and other things, the occupants forgetting that these things are but so much cubic capacity cut off from the air space of the room and that they harbor germs and cause infection.

If household furnishings are worn out and there is difficulty in renewing them, better eliminate them than retain them to the detriment of health. The bare room is a healthy room. If rooms require repapering have them distempered instead. Paperhangers are at a discount just now, and the cleanly distemper which many women who are handy can manage by themselves is healthier and cleaner than a cheap and soiled paper.

Cottage Bedspread.

Nothing is more appropriate for the summer cottage than a bedspread decorated with colonial applique embroidery, which is nothing more or less than patchwork in a glorified state. Unbleached muslin is used for the spread, and it is bound with an inch and a half border of blue chambray. A design in vines and flowers is cleverly carried out, with blue and yellow chambray for the flowers and green for the vines. A long sham to cover both pillows may be worked out in the same manner.

Griffith Skilled in Science of Warfare

D. W. Griffith is the most talked about, the most sought after, man in America. He learned how to plan things, in the making of the 5,000 scenes of the "Birth of a Nation" or he would be lost. He gallops through the myriad-and-one business details of a theatrical succees without turning a hair or developing the slightest case of "nerve." When the turmoil and the tumult dies, and the hours wax small, his refreshment is the dance or a friendly chat with a round table of chums.

It was said on the first night in NewYork that only hte son of a soldier could have conceived and executed "The Birth of a Nation." As a Kentucky lad, the son of Brigadier-General J. W. Griffith, he drank in the Civil War narratives greedily. As he grew up came the poet's vision of the entire struggle and of Reconstruction days. In the prime of manhood awoke the genius to make it a reality.

While planning the Battle of Petersburg, Griffith drilled the regiments as faithfully a Kitchener in England or McClellan on the Potomac. Like them, he had national guardsmen to work with. They knew the manual of arms, but had to acquire the grand tactics of picture evolutions. After the drill was completed, the director took his thousands of militiamen on a month's countryside campaign. Each squadron was commanded by a subdirector.

Pioneers preceded the soldiers to dig the long miles of trenches, to throw up embankments, and reproduce the physical landmarks of the battle. Among the noted ePtersburg landmarks was a high tower. Griffith made it serve a double purpose by using it as field headquarters. From its lofty eminence, he commanded the whole range of mountain and valley. Right at hand was a modern telephone switchboard. From it fieldwires ran to his various subgenerals. Mostly these wires were in conduits underground; they had to be, or the camera would have produced the anachronism of field-telephones in Civil War time.

Thus completely equipped as a modern Joffre or Von Hindenburg Griffith saw everything and telephoned all his instructions. In the artillery actions, real cannon were used which discharged real shells. All were of the 1864 pattern. When the infantry got busy, they used the antique Springfield muskets with the old-fashioned bayonets. As the men charge, it is to be seen that their uniforms are far from spick and span. Many of them are coatless and hatless; the clothing of others is tattered; the flags, even have the look of battle-scarred ribbons. For the first time the grime, dirt, sordidness, as well as the glory of war, is accurately presented.

Plainly War, as Griffith makes it, is not a day's outing for a small and straggling crew of picture takers. It is hard, grueling, continuous work. Regiments, brigades, not companies are employed. There's everything from the far-flung panorama of the general battle to the handgrips of personal combat. Many hundreds of separate and distinct scenes are taken. The amount of labor and detail in the Battle of Petersburg alone would more than equal the combined labors of actors and stage directors in a dozen "indoor" productions. "The Birth of a Nation" returns to the Quirk Theatre, Fulton, for two nights and Saturday matinee on May 19 and 20.

CENSORSHIP IN CANADA.

We believe that the law creating a censorship of moving picture plays is unconstitutional because it attempts to substitute an irresponsible power of prohibition BEFORE production for the recognized and constitutional power of the courts to punish the producers of unlawful plays AFTER the commission of the unlawful act.

A lawyer so able as Governor Whitman will see the force of this argument, we think, without our elaborating it.

The fundamental theory of our whole system of government is the entire liberty of any citizen to print or picture or speak or do anything he chooses, subject only to the peril of the law if he abuses that liberty to print or picture or speak or do anything unlawfully.

This is the sharp distinction between our American institutions of liberty under law applied by the courts and enforced by the executive and the institutions of State bureaucratic inspection and permission or prohibition which obtain in most European monarchies.

In practice, censorship of moving picture films has worked as might be expected. For example, in British Columbia last year the censorship forbade the exhibition of over 800 films, of which thirty-seven were forbidden because they might be "offensive to religious orders;" three because they pictured snakes; sixteen because they reflected upon England's allies in war; twelve because the original pictures were made in Germany and Austria; thirteen for disrespect to clergy; four for ridicule of temperance movements; thirty-six because against public policy; twenty-three because construed to be anti-British, and twenty-two on account of "unneccessary display of United States flag."

These figures are taken from the official Government report.

So we have here in British Columbia valuable property destroyed and ordinary private rights subjected to the personal, Political party, religious and denominational views and caprices of the censor.

We submit that the people of New York do not want anything of this kind in the State of New York. And we are pretty sure that Governor Whitman will agree with the people. —N. Y. American.

BE CHEERFUL.

We all ought to be as cheerful as we can. Every one must have felt that a cheerful friend is like a sunny day, shedding brightness on all around, and most of us can, if we choose, make of the world a palace or a prison. To be bright and cheerful often requires an effort, but the effort is well worth the making and will amply repay those who succeed in making it a success.—Avebury.

VOTING BEGINS AT SARATOGA

It Will Decide Number of Bishops to Be Chosen---Unusual Interest Manifested In Plan.

Saratoga Springs.—Balloting for new bishops, one of the most important matters to come before the general conference of Methodist Episcopal churches, will begin tomorrow.

The conference decided yesterday that the election be taken up immediately after the presentation of the report of the Committee on Episcopacy, the submission of which has been ordered for May 13.

The report of the Committee on Episcopacy is awaited with unusual interest, as not only will it indicate how many bishops are to be retired and how many elected, but also whether missionary bishops shall have the same ecclesiastical status as resident bishops.

The Committee on Episcopacy is conducting its deliberations in secrecy, and thus far it has not indicated whether six or eight bishops will be chosen, as the number depends on the establishment of proposed episcopal residences in certain foreign countries.

An unsuccessful attempt was made today to change the conference rules to permit the election of bishops by a majority, instead of a two-thirds vote.

The conference also decided that the new bishops should be ordained on May 24, the anniversary of John Wesley's birth.

Divorce Resolution Referred.

A resolution, offered by Rev. W. R. Wedderspoon of Washington, to petition Congress in behalf of a uniform law on marriage and divorce, was referred to the Committee on State of the Church, to which has been referred several other resolutions on the subject of divorce.

Upon motion of George Eilliott of Mount Clemens, Mich., a lay delegate the conference adopted a resolution to inform Congress that conference is opposed to pending legislation amending the postal laws by giving the postmaster-general power to deny the privileges of the mails to any publication containing articles tending to expose any race or creed to hatred, contempt or ridicule.

Although no statement was made during the consideration of the resolution, it was generally understood among the delegates that the object of the resolution was to prevent the suppression of certain publications that have carried on a propaganda against a particular denomination.

Co-operation by Methodists with efforts designed to secure improved industrial conditions was recommended in a report submitted by the Church Federation for social service today. The report asks that the conference approve plans for aiding in securing a "living wage" for workers, trade agreements, co-operatice ownership and other similar measures.

Favors Community Centers.

The report also urged that churches be used for social purposes and approved the development of parks, playgrounds and community centers. Reform in prison administration was advocated and the report asserted there was at present an opportunity for the church to use its influence in aiding officials to inaugurate plans for reform rather than punishment in penal institutions.

"Collective bargaining" as means for employes to obtain better working conditions was approved by the report.

ROOT'S USELESS HEADQUARTERS.

The Elihu Root headquarters must be regarded as a concession to political tradition. No Republican candidate for President needs headquarters less than Elihu Root, for he is a large part of the nominating machinery of the Republican Party and the rest of the machinery is in confidential relations with him.

Nobody knows better than Mr. Root that the Republican candidate for president will be named by a select committee composed of himself, Murray Crane, William Barnes, Senator Penrose, Joseph G. Cannon and a half dozen other patriots who will do the thinking for the National Convention. All these gentlemen are intimately acquainted with Elihu Root and most of them would like to nominate him. They may have doubts about his availability but none about his ability.

The obstacle to Root's nomination is Bull Moose antagonism, and that will not be removed by campaign headquarters. The average Progressive professes to detest Root's Wall Street connections, but that is all buncombe, Root in politics is of no more service to Wall Street than is Roosevelt.

The real Bull Moose grievance against Root is that he ran the steam roller at the Chicago Convention in 1912 and flattened out the colonel. That is the reason why the Progressives hate him. They believe that with any other chairman of the convention Roosevelt could have bluffed the nomination through. A Root headquarters could be opened in every town in the country without making the faintest impression on that sentiment.

If Elihu Root is nominated for president it will be becausse the regular Republicans have the courage of their contempt for the Progressives, and courage is one of the qualities in which the Republican Party is painfully deficient.—N. Y. World.

National Defense and International Peace

Preparedness and Peace and the Engineer

THE United States desires peace, based on justice and maintained with honor. But to insure this kind of peace Americans must know that nations are now defended not alone by fighting men, but by fighting industries.

The Engineers of this country, trained as only American Engineers are trained, hold that truth to be as fundamental as the law of gravity. With the authority of the United States Government more than 30,000 Engineers and Chemists, members of five eminent American scientific bodies, are making for the first time in the history of the Government a minute, sweeping survey of the industrial resources of America. They will go to the factories and mines of the land and with their sole method, efficiency, and their sole motive, patriotism, form a vast, flexible organization, such as the world has never known.

Their work will be the basis for creating in this country a true line of defense in time of war—the ability to produce swiftly, abundantly and with sustained power all the thousand and one elements of modern warfare. Without such production there can be no efficient army and navy.

Military Preparedness wins the battle. But Industrial Preparedness wins the WAR! Industrial Preparedness involves no huge expenses. Only the KNOWLEDGE of what American Industry can do. To KNOW the extent of each plant, the equipment of each shop, the capacity of each machine, the ability of each man. THAT is the essence of Industrial Preparedness. That is the task to which thirty thousand Engineers are pledged.

The Engineers' work will lay for all time the ghost of the "munitions trust" by making it possible to have munitions made in thousands of plants.

This vital work of the Engineers will supply the military authorities in Washington with information never before collected, and it is carried forward without a dollar's cost to the Government. And this advertisement is not paid for. The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World have prepared the copy and the publishers have patriotically responded and printed it without pay for the sake of National Defense and International Peace.

All Americans are asked to strike hands with the Engineers so that America shall learn how to raise up an impregnable wall of defense against a day of trial.

CHURCH FILLED TO CAPACITY

The services held at the Church of Immaculate Conception last night under the direction of the Franciscan Order, was attended by large throngs of women of this parish, who listened with interest to the forceful words of Father Austin and Father Stephen, O. M. C.

Father Austin was in charge of the instructions for young women and unmarried women, which were held in the chapel in the basement of the church, while the main church was reserved for the married women to whom Father Stephen preached. At the conclusion of the instruction the congregation united in singing.

One of the principal sermons of the mission for women will be delivered tonight at the church by Father Stephen, whose topic will be, "The Passion of Our Lord," and it is expected that the largest attendance of the week will mark the event. Congregational singing will follow the service.

A union service for women and children of the parish has been planned for tomorrow evening, when a dedication of the congregation to the Blessed Virgin Mary will be held, and benediction of the Blessed Sacrament will be given.

SWEET MAKES GOOD CAPTURE

Lands Hold-up Man by Recognizing the Way He Held His Cigarette.

Richard Van Sadern, indicted in New York city for holding up a storekeeper, was arrested at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon by Patrolman Fred Sweet at the corner of 1st and Cayuga sts. He is held at police headquarters awaiting the arrival of an officer from New York.

Van Sadern had a peculiar way of holding a cigarette, which was observed by the patrolman to tally with the description of the man sent from New York by the officials.

The policeman walked up to Van Sadern with a realization that he had a bad man to deal with. He saluted Van Sadern with, "Hello, Fred. Where're you working?", to which Van Sadern replied, "How did you know my name was Fred?" Sweet replied that he had been advised by his (Van Sadern's) uncle that he was working in the mill. Van Sadern replied that he quit at the mill a night before last. The officer asked him if he wanted a job and upon getting a reply in the affirmative, brought him to the police station, where he was identified by Chief Dyer.

Upon being confronted with his photograph and the circular Van Sadern admitted he was the man and also told the policeman that if had known the purpose of the trip which the officer invited him to take, "there would have been something doing right on the spot." Van Sadern stated that he had worked a week at the chocolate works and for several weeks in the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Company's plant. He is strong and weighs about 180 pounds.

Van Sadern and a comrade about three months ago entered a butcher shop in New York city and held up the proprietor at the point of a gun. The two men secured about $25. An alarm was given and Van Sadern's pal was captured before he could get away from the place. Van Sadern tripped up a captor and got safely away.

Patrolman Sweet received congratulations yesterday for what is considered one of the best arrests in the history of the Fulton police department. The identification of Van Sadern almost instantly is considered remarkable in view of the large number of photographs received daily from police departments all over the country of men wanted for crimes varying from desertion and petty thievery to murder.

SUFFRAGISTS' DRIVE ON NEW YORK PLANNED

New York.—The National American Woman Suffrage Association is making arrangements to spread suffrage propaganda among the 15,000 delegates expected to attend the convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs here from May 23d to June 2d. Suffrage leaders announced today that the delegates will be invited to attend a mass meeting at which Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the assocaition will preside.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who represented the Congressional Union for Women's Suffrage, has issued 5,000 invitations to suffragists and delegates to the convention of women's clubs to attend a garden party at her home at Great Neck, L. I., on June 3d.

John D. Rockefeller will open his estate at Tarrytown, on June 2d and give 600 of the members of the womens' clubs an opportunity to see his Japanese, Alpine and Italian gardens. Other delegates will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Helen Gould Shepard. The Chamber of Commerce will take 500 on a trip to West Point.

CONFERENCE DEBATES COST $1,000 AN HOUR

Saratoga Springs.—A layman with a financial turn of mind told the assembled Methodist that the expenses of the General Conference, were $5,000 a day, or $1,000 an hour, and that a debate just closed that finished where it began had consumed $500 worth of time in controversy over a matter of slight importance. Looked at from that point of view a deliberative body like this is recklessly extravagant.

A resolution has been adopted eliminating the word "again" from the creed printed in the hymnal in the passage asserting the resurrection of Christ. Many feel that we ought not to be compelled to follow archaic examples and say, "He rose again from the dead."

MILL SHUTDOWN IS ANNOUNCED

News Has Depressing Effect All Over City---Various Reasons Assigned by Employes

A general order, signed by John W. Stevenson, agent of the American Woolen Company, was posted in the local plant yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, when most of the hands were receiving their pay, to the effeect that the entire mill, with the exception of the dye-house, wash-room and finishingroom, would close down last night, and remain closed until May 31, at least. The notice came as a great surprise to the employes and business men of the city, who had anticipated no such event, and speculation is rife as to the reason for the action on the part of the company.

As usual, little or no information is obtainable from the officials of the plant, but several employes who could be persuaded to talk this morning, explained, to some extent the conditions that occasioned the shut-down.

According to the most reliable information, several thousands cuts of cloth, between 7,000 and 10,000, the men said, are lying unfinished in the sewing-rooms, and there was little prospect of the finishing room catching up with the work. In order to complete the work ready at the present time, and to ship the finished product out of the mill, all departments, with the exception of the wash-room, finishing room, and dye-house, were laid off. In some quarters there is talk of a shortage of dyes, but this report could not be confirmed.

Many of the employes are pessimistic regarding the resumption of operations at the end of the month, as they say the company has not definitely stated that the mill would open on full time again at that time. It is very probable that many of the mill employes will seek work in other cities in the interim, particularly in New England, where all branches of industry, includin gthe textile trades, are offering plenty of work.

Merchants of the city were beginning to look forward to increased during the next few months, when the announcement of the shutdown came; and in all quarters the news has had a depressing effect. The shut-down affects some of the highest-paid employes of the mill, notably the weavers and spinners, and the number of hands still working is comparatively small in proportion to those laid off under the order of yesterday.

THE QUIRK TODAY

"The Hand of Peril"—Arthur Stringer, whose tales of the underworld, love and mystery have thrilled millions on two continents, is the author of the story revealed in this absorbing picture.

It relates the adventures of Mr. Stringer's famous hero, Kestner, of the United States Secret Service, in hunting down and rounding up a band of counterfeiters, headed by the craftiest master of that nefarious art.

How Kestner, who is portrayed by House ePters, manoeuvers single-handed against this master criminal and his confederates; how he finds in their toils a sweet woman, who is eager to turn her footsteps upon a straighter path; how he vanquishes all the lesser members of the gang and at last overpowers the desperate leader himself in a terrific hand-to-hand conflict, and how in the end he comes to know the meaning of a great love, forms the substance of a series of startling episodes building to a climax of absolute originality.

A Scandal Spoiled.

"Of course he and his wife seem devoted to each other now," said the jealous Miss Gaussip, "but do you think she will always be so true and all that?"

"Well," replied Miss Kidder, "I have reason to know that only last night he had occasion to set a trap for her."

"Ah! Do you know, I suspected something"—

MAN'S NEED IS TRUE RELIGION

circle, or in the unpretending walks of life. Some are always demanding that all shall work in their way, after their pattern, and nothing counts unless it is public, or out of doors. But Christ shows that each ha sa work be it quiet or public, and that all are not commanded to work in the same way. Let each one be faithful in the discvharge of his duty be it great or small and we will all i nthis way fulfill the commands of Christ.

One thin gis needful especially in the cares and worriments in our lives. This one thing lightens the toils, takes away sorrow and makes life worth living. The troubles and sorrows are sent upon us to bring us to iHs feet. To make us realize that we are wholly dependent upon God. Martha brought her cares an deven her complaint sto Jesus, because she knew Jesus would direct her in the right way and show her the one thing needful. Jesus can make the stars of glory shine in the human heart, no matter how dark the night or how threatening the clouds, and He has the power to show to all how they can obtain the one thing needful. In this second passage we find the same one thing set forth, true religion. One thing lacking to make this young ruler perfect. One thing lacking to fit him for the kingdom of God. He possessed many excellent qualities, but he lacked the essential thing to fit him for eternity. He was a lovely young man. He possessed wealth, honor, a social position, and even had a religious inclination. All those things made him lovely and attractive but he lacked the most important part of all. His heart was set on wealth and he did not feel inclined to give it up. His riches seemed to be dearer to him than the salvation of his soul. After he had told Jesus all his good qaulities, Christ said, One thing thou lackest, go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor and thou shall have treasures in heaven, and come take up thy cross and follow me. And he was sad at that saying and went away grieved, for he had great possessions.

His rihgteousness was defective and could not stand the test. He had imagined himself to be perfect without the spirit of God in his heart. He came inquiring, What shall I do to have eternal life?

When the heart is not right with God we cannot expect much sincerity. There must be the spiritual quickening before we are prepared to work for Christ. As long as we never experience this we lack the most essential thing. Sometimes the lack of one thing, in most special circumstances may be the lack of everything. The wedding garment at the feast, the robe of Christ's righteousness at the judgment, the passport at the gate of heaven, this is everything. We might possess all other qualifications but if we lack these things we are lost forever.

Deeds May Be Spoiled.

If a man lacks principle you say he lacks the essential thng. This lack spoils his best deeds, makes him utterly unreliable. If he be untrue, this is fatal before God and man. And this is that one thing, the lack of a true and proper Christian principle in all one's actions, which the judgment day will expose and denouce with fearful sverity.

And now when men were puzzled at the change, when friends crowded around the cured man to inquire into the miraculous cure, and some said it was impossible for a man by word to, open the eyes of one born blind. He answered out of his own experience, one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see, and when they continued asking questions and doubting the power of the one curing him, claiming that he must be a sinner, and he said, "I know not what this man may be, sinner or saint, but as for me, one thing I know that I am he that once was blind but now I see.' He had really experienced his change and no man could convince him that he was wrong. He was natural blind. He had never seen anything although others had often explained he could not understand. Now he sees it all. It comes flashing upon him light out of darkness.

tI did not matter what the Pharisess or Sribes or his own people asserted. All this did not disturb him in the least in this one thing which he certainly and undeniably knows for himself. If the poor blind sinners could only realize their blindness thev would have hopes. The spiritual blind imagine that they can see much better than the true servants of God and as long as they remain in this condition they are like blind Nicodemus, groping about by night, in the presence of the Master, asking how can these things be. The fourth passages set forth true religion in the heart. It is the Psamlist's fervent desire and harty wish that absorbs his whole soul and swallows up all the passiosns of his being.

One thing I have desired of the Lord all the days of my life. To behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in His temple. Here is the one longing desire of a hungry soul. A soul filled with the spirit of God. David, we are told was a man of prayer, and the whole desire of his life wa sto dwell in the house of the Lord. He had found the one thing needful.

When such a desire rests in our hearts we are finding rest and peace for our souls. When such a person comes into the courts of God's house and you can see the delight springing forth from his countenance. He does not do this because there is constraint but out of a hearty choice because that is his home. The fifth passage was spoken b ythe apostle Paul. This one thing I do. This man of gigantic enterprises, and of vast and varius exploits, whom you see at Jerusalem, at Athens, at Cornitn, at Ephesus, at Rome confronting all opposition, refuting all sophistries, establishing and supervising churches, yet it is only one thing that he does. The sun does only one thing, it shines for all. Every true Christian should do this one thing, live for Christ and the church. If we have not been giving heed to these things we should begin now. Do not put off longer, now is the acceptable time, now is the day of salvation. We have started on the road to eternity and we must journey onto the end, either to be with Jesus or Satan. There remains with each one but one thing. Are you doing it? Are you doing this one thing well?

IMPROVEMENTS TO MUSIC STORE CONTEMPLATED

William J. Bogue, the progressive piano-dealer, is planning extensixe improvements to his building in South 1st st. Work will begin in the near future. Mr. Bogue intends to devote more floor space to his piano business and the sale of musical instruments and phonographs, and may erect an addition in the rear of the building for his bicycle and sporting goods departments.

STUFFING THE KING

A Dusky Kongo Monarch Who Fairly Reveled In Roast Pig.

HE WAS KIND TO HIS WIVES.

Anything on the Menu That Didn't Tempt His Dainty Taste Was Passed to Them, but When His Favorite Dish Came on It Was All His Very Own.

During his residence in the Kongo town of San Salvador John H. Weeks had many strange experiences, which he relates in his book, "Among the Primitive Bakongo," but one of the most entertaining pictures that he draws of the strange habits and customs of the people depicts the king, whose naivete and childish guilelessness are in strong contrast to the characteristics of his European contemporaries.

Occasionally, says Mr. Weeks, we invited him to dinner, and the piece de resistance was a sucking pig, which in those days we could buy for a shilling's worth of cloth or beads. Although his house was 400 yards away, he always came in his state hammock, carried by six of his headmen. Fortunately the headmen were strong and in the prime of life; otherwise the king's weight would have taxed them too much.

The hammock was of native cotton, grown, dyed and woven in a neighboring village. It was covered with red cloth adorned with tassels and bells, and a canopy was arranged to shield the rider from the sun. As there were no clocks in the palace, we asked our guest to come at sunset, and no sooner was the sun below the horizon than we heard the shouts of the people as they accompanied the king's hammock to the station.

As he got nearer we could hear the tinkling of the ferret bells on the hammock, the hurried, heavy breathing of the hammock carriers and their short, sharp sentences of direction to one another. They were not at all sorry to lower the hammock at our door, where we stood ready to receive and welcome him, who, although black, had come in the most kingly manner he knew and was certainly very dignified in most of his ways and words.

The boys quickly put the dinner on the table, and the king eyed every dish hungrily. I said to him one day when I was visiting him in his courtyard and we were both in a joking mood, "Do you know what the poorer class of English boys do when they are invited to a feast?"

"No," he said. And as he saw me hesitate he asked, "Well, what do they do?"

"Why, they eat very little all day," I replied, "so as to have plenty of room for the feast."

The old man rolled with laughter, snapped his fingers, slapped his thighs, and tears came from his eyes as he said: "Why, white man, that is what I do, but I did not know that anybody else was cute enough to think of that. But, Mfumu Weekisi, I am smarter than those white boys, for I don't eat anything all day when I am coming to take dinner with you at sunset." After that I could understand the hungry look in his eyes as he watched the dishes put on the table.

Native provisions of all kinds were very cheap, and by sacrificing one or two tins of preserved goods we were generally successful in working out a menu of six or seven single courses. Soup made of fowl and goat bones, with odd bits of meat and seasoning, a tin of fresh herrings baked or fried, a roast fowl, stewed goat, roast sucking pig and baked rice pudding with stewed papaws were our dishes. Our drinks were lime juice made from fresh limes and coffee grown in the district.

The king would squat on the ground, with a row of five or six favorite wives immediately behind him and the six headmen who carried the hammock standing against the wall. The king would take a few spoonfuls of soup and pass the rest down with a piece of bread to his waiting wives, who would quickly and quietly finish them.

The fish he would eat all up, because it came from the white man's country, while the wives pouted their disappointment. We would give him a liberal share of the fowl, but that was so common that after he had selected the best pieces the rest was finished by the expectant wives.

Goat came next, but was treated with as scant courtesy as that bestowed on the fowl, and meanwhile the old man would turn his eyes repeatedly toward the roasted pig.

When at last that was put before us we piled his plate with a liberal portion, which rapidly disappeared, while all the time his wives were making mouths in the semidarkness. He would grunt assent to more when we asked him, and again we would load his plate. It was the moment for which he had lived all the long hours of that day, for he had heard that the white man had bought a pig for dinner.

Farcical Roles.

An American actor of versatile talents was asked recently what type or rôle is most difficult to play. "The farcical," he answered. "To enact farce successfully one must play with deadly seriousness. Half the effect is gone once you begin to act your part lightly. The constant strain to maintain this mock seriousness is, of course, exhausting, since you have no outlet for your emotions."

HIS FORMAL REPRIMAND.

It Was Not Exactly the Kind He Was Asked to Administer.

Dr. Simon Parvin, an English clergyman, was at times absurdly absentminded. Once while he was visiting in the home of a very great lady who employed a large staff of servants, whom she kept under extremely rigid control, it chanced that two young footmen fell out about a pretty housemaid who had coquetted with both and so far forgot themselves as to engage in fisticuffs. The old countess was indignant. Her first intention was to dismiss the culprits, but they were excellent servants, and, moreover, the repentant maid tearfully interceded for them. The countess relented so far as to reduce the sentence to a formal reprimand before the other servants—a reprimand in the nature of a moral lecture to be duly administered by her distinguished guest. At her earliest request—she was herself confined to her room by gout—Dr. Parvin, a man of imposing presence and resonant voice, permitted himself to be escorted to the servants' hall. On his return she sent for him to come to her chamber to relate the result of his mission.

"A fine couple," said Dr. Parvin. "I should say, an excellent match."

"Match?" inquired the countess. "What match? Has the silly girl made up her mind between them, then? I vow, I thought she meant to jilt them both, and serve the boobies right. Pray tell me, how did John and Thomas receive their reprimand?"

"John? Thomas? Reprimand?" echoed Dr. Parvin vaguely; then, with a sudden dismaying flash of memory: "Dear me, I fear I have made a singular mistake! When I entered the room the younger servants were at the far end in a group, and the butler and housekeeper were together, quite near, immediately in front of me, in fact, standing side by side, and—in short, madam, I married them!"

He had, indeed; but, although astonished, they were fortunately not unwilling. They had, it happened, long been contemplating matrimony and were deterred only by fear of the countess' disapproval. Believing that she would not disapprove the act of her eminent guest, they had readily abetted Dr. Parvin in his error. The countess was angry, but her anger fell chiefly upon the absentminded divine. She gave him a piece of her mind that—if he had been any one else—he would not easily have forgotten.—Youth's Companion.

Two Ways of Studying Music.

Picture to yourself a little girl of seven or eight seated before that ponderous and portentous mass of iron, steel, wood, wires and hammers which we call a "pianoforte" (sixty pounds of tender, delicate humanity trying to express itself through a solid ton), her legs dangling uncomfortably in space, her little fingers trying painfully to find the right key and at the same time to keep in a correct position, struggling hard the while to relate together two strange things, a curious black dot on a page and an ivory key two feet below it, for neither of which she feels much affection. And then picture to yourself the same child at its mother's knee or with other children singing with joy and delight a beautiful song.—Thomas Whitney Surette in Atlantic.

A Matter of Money.

A wealthy stockbroker who gave an imposing dinner, says the London Telegraph, dilated with much pride, but with mangled English, on the delicacies that he had provided. Everything in season and out of season, he declared, was at the disposal of his guests.

"I notice you have no aspirates," observed one of them quietly.

"No more I 'ave," replied the stockbroker, with crestfallen visage, "but if money can get 'em," he added, "I'll 'ave some of the best in the market next time you're 'ere."

SECRETS OF A GUN

The Famous French 75 and Its Wonderful Mechanism.

IT HAS TWO HIDDEN DEVICES.

These Are the Fuse Setter and the Recoil Absorber, and They Make This Monster Weapon a Most Fearful Engine of Death and Destruction.

What is a 75? By this is conversationally understood a French field gun, the caliber, or interior diameter of the bore, of which is seventy-five millimeters. Incidentally it is the finest man killing machine the world has yet known.

In 1898 France surprised the armies of the world by the introduction of an artillery weapon which till then had only existed in the dreams of experts.

Till this period the slowness of artillery fire was due to the fact that after the gun was laid and fired the shock of discharge so upset the aim that the gun had to be relaid for a second shot. The rapidity of fire thereupon became a matter of how quickly and accurately a gun could be laid by the personal skill of the layer. The French, seeking artillery progress and confronted with the inexorable shortness of their conscripts' period of training, sought to improve in mechanism what they could not improve in personal skill.

Briefly, the new French field gun of 1898 ceased to be attached to its axletree, but was attached instead to a buffer in a cradle, which not only absorbed the shock of recoil, but ran back the gun so exactly into its former position that no second laying was necessary.

The primary trouble of laying having been got over, rapidity of fire appeared to have been attained. Experiments then proved that, though a rapid rate of fire was possible, this rate was only as fast as that at which the gunners could adjust the fuses of the shells.

How now improve the rate of fuse setting? This task was and is a matter of meticulous accuracy, needing careful training to be done correctly. Moreover, it could not be hurried, since a shell badly fused by ever so little was not only innocuous to the enemy, but was a danger to one's own side. Once more the French put aside any idea of brisking up the personnel and invented a machine to set the fuse. The details of this fuse setter are still a secret. Let it suffice that it is simple, accurate and very rapid in its work. Thanks to it and to the steadiness of the gun after each discharge, the French field gun is easily capable of twenty-five aimed rounds a minute.

One more word about the recoil absorber and the secret thereof. The recoil is taken up by a cylinder beneath the gun, which contains a combination of glycerin, compressed air and springs. It is this combination and the exact proportions thereof which make the secret of the gun. It is not even ascertainable from a captured gun, since if you take a cold chisel to it and try to examine the works by opening the buffer the compressed air escapes, and the secret which lies in its density evaporates with it.

Having solved the question of the rate of fire you would have thought that the French would have been content. Not they! Range and accuracy were successively taken in hand. Muzzle velocity, which, after all, means range, was increased not by increasing the charge and with it the thickness of the gun that withstood it, but by lengthening the gun to a hitherto unheard of extent and giving it a slow burning propellant.

The temptation to put in a lighter shell and so get it farther on the same bang was successfully resisted. The designers never lost sight of the fact that the primary object of the gun was to deliver death to its enemies at the greatest speed, range and effectiveness possible. So they concentrated their energies on a man killing shrapnel which in the end weighed sixteen pounds and left the gun on its long journey at the unprecedented pace of 1,739 foot-seconds.

And there you have the present shrapnel.

Tactics here began to get mixed up with mechanics and ballistics. It was pointed out that troops would not always remain in the open to be whiffed out of existence by shrapnel. Rather would they get under cover at what speed they might. So a shell to deal with entrenchments, buildings and fortifications was indicated. Here again careful thought showed the need of accurate gunnery and a still higher velocity in the shell which, being more local in its effects, could not be allowed the same latitude in its action as its shrapnel confrere.

So a high explosive shell weighing only 11.68 pounds was introduced. Thanks to the chemists this time, its contents were of such a startling nature that its weight became a secondary consideration. It raced away on its mission at a velocity at that time unequaled even by the latest small bore rifle, and when it exploded its melinite charge blew great holes in the scenery. — Pousse Cailloux in Blackwood's Magazine.

FRESH CURTAINS.

How to Make Home Laundering Really Effectual.

AN EXPERT SPEAKS UP.

After Twenty Years' Experience With Window Hangings, a Professional Tells Us Just How to Manage Unruly Frames and Sopping Wet Curtains.

"Many women," says an expert, "think that the proper way to mount a curtain on a stretcher is to first fasten down each of the four corners and then to stretch the edges into shape by pulling from the corners.

"This is entirely a mistake, and curtains mounted in this way are almost sure to have the mesh broken or torn in several places, even if the pattern and the scalloped edges dry to look straight and even.

"In mounting a lace curtain over a stretcher, one should always begin at the middle point of the long border edge. Slip this over the pin at the center on the top edge of the frame; then, working from the center, first to the right and then to the left, slip the successive scallops over pins until the entire long border edge is attached to the pins on the upper bar of the frame.

"The curtain is now hanging with its unpatterned edge falling loosely downward. The next step is to attach the bottom end of the curtain to the frame pins. This usually has the same border as the long, patterned edge. In fastening it to the stretcher work downward from one of the top corners until you have all the patterned edge attached to the pins.

"Now notice how many inches on the top bar of the frame are covered by the long border edge and how many inches at the side and then adjust the remaining two sides of the frame to correspond exactly in the number of inches. Fasten the other short edge of the curtain, which will be the top edge when hung, and lastly fasten the other long edge to the frame pins.

"The last edge may have to be puckered a little to make it fit over the pins, but the puckering will not show when the curtains are dry, and, what is more to the point, the edge will not pull down after it is dry.

"One other thing that should be emphasized is that the long border or patterned edge of lace curtains should always be dried at the top of the frame. Removing the curtains from the stretcher after they are dry requires some care. One should not try to take the edges from the pins until the frame has been sufficiently loosened, so that there will be no strain on the delicate mesh; otherwise threads are almost sure to be strained and broken.

"A curtain stretcher to be entirely satisfactory should have movable pins and should be made of well seasoned wood. Stretchers having stationary pins may or may not have the pins placed at intervals which will match the scallops in the particular curtains one wishes to clean, and unless they happen to match exactly the size of the scallops it is not possible to dry the scallops in good shape. Stretchers which have movable pins can be perfectly adjusted to either large or small scallops."

American Chop Suey.

Two pounds of veal from the shoulder or leg will be required for the chop suey. Cut into cubes and fry lightly in a little butter. Add a tiny bit of onion, two bananas cut in cubes and a small can of button mushrooms sliced. Season highly with salt and pepper and add half a teaspoonful of curry powder. When the bananas and mushrooms are brown cover with cold water and simmer for twenty minutes; thicken slightly and serve. The bananas may be omitted and celery substituted if desired.

The Semi-Princess Suspender Frock.

Usurping the function of the overblouse, the skeleton waist is merged with the skirt to form this semi-princess frock. Checked voile with a guimpe of batiste is the ideal combination.

The beauty of the skeleton modes is their convenient economy. While the usual dress itself escapes evidences of wear and tear, it is a difficult matter to protect the neck and sleeves. Therefore the designs which permit the wearing of a guimpe which can be changed frequently are very acceptable. In medium size this dress requires 4¼

The front and back gore of the yards 44-inch checked cotton voile. dress are cut in one piece to emphasize the princess effect. This section of the pattern, marked "A" is laid on a lengthwise fold of the goods, when cutting, with the back to the right of it. The back of the waist is also placed on a lengthwise fold, but the side gore of the skirt, the inserted section and the stay are placed on a lengthwise thread.

Equally as simple as the cutting is the construction of the princess. The front is first slashed about 1 inch above and below the small "o" perforations, which are forward of large "O" perforation. Finish edges for openings to pass a straight 2 inch belt through: close belt to the left of center-front underneath the slash. Sew inserted front section to front as notched.

Join back and back gore, notches and center-backs even: gather along the seam between double "TT" perforations; and ¼ inch above and below the seam. Close under-arm and shoulder seams as notched, leaving under-arm seam free below the slashed edges.

Next, form inverted plait in side gore, creasing on lines of slot perforations and bring the folded edges together on line of small "o" perforations and press. Turn under the edges of front and back gores on slot perforations, lap to lines of small "o" perforations in side gore, notches even; stitch and press to position and close seams underneath. Stitch upper edge of side gore to position with the inverted plait at under-arm seam.

COCOANUT PUDDING.—Mix a cupful and a half of stale cake with a cupful each of grated cocoanut and sugar, the yolks of three eggs, beaten, and two cupfuls of hot milk. Stand for half an hour, then add a teaspoonful of vanilla and a little grated nutmeg and the stiff whites of three eggs. Bake in a buttered pudding dish for forty minutes and serve with a liquid sauce.

Butterscotch Pie.—One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of brown sugar, four eggs, four tablespoonfuls of flour, seven-eighths cupful of granulated sugar, one cupful of milk, few grains of salt, one-half teaspoonful of lemon extract, flaky pastry. Melt sugar, add butter and flour blended together, then the milk. Cook three minutes, remove from heat, add egg yolks slightly beaten and the salt, strain if necessary and cool.

Lemon Snaps.—A cupful of butter and two of sugar beaten to a foamy cream. Add to this two eggs and the grated rind of one large lemon with its juice and a scant teaspoonful of soda dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of sweet milk. Knead very stiff with flour, roll out very thin, cut out in shapes with tin cutter and bake in quick oven.

Baked Apple Glace.—Wash and core red apples. Fill centers with sugar, cinnamon and cloves. One-half teaspoonful cinnamon, one-eighth teaspoonful cloves to one-half cupful of sugar is a good proportion. A few nut meats can also be added. Then place in a baking dish, barely cover the bottom with boiling water, put on the lid and bake slowly until of a dark, rich red color. FOR THE CHILDREN

A Sleepy Time Story About a Very Remarkable Bird.

WAR EAGLE OF THE SIXTIES.

About a Baby Camel Which Was Born In a Circus and Nursed on a Bottle. Many Interesting and Amusing Things For Little Folk.

As Memorial day will soon be here, Uncle Ben told the children this story about

AN AMERICAN EAGLE.

The eagle has always been the emblem of power and courage. It is pictured in many ways, the most popular way being spread out. This is called the spread eagle.

The United States in 1785 adopted the bald eagle, its wings displayed, as the national emblem. You know that sailors and soldiers always make a pet of something and take it with them on their trips. Well, in the civil war the Wisconsin soldiers took with them as their mascot a young eagle.

It is very hard to get an eagle from its nest, for the nests are usually very high up and in lonely places. An Indian once managed to steal a very young eagle from its nest, and he sold it to a soldier. The soldier named it "Abe," for he intended to present the bird to Abraham Lincoln when the war closed. The soldiers all made a great fuss over this bird. At mustering in they decorated him with red, white and blue ribbons, tying the colors around its neck and putting an immense rosette on its breast. The color bearer, the tallest man in the regiment, carried "Abe" on a staff, which was placed a little above the colors.

When any orders were given the colors and the eagle were always first in place. It would sit very still and look from side to side to see if everything was all right. When battles were being fought it would scream and flap its wings as if to cheer the soldiers. It seemed to understand all the orders given to the men.

Once when the men were ordered to lie on the ground it flew down and stretched flat beside the soldiers. When they got up it flew to the top of its perch again, so the story goes.

It went through twenty-two battles and thirty skirmishes and was wounded three times.

When the war was over it traveled all over the country and received as much homage as a great man. A veteran was detailed to take care of it and was well paid for doing so.

The bird died in 1881, and its skin was stuffed and put in the state capitol. But it was later burned in a great fire.

The Common Hen.

When you come right down to natural history facts there is no beast or bird about which a boy or girl knows more than about the common barnyard hen, which is a very industrious individual. But there may be some boys and girls who do not know, that the hen and her male companion, the rooster, came originally from Asia. In the jungles of India they used to roam wild and were great fighters. When a couple of them engaged in battle the one that was victorious would shout it out with loud crowing.

There is also a negro variety that has not only black feathers, but a black skin.

You no doubt have seen the Cochins that came originally from China, and you may have heard or read that the Greeks and Romans and the Egyptians thought a great deal of the hen.

A Valuable Tree.

Whittier, in Los Angeles county, can perhaps claim the most valuable fruit tree in California. It is an avocado (alligator pear) and is insured against wind and fire by Lloyd's of London to the amount of $20,000. This tree in 1914 produced 3,000 pears, which averaged the grower 50 cents each; it also produced $1,500 worth of bud wood, making a total production of $3,000 for the year.

A Menagerie Infant.

a cute and awkward little fellow, covered with soft brown hair. Sad to say, the baby's mother was unable to nurse him, so the kind hearted keeper fitted a rubber nipple on the neck of a bottle, and little Mr. Camel soon learned how to take his meals.

Points For Young Housekeepers About Shellfish.

HOW TO DETECT BAD MEATS.

If the Caterer For a Family Knows the Difference Between Fresh and Stale Foodstuffs Ptomaine Poisoning and Other Serious Ills May Be Avoided.

Smoked meats and fish are bad when they are flabby to the touch and have a rancid, sour smell.

Glassed meat products are bad when they have a rancid, sour smell and when the color differs from the fresh product.

Good fresh pork is solid, has pure white fat and pink flesh. Do not buy pork that is soft and yellow.

Remember that lamb or mutton should be firm, close grained and light red in color, with fat that is white and hard.

Beef should be of a rosy red color, with cream colored, firm, elastic fat and scarcely moist when touched with the finger. Do not buy wet, flabby beef that is pale and purple.

All shellfish should smell fresh, and the shells should close firmly when put into water or touched with the finger. Shellfish should be alive when cooked.

Fresh veal is pale red (unless milk fed, when it is light), with firm, white fat between the muscles and surrounding tissues and scarcely moist to the touch. Bad veal is soft, mushy, sticky and has a very red tinge, while the fat has a grayish lead color.

Fresh fish should have red gills, moist, bright scales and clear eyes and should be firm and rigid when handled. Stale fish is flabby, has dull scales, the eyes are sunken and covered with a film, the gills are pale or of greenish color, and the fish has a bad odor. All lumpy fish should be rejected as the growth may be cancer.

To detect decomposing meats in cans before opening inspect the ends of the can and if they bulge, discard the can. This bulging is due to accumulated gases of decomposition that push the ends outward by force of pressure. Leaking and rusty cans should also be discarded. Canned meats should be free from mold. The odor of such meats should be the same as when freshly prepared. If the meat is putrid exposure to heat will make it possible to detect the foul odor.

Value of the Kangaroo's Tail.

So important is the kangaroo's tail in his rapid progress that experienced hunters with guns are accustomed to fire at the point where this appendage joins the body, when, the tail being disabled for its office of balancing, the animal is as effectually stopped as if hamstrung. Hit elsewhere, except with a rifle bullet at point blank range, the kangaroo is pretty likely to get off. One peculiarity of the kangaroo is that, after being started up, he very rarely swerves from his course, through which peculiarity he is easily "potted" by hunters, who conceal themselves while a man on horseback drives the herd toward them.

JOB E. HEDGES FOR U. S. SENATE

The Watertown Times figures that Job E. Hedges maintains some strength in these parts, saying as follows:

Job E. Hedges for United States senator on the ticket of the Old Guard.

That is the latest political gossip concerning candidacies, and it is said that the organization will name Mr. Hedges as a candidate to run against former Representative William M. Calder. Hedges for senator and Root for president would have the backing of the Old Guard in this state.

It seems to be a case of not loving Hedges more, but Calder less. The organization is said to be decidedly anti-Calder, and it is willing to go to any length to beat the Brooklyn man. If Hedges is the man that can do it, Hedges will be the organization candidate.

There is another contingency, however, which is to be taken into consideration. Senator Elon R. Brown has been prominently mentioned for United States senator. He would have the backing of the organization, and if the organization feels that an up-state man can make a better run against Calder than Hedges, the up-state man will be the choice of the organization.

Hedges is not losing any sleep over it, according to reports. He has said or give up his law practice to get it, but if his friends want to put his name on the primary ballot, he will run. While Hedges will not discuss his own candidacy, he is outspoken in his admiration for Root. He says kind words of Roosevelt, too, declaring that his admirers want a man of spine in the presidency, and that no one can accuse Roosevelt of lacking this part of his anatomy. Root, he says, has both spine and brains, and is every bit as able.

It is believed that either Mr. Hedges or Mr. Calder would make a good run in northern New York. Mr. Calder is an ardent advocate of adequate preparedness and this would probably be one of the principal guns which he would fire in his campaign.

ABOUT THE TOWN

The barge canal, Oswego division, will open for traffic Monday next, and the locktenders and other employes of the local division are busy giving the machinery which swings the huge gates a thorough overhauling. Myron A. Stranahan, division superintendent, will make a trip of inspection along the Oswego canal before the opening date, and an inspection trip by the state canal officials has also been planned.

The work of remodeling the front of the John R. Sullivan block on West Broadway, which has been delayed somewhat by bad weather during the past two weeks, will be resumed in earnest next Monday. It is expected that the installation of the new front and windows will consume the better part of two weeks, but business will be continued as usual during the progress of the work.

Mr. Sullivan will have about 300 square feet of window space when the work is completed, and the store front will incorporate the latest and most modern improvements in display windows. One window, that nearer West 3d st. will be slightly larger than the other. The entrance will be upon West Broadway, as before and will be 12 feet deep. The upper parts of the display windows will be constructed of prism glass, and the two steel girders which support the corners of the building will be enclosed in mirrors.

A difference in opinion between Harry M. O'Brien, City Sealer, and Mayor Lewis, regarding the location of a certain street in Pulaski, was the occasion of a spirited but friendly argument in City Hall yesterday. Every available city official was called in to render an opinion, and the debaters finally decided to make a trip to the county seat for the express purpose of settling the discussion. The trip will be made in the Mayor's car, either tomorrow or early next week.

A delegation from the Fulton Masonic lodge, comprising William Howard, Amos Beadle, Burt Van Buren, W. H. Spanswick, Charles Brooks and W. C. Morgan, motored to Pulaski Wednesday evening for the purpose of visiting the Masonic chapter there. The visitors were royally entertained by the Pulaski members. The trip back to this city was delayed somewhat by a short circuit in the lighting system of the taxicab, and the Fultonians spent nearly an hour in the rain and wind before they were able to proceed.

"Big Jim" Frawley and "Little Jim" Keeler, two Fultonians, who are attending Dean Academy near Boston, are keeping their native town in the limelight by their scholastic, athletic and social accomplishments at the school. The latest wire from the halls of learning states that Keller is unanimously voted the best singer in the institution, and is in great demand at social gatherings because of his likeable personality and mellow voice.

Frawley is still showing the way to his schoolmates in athletic competition and is assured of a high place on the track team this spring. He has already received several offers of scholarship from advanced colleges because of the reputation he has made for himself as a football player, and intends to continue with a college course after his graduation from Dean this June. Keeler has won his spurs as a regular on the school baseball team.

The Fulton High school boys play the first game of the 1916 baseball season today at the Fair grounds. In spite of the cold weather, great interest is manifest in school circles in the work of the team, and it is certain that a large crowd of students will be on hand to give their support.

It is rumored around City Hall that "The Lobster," the neat little weekly that afforded Fultonians so much amusement for some weeks during the past winer, is "not dead, but sleeping," and will make its appearance again in the near future. Some few minor changes in the editorial staff will be made, however, owing to the inability of some of the contributors to spare the time from their official duties.

Anyone who is familiar with its condition at times in the past is willing to concede that South 1st st. between City Hall and the lower bridge is in a cleaner condition today than for some time. The fire department, under the direction of Chief Waugh and Frank Rumsey, director of Public Works, was at work early this morning, and the entire street was flushed and given a thorough cleaning. In aaccordance with the idea fostered by the Chamber of Commerce, along the lines that the city should be kept in first-class sanitary condition the year round, and not allowed to run down so that an annual clean-up is required, it might not be amiss to suggest that the flushing process be made a regular event. Two flushings a week would consume very little water comparatively, and would go far toward keeping the thoroughfare in fine condition.

Work of renovating the old Hunter home for the occupancy of the Knights of Columbus is progressing rapidly. During the week past the lawns have been graded and repairs made on the side porch. Steel ceilings are now being erected in the council room, which will occupy the entire upper floor, and work on the library, billiard-room, parlors and reception hall is nearing completion.

The Knights plan to celebrate the opening of their new home by the initiation of the largest class of candidates in the history of the Council, and a thorough canvass of all the eligible young men in the city and outlying districts is now being made. The members of the Council hope to swell the roll by the addition of at least seventy-five new members by the time the new home is ready for occupancy.

It is reported from authoritative sources that a prominent Oneida st. attorney, for many years a bachelor (since birth in fact), is seriously contemplating matrimony, and is preparing to surprise his many friends with the announcement of his wedding in the near future. Much secrecy veils the event, but a choice few of the gentleman's cronies have advance information of the affair.

MRS. ALLEN'S FUNERAL

The ashes of Mrs. Florence Burdick Allen will arrive here Monday evening for burial. Mrs. Allen died in Denver late in April, the body being cremated there. The Rev. C. S. Robertson, pastor of the Presbyterian church, will be in charge of the services at Mt. Adnah cemetery.

Mrs. Allen is remembered affectionately by many of the residents of Fulton. She at one time lived at Cayuga and 3d sts.

"FAKE" ADS COME UNDER NEW RULE

New York.—"Some men who now hold their heads pretty high are going to be hit pretty hard by the new law against fake advertisements," said District Attorney Edward Swann, who took occasion to denounce the foes of military preparedness in an address upon commercial frauds before the Arkwright Club, at No. 320 Broadway, yesterday afternoon.

"I already have got one man, and he is the most contrite person imaginable," said Mr. Swann. "He did not know about the decision of the United States Supreme Court against the New South Farm and Home Company, and while he gave value to purchasers he misrepresented his goods in making sales. He was promptly convicted and allowed to go on a suspended sentence, but I am confident the goods one buys of him in the future will not be misrepresented."

Mr. Swann said that decision by the Supreme Court was a landmark and that now advertisers may not misrepresent their goods in making sales, although they do give value for the money received. "The use of untrue, misleading and deceptive statements in advertising merchandise is a crime, although the purchasers may get good value for his money," Mr. Swann said. "He is defrauded when he is misled by the representations of the seller. The law does not even say 'false representations.' Purchasers have no time to investigate representations. The seller must protect the purchaser."

Temperance Forces Filled Peacock's Big Auditorium Last Night

One of the most enthusiastic congregations of the entire campaign, attended the evangelistic services at the Tabernacle last night. More than 2,000 people crowded into the large auditorium, and the attendance included several hundred people from outside the city.

The night was designated as Woman's Christian Temperance Union night, and the Fulton Union, accompanied by a delegation from Hannibal, and members of the Fulton Lodge, Order of Good Templars and the Young People's Branch of the Union, paraded to the tabernacle in a body, and occupied seats reserved for them near the rostrum. The delegation from Hannibal numbered 100; I. O. G. T., 100; W. C. T. U., 250, and Y. P. B., 175.

As the Templars took their seats they gave a yell, written for the occasion,

"Who are we, who are we, who are we?
We are Fulton I. O. G. T."

The Young People's Branch sang an appropriate song to the tune, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," the words written by Miss Ethel Knapp. A yell, written by Miss Helen Balch, was also rendered with vigor by the young people.

Many banners were carried by the delegation, bearing such inscriptions as "A Saloonless Nation in 1920"; "Vote Right for Our Sakes," which was carried by Ivan Dodge, followed by two little boys and eight small girls, all bearing white banners; "Vote as You Pray"; "W. C. T. U. for God and Home and Every Land"; "Safety First Means Sober First;" and "We Appeal for Protection—A Saloonless Nation in 1920," on two large banners, adorned the north wall of the tabernacle.

Luther Knox Peacock, the evangelist, was presented with a huge bouquet of white carnations by the Fulton W. C. T. U., and Chorister Warth sang, "What Will You Do With Jesus?"

It was announced that the sermon tonight will be on "Hell," and one of the largest attenances of the campaign is forecasted. Tomorrow afternoon Rev. Mr. Peacock will preach on "Booze," and this sermon will be for men only.

FULTON CLEANER TODAY THAN EVER BEFORE; TONS OF RUBBISH COLLECTED

The results of the clean-up campaign inugurated by the Chamber of Commerce were clearly seen this morning when eight automobiles carrying city officials and the chairmen of the various committees appointed by the Chamber to supervise the campaign made a tour of all the city streets and at the conclusion of the trip it was the unanimous opinion of the delegation that the efforts of the persons engaged i nthe campaign were well rewarded.

In even the remotest parts of the city could be seen evidences of the clean-up work. It was also noted that properties which had been complained of as being untidy and unsanitary had received the attention of the owners during the week.

Mayor Lewis led the procession in his automobile which left the Chamber of Commerce rooms at 10 o'clock and first visited the eastern section of the city. The route lay through E. 1st st. to Broadway to 3d st. State and Pratt sts. were traversed, after which the line followed 4th st. to Oneida, out Oneida to 7th st. Erie st. and Ontario st. showed a vast improvement in appearance. In passing the high school building, the persons in the automobiles were pleased at the sight of Miss Nancy Cook, a teacher, with several pupils engaged in destroying rubbish in the vacant lot directly across from the school building.

With the exception of a few blocks in the vicinity of Phillips st., the wagons had collected all the refuse left in receptacles at the curb. A number of unsightly ash piles were seen. Vacant lots, it was noted, were being filled with clean white ashes. At the conclusion of the trip, the statement was made by one of the committee that it would be a disgrace if the clean-up movement was not made a permanent feature in the community.

Last night's huge bonfire on the north-end flats turned out to be what was predicted for it—the funeral pyre for about everything not needed for the comfort and convenience of householders. Only a small goup of persons including a part of the fire department under Chief Waugh and Patrolman Sweet and Chief Dyer were present. The small attendance was due, no doubt, to a misunderstanding regarding the hour when the fire was to occur and the absence of the Elks Band.

CITY'S CLAIM AGAINST STATE

William S. Hillick, City Attorney, has filed in the Court of Claims a suit for damages against the State of New York approximately $11,000 seeking to recover the value of the water rights and pipe line which were included in land appropriated by the State for the barge canal.

The land in question, amounting to little more than three acres, was the property of Mary J. and Stephen T. Limbeck, and is situated near the pumping station, north of the city. Durin gthe construction of the barge canal, the state appropriated the land. A city pipe line runs through the property, which affords the only route for a gravity line to the city. The city holds the right to all the water underneath the land, together with the right to lay and maintain a pipe line through the property.

The formal claim values the pipe line at $10,000, the damages for the loss of the city easement and right of way for pipe lines at $50,000, and the damages for loss of water rights at $50,000.

Mr. Hillick was of the opinion this morning that the claim would be settled out of court by the state, and that the city would be allowed to continue and maintain the pipe-line as before.

DEATH OF AN INFANT

Melvin John Herring, 7-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Herring, died at 1 o'clock this morning at the family home, 319 Utica st.

The funeral will be held tomorrow at 1 o'clock. The Rev. H. D. Holmes will officiate and burial will be made in Mt. Adnah cemetery.

WEATHER FORECAST

Generally fair tonight with frosts. Sunday cloudy with moderate West winds.

OSWEGO'S FIVE TWIRLERS FELL BEFORE ATTACKS OF HIGH SCHOOL HITTERS

The attacks of the forces of the German Crown Prince on Verdun fade by comparison with the onslaught of the Fulton High school hitsmiths against the efforts of five Oswego pitchers, yesterday afternoon, when the local lads routed the big-town boys in the first game of the season. The final score was 26-13, and it might have been larger, but the Fulton lads so fatigued themselves with pounding the ball and running bases in the seventh inning, when a grand total of ten runs was amassed, that further strenuous exercise was out of the question.

In the first canto, the Fultonians solved the easy slants of Fitzgerald, who began the hurling for the visitors, and drove him from the mound with a batting rally that netted them five runs. Three hits, coupled with two glaring errors, and some heady base-running by the Fultonians, put five dents in the rubber before the Oswegonians had fully emerged from heir winter's sleep. Dingle, Bray, O'rien, Barnes and Green tallied, and Reynolds reached third base, but was marooned when Lewis and Krauss flied out.

In the second Bray again scored on a hit, a stolen base, and error by Hanley, and Green's safe blow.

Lewis counted in the third when his drive to Reboer was booted, and Krauss and Dingle both hit safely.

In the fourth inning, the complete Fulton batting order had an opportunity to practice on Casey's curves, and six safe hits were gathered, before the namesake of DeWolf Hopper's famous mealticket was steam-shoveled.

After that the Fulton boys rested, but in the seventhe merry-goround got up steam again, and the heavy artillery of thelocals once again found the range of the invaders. The Oswego outfield required first aid when the inning was over, and several of the infielders may recover but they will never look the same.

The visitors made brave attempts to even up the score, and in the fifth and sixth innings they got fairly started, but Barnes always tightened up at critical stages, and his infield afforded him fine support in the pinches.

The game proved that the locals have bolstered up their batting strength, which was one of the weak points of the team last year, and in the field, also, they showed cleverness. Lack of practice, due to the inclement weather, was visible in the work of both teams.

Several long hits featured the battle. Kraus came through with a circuit clout in the sixth frame, and Walker of Oswego also registered a home-run. Ten of the Fultonians made hits for extra bases, while two Oswego players reached second on hard drives.

Barnes fanned eight and issued four passes. The combined efforts of five Oswego twirlers netted seven strike-outs, and eleven Fultonians received passes to first.

JUST MOTHER

Tomorrow will be Mother's Day, and the day should be crowded with beautiful memories for all of us. What a way that dear face and tender hands have of reaching down thru the years to us. How we would that time might turn backward and let undo each thoughtless word and deed; what a busy day we would all have.

How barren a world this would be without its mothers. Mothers make poetry possible, roses fragrant, sunsets glorious, and music entrancing. Her face is sweeter for, tho wrinkled with deep furrows of care and perplexity and of tears, betimes, than that of the most beautiful belle. Hers is a beauty and a sweetness of love, and love always makes a face sweet. It can't do otherwise because it means so much of God. Her silvered brow is bedecked with a crown richer far than any of the earth's kings. Their crowns are set with diamonds and garnished with most precious jewels. Her crown of snowy hair far outshines the fairest jewels; its radiance casts a soft and hallowed glow adown life's pathway.

"And one face, above all others,
Must with peerless luster glow—
Yea, a sweeter, nobler vision
On this earth I ne'er shall know!
'Round that face like clustering jewels,
All bright memories are masked.
For my mother was the princess
Of my palace of the past."

A MODERN DOCTRINE

Speaking in general terms and without binding any member of his church to his statement Rev. A. W. Wishart, pastor of Fountain Street Baptist Church, summarized the tenets of belief held by the majority of the members of his congregation Sunday morning. A part of his statement of belief follows:

"We believe in God as the source of truth, love and goodness; that Jesus is the highest and best interpreter and revealer of the nature and will of God and in man's redemption from sin. Because we believe the goal of religion is a certain type of life or kind of character we also believe that many who do not call themselves Christians nevertheless possess the spirit of Christ and live in harmony with his principles. This view compels us to believe that many who bear the name of Christians are not real followers of Christ.

"The essence of this type of life or kind of character is love of God and man. This love is not a mere sentiment but a dynamic power.

"We believe in the church not as an end but as a means to an end, which is the spread of love and good will on earth. Human welfare is the only standard by which to test the spiritual quality of all our activities. True righteousness with God necessarily involves right human relations. Individual salvation is the beginning of social redemption.

"We believe that these principles of individual and social religion are to be found in the Bible and that these Biblical teachings are the only parts of the Bible that are really of vital importance. We believe in democracy in religion. We don't believe in the right of any church to punish the individual for expressing his religious principles.

"We practice baptism as a sign of spiritual change which has taken place when the believer becomes a follower of Jesus. It does not save the soul. People are Christians with some other form or no baptism. We retain it for its symbolism. We do not believe in or practice close communion. We do not believe in a physical hell or a physical heaven. Hell and heaven are terms that denote spiritual states.

"We believe in immortality without even attempting to describe the soul after death.

"There are four tasks before the church: first, to promote unity; second, to promote true religious education of young and old; third, to promote the kingdom of love on earth, which means that humanity is a bigger and better ideal than nationality, that the real foes of human welfare are disease, ignorance, poverty and sin, to get rid of which is the chief end of man; fourth, to realize the three foregoing ideals the church must believe in education, science, business and politics, all of which need to be directed by spiritually minded people or else they will be man's ruin. We believe in the cross as the symbol that sin is an awful fact and can only be conquered by men who are willing to sacrifice and suffer for the good of mankind."—Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press.

Opinions

ENGLAND'S BLUNDER IN IRELAND

"The Dublin executions," says that stanch organ of British Liberalism the Manchester Guardian, "are becoming an atrocity." They were a terrible blunder in the beginning. To continue them in cold blood heightens the shock to loyal Ireland and to the neutral world. Frightfulness does not become a war waged ostensibly against Frightfulness.—N. Y. World.

KNOCKERS KILL BUSINESS

"Knockers do not kill men, they kill business," is a saying appearing in a publication issued by the New York Central railroad to employes. The originator of this little epigram in eight words made a statement which is deserving of more than passing thought. Spiteful criticism inflicts no physical wounds, but it may easily undermine confidence. And particularly is this the case when it is envious and disgruntled criticism of fellow workers or of the institution by which the critic is employed.

Biting the hand that feeds one has long been a symbol of baseness, and such ingratitude is most deplorable because of the harm it can do to others. The man who "hammers" the business in which he is engaged aims a blow directly at every man on the payroll. His grievance may be against an individual, but it is the work and aims and prospects of the whole institution which suffer.—Carthage Republican.

GOOD WORK

In conducting a filibuster against the "pork" features of the rivers and harbors appropriation bill now pending before the Senate, Mr. Kenyon, of Iowa, and other Senators are doing good work for the nation.

It seems to be the theory of the Democratic commanders of the Pork-Barrel Fleet that the way to meet charges of extravagance is to pile on more extravagance and give everybody a piece. At a time when this Congress is exceeding all other Congresses in appropriations there can be no other explanation of the reckless rush for the "pork barrel" now in evidence at Washington.

Mr. Kenyon and those aiding him in the fight may not be able to prevent the squandering of money upon wholly unmeritorious projects even at a time when money for defence is so greatly needed, but the fight they are making ought to result in placing the responsibility for this squandering just where it belongs. That will help when the day of reckoning comes, as it surely will—N. Y. Herald.

DIRECT LEGISLATION GIVES PEOPLE POWER

Another outworn, old political theory is that the people are not intelligent enough to make good laws for themselves, so they must be confined to picking out a few men more intelligent than the mass of citizens to make the laws.

As things go, we citizens can only get Federal, State and municipal legislation by indirect methods—by electing men to make the laws we want made, which these men then sometimes make and sometimes do not.

Now, the initiative and referendum system gives the people the means of making their own laws without electing anybody to do it for them.

Under that system the will of the people is performed certainly and is performed quickly. Neither are there any legislators to be bribed by corporations to throw the people down.

Wherever the initiative and referendum system is used lobbyists and bribery automatically disappear. For it does not then get vicious interests anything to bribe a Legislature or a body of Aldermen, and it is impossible to bribe the whole people.

You folks will have the best possible government whenever you adopt the initiative and referendum, and you ought to do that very thing just as soon as it can be done.—N. Y. American.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

In Ardmore, Illinois, at the recent election more women voted than men, but the men exceeded the women more than two to one in the number of voters who cast defective ballots.

* * *

In Iowa a suffrage majority of from ten to fifty thousand is predicted by conservatives at the election on June 5. Two prominent Democratic candidates, one for governor and one for attorney general, are reported as refusing to run unless woman suffrage was included in the party platform. This incident is regarded as a straw showing which way the political wind is blowing in the state.

In Table Grove, Illinois, the election resulted in a marked feminization of the town government. Four women trustees, a woman clerk, and a woman treasurer were elected and an announcement made by the mayor that he would appoint a woman marshall. As the number of men who voted far exceeded the number of women, the result cannot be attributed to the desire of women to wrest the control of the political situation away from the men.

In Nevada the League of Women Citizens of Reno are using their political influence to get Congress to protect the grant of seven million acres to the school system of the state so that the land will be sold to actual settlers; and the grant so safeguarded that the legislature will not be able to betray the schools, as it has done in the past, by unlawfully diverting funds and by spending more in selling the land than the land sold for.

On the opening of the baseball season in Washington Congress was in session. The press reports that 400 of the 435 members of the House of Representatives were absent and more than intimates that they were at the ball game. The suffrage press wasted no time in pointing out the folly of electing only baseball fans to Congress and of course suggested votes for women as a sure means of solving the problem.

Two hundred women will go before the voters in Kansas primaries next August and the roll of women officials in counties which now numbers 126 will undoubtedly be materially increased at the fall election. That women seek offices in line with their special department of human society is shown by the fact that the office most sought for by them is that of county superintendent of education. There are also 28 women candidates for register of deeds and four for probate judge.

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS
President American Society for Thrift

Americans are accused of thriftlessness and waste in many particulars, especially the people of the cities, and paper is one source, from the coarse wrapping paper that comes into the home and which might be used again to the fine bond paper used in offices. But now that the price of paper is going up by leaps and bounds owing to the fact that war prevents this country from getting most of the material from which paper is made. Business houses are being advised to lay in a supply of paper now in anticipation of the time soon to come when they will be unable to get any.

In fact, some of the standard papers are even now unobtainable. That some large firms are already anticipating a shortage was brought to the attention of the employes of one of the largest newspaper publishing houses in the West within the month, when old show, fashion, theatrical and political posters were cut up into typewriting paper size, and furnished to members of the staff to be used for "copy" paper.

Children are the greatest destroyers of paper, a habit encouraged in some homes to keep the child occupied, which clings to it in schooldays and often in later life in the business world.

Among the materials essential to the paper industry which central Europe has been supplying are rags, and in 1913, when prices ranged from 2 cents to 6 cents a pound, the imports of rags amounted to over two hundred million pounds, or $2,907,705. These figures will give some idea of our wastefulness when we consider the quantity of rags thrown away every day, with the result that we have to import them from Europe.

One of the recent shining examples of thrift is Patrick Muldoon of Philadelphia. For thirty-five years Patrick Muldoon was employed around a hospital and at no time during that thirty-five years did his wages exceed $30 a month. Part of the time he received less than $30 a month. Yet the other day when he decided to retire and take the rest he had earned, he had $7,200 to his credit. He remarked that he thought that sum sufficient for his old age and added with satisfaction, "I haven't fooled much away." He began to save from his small salary in his young manhood, so that in his old age his savings would take care of him. He did not live for the pleasures of the day, but for the independence of the future, and his old age is sweet with the memories of a prudent past.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

Philadelphia suffragists are planning to conduct curbstone suffrage schools this summer. These schools will be in the nature f open-air debates to be held three evenings of the week on the city hall plaza where summer evening crowds congregate.

The prohibition forces of Alaska are rejoicing over the acquisition of a powerful ally in Mr. E. J. "Stroller" White, the new editor and owner of The Douglas Island News, an influential weekly that has not, heretofore, taken such high ground. Mr. White is one of the veteran newspaper men of Alaska, the wielder of a facile and trenchant pen, and his espousal of the cause of prohibition means much to the present campaign. In his salutatory editorial in the News of April 5, Mr. White says: "Indications are that the temperance sentiment which is now sweeping like a tidal wave over both the United States and Canada, will engulf Alaska in the near future; and, in our belief, the sooner it comes the better it will be, from the standpoint of morality, healthfulness, economy, efficiency and the general public welfare."

GIRL WITH "MOVIEITIS" IS SENT TO A HOME FOR CURE

She Cut Off Hair as Cowgirls Do and Wrecked Rooms a la Film Comedy.

Paterson, N. J.—Rose Rossini, fifteen, of this city, was arraigned before Judge Klenert in the juvenile court, charged with incorrigibility. She had cut off her long brown tresses, and she explained that cowgirls in the movies did it, and she wanted to be a cowgirl.

"I guess you've got a plain case of 'movieitis,'" said the court, "so I am going to send you to the Florence Crittention home until your hair grows again. Perhaps a stay in the home will cure you."

"Why, it'll take a year for my hair to grow back again," cried Rose. "I can't stay there all that time!"

"It will all depend on your behavior," said the court.

Detectives testified that Rose had wrecked rooms in homes where she had been employed because she had seen it done in the movies.

SPEECHLESS A YEAR, SHE SUDDENLY TALKS

Family of Woman Is Astonished When She Says, "I Feel Better Now."

New York.—Suddenly regaining the power of speech she lost through a stroke of paralysis a year ago, Mrs. William Cuppinger, thirty years old, of College Point, N. Y., startled her family by remarking, "I feel better now."

Her long period of silence had been broken while she suffered from what was believed to be grip. She said she first felt a violent snap in her head. This was followed by a buzzing sensation which passed away and left her feeling much better. Finally her speech came in whispers and then was loud enough for those at the bedside to hear.

Dr. Harry M. Biffar, her physician, was greatly astonished at the outcome of the case, for he never expected that Mrs. Cuppinger would ever talk again, He said he thought the loss of her speech was due to the rupture of a blood vessel. A blood clot formed, and the physician used treatment to dissolve it.

CRUSHED BY JUNK IRON.

Victim In a Car Released When Cries Attracted Train Crew.

Lafayette, Ind.—When a westbound Wabash freight train was passing through Lafayette recently the shrieks of a man in distress were heard, and the train was brought to a standstill.

When the train crew investigated it was found that James Fisk of Springfield, Mass., aged twenty-four, had become imprisoned in a car of loose junk iron.

Fisk had been "beating" his way on the train, and a short time before the cries were heard the train had broken in two. When the cars came together with a crash a mass of junk iron slid over on top of Fisk's legs. At the time he was sleeping in the end of a gondola car, and it was impossible for him to free himself. He could not be rescued until the car had been bumped several times to jar the mass of iron away from his legs. He was taken to the hospital in a terribly crushed condition. His cries aroused hundreds of people from their sleep. It is probable he will recover.

CHILDREN EXEMPT HIM.

Father Receives a Canceled Tax Receipt When Sheriff Sees Seven Sons.

Wichita, Kan.—James Gourley, an expressman, appeared at the Sedgwick county courthouse recently to pay his personal taxes, which amounted to $4.79. He did not have the money, but he took along with him his seven children, all boys under thirteen years old.

"It'll work a hardship on me to pay this money," Gourley told Sheriff Frank Sarver, "as I've got my hands full feeding and clothing and keeping these children in school." County officials gathered around the sheriff's office and observed the family, all healthy, clean and happy.

When Gourley left with his seven boys trailing behind him his personal tax receipt was marked paid and each of the children carried a quarter.

SNOOZE JAILS JERSEY RIP.

He Couldn't Support Wife While He Slept and Beat Her When He Woke.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Sleeping may not be a crime, but a little ten day nap netted John Pelfey of this city ten days in the county jail. He was charged by his wife with nonsupport, and she testified that for ten days he had remained constantly in bed. She said he was in the habit of staying in bed for a week at a time and that he always celebrated the end of the nap by beating her.

When court opened a constable was sent for Pelfey and turned him out of bed. It took three officers to dress him.

FAMOUS HORSEBACK RIDERS.

Men Who Won Fame In the Days of the Old Pony Express.

Buffalo Bill Cody, it is believed, holds the record for the longest horseback ride of which there is authentic record. He was one of that gallant band of fourscore pony express riders in the sixties. On one occasion young Cody —he didn't become Buffalo Bill until some years afterward—rode without rest for 322 miles.

When the pony express was started for the purpose of carrying mail from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Cal., a distance of 1,966 miles, it was planned that each rider should cover seventy-five miles in a day on three different horses.

It was soon found that twenty-five miles was too much for the horses for a regular unbroken gallop, and the distance was reduced to from ten to twelve miles. For that distance every horse was pushed to his limit.

The shortest time in which the entire distance of 1,966 miles was covered by pony express riders was made in March, 1861. They carried Lincoln's inaugural address to the Golden State in seven days and seventeen hours, an average speed of over ten and one-half miles an hour.

A rider named Haslam dashed off 120 miles in 8 hours and 10 minutes. Another pony expressman covered one ten mile stretch in 31 minutes, which is better than most of the Rocky Mountain railroad limited trains can do.

The news that Fort Sumter had been fired upon was flashed from St. Joe to Sacramento in eight days and fourteen hours.

Jim Moore once rode 280 miles at an average speed of eighteen miles per hour. The horses were the best that could be obtained, and, as stated before, they made short runs of from ten to twelve miles.

No wonder that sometimes a letter had $27 worth of stamps upon it when carried under such extraordinary conditions!—Philadelphia Ledger.

TOLD BY THREE FIGURES.

A Sum In Arithmetic That Would Take Many Lifetimes to Work Out.

What is the highest number that can be expressed with only three figures? Such is the question put by the Journal of the Astronomical Society of England. At first glance it would seem that the number was 999. But it is nothing of the sort; 999 is far away too small. What, then, is the number? 9^{9^9}—that is to say, the ninth power of the ninth power of 9.

To ascertain what this number actually is we must refer to a table of logarithms, for it would take several lifetimes to do the multiplication. The number contains 369,693,100 figures. To write it out we should have to fill 23 volumes of 800 pages each, with 14,000 figures to a page, and the number would be greater than that of all the atoms in creation.

Henri Coupin points out in La Nature that there are stars so distant that their light, traveling at 186,320 miles a second, takes a million years to reach the earth. Astronomers have taken this as a unit and called it a "million light year." The number of atoms in a sphere of platinum that had that radius would be 225, followed by 88 zeros. Now, a sphere that contained the number of atoms expressed by the ninth power of the ninth power of 9 would have to have a radius (in million light years) of 1,239, followed by 123,231,000 zeros.

And yet this colossal number can be expressed by three figures.

Tame Silk.

There is more silk in the world than the silkworm ever knew. As a matter of fact, much of the "silk" which is worn is merely guncotton in a new dress. It is merely cotton dissolved in a bath of nitric acid, kept water free by the strongest vitriol. The jelly-like result is then forced through very minute tubes, and the fine threads so produced are dropped into water and rendered innocuous by ammonium sulphide. This "tame silk" has a fine luster and has all the flexibility of the worms' work. In fact, so close is the resemblance that it needs an expert to distinguish them.—London Chronicle.

She Liked Gloom.

It is a matter for thankfulness that widows of this generation are more sensible than the dowager Countess of Buchan, who passed away in the year 1786.

On the death of her husband she dressed herself entirely in black crape, engaged two black servants to wait upon her, ate nothing but black puddings and drank for one whole year nothing but black cherry brandy. Yet she survived this gloomy diet twenty-one years before the grim reaper gathered her in.—T. P.'s London Weekly.

Diplomacy.

"It takes diplomacy to get on with a husband," said the woman who speaks her mind freely.

"I believe it does," replied Miss Cayenne. "As I understand it, diplomacy consists largely in seeming to be deceived whether you are or not."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

OBREGON TO RULE

Wife Believes He Eventually Will Become Mexico's Head.

COUNTRY AGAINST SUFFRAGE.

Women Only Desire to Make Homes Bright and Husbands Happy; but, However, Some Day They May Fight For Equality, Says General's Wife.

El Paso, Tex.—Mrs. Alvaro Obregon is a singularly beautiful woman. Her face has a wholesome pallor. It is perfectly white, with the clearness of health. Her hair is as black as night. It is piled on her head in great shining masses.

Her mouth is firm. Decision and strength of character are shown. But her eyes are big, black and flashing.

Mrs. Obregon in a pretty morning gown recently sat in her husband's private car near the depot of the Central railroad in Juarez. Through the open door she had a glimpse of the Casas Grandes mountains.

"Do you believe in the duenna system under which Mexican and Spanish girls are brought up?" Mrs. Obregon was asked.

"Decidedly, yes. It may curtail their pleasures, but it is safe. The Spanish and Mexican girls are the most innocent and unworldly girls in the world.

GENERAL OBREGON.

Their minds never have been contaminated by any outside influences. They are brought up aloof from the world. They never see their sweethearts except in the presence of the duenna. That is perfectly right, according to my ideas. It precludes the possibility of temptation."

"Pardon me, senora, but were you courted under those conditions?"

"Yes; General Obregon never saw me alone until after he married me."

"Do you believe General Obregon eventually will become master of Mexico?"

"I not only hope he will, but I believe he will. I have perfect faith in my husband's star."

"Did you marry General Obregon because he is a hero who appealed romantically to your imagination?"

"I married him because I loved him," replied Senora Obregon simply.

"How long do you think it will be before he attains supreme power in Mexico?"

"I cannot even guess."

"Has there been a quarrel between General Obregon and President Carranza?"

"None whatever. There has not been even the slightest friction. They are in perfect accord. I have no idea where that story started."

"Do you believe in suffrage for Mexican women?"

"No," was the prompt answer. "I do not disbelieve in it for American women, for I hardly think Mexican women are ready for it. Mexican women have their own problems. Suffrage is not yet one of them. Perhaps some day we may want the vote.

"I cannot imagine our gentle Spanish women fighting for the ballot as the Anglo-Saxon women do. It is contrary to their natures. They are gently bred and nurtured. However, one never can tell what the turn of the wheel will bring. Our Mexican women have plenty of fire and spirit. Some day they, too, may fight for equality with men."

"What are the present problems of Mexican women?"

"To make their homes beautiful and attractive, to make their husbands happy, to rear their children to be fine men and women."

"Is not that the duty of women everywhere?"

"Perhaps, but it is peculiarly the problem of women of the Spanish races. They are raised with such a vastly different point of view regarding men than that of the women of the races of northern climes. Men are to them superior creatures. That is Spanish tradition. Its shackles bind closely.

"Whether men are our superiors or not, they are at least stronger. Their position in the social scale is that of our protectors. They make the home for us. We beautify it."

"You believe in the home woman in contradistinction to the woman who takes part in public affairs?"

"Yes, yet both, I suppose, have their places in the world."

HAS CHURCH OF GRINDSTONES

Pastor Who Unearthed Them In Waste Heap Dedicates It.

A church built of grindstones, which were dug out of a waste pile, was dedicated by the Baptists of Tacony, Pa., the other day. The pastor, the Rev. George W. Tryon, labored for months with pick and shovel, excavating the grindstones and superintending the work of placing them in the walls. The church cost the congregation $11,000.

The Rev. Mr. Tryon obtained the consent of the company to take the stones from the waste pile where they were thrown after having been used for grinding saws. More than 2,500 stones were used in the construction of the church, which is 87 by 43 feet.

TO HAVE ACRES OF BIRDS.

Millionaire Banker Will Convert Estate Into Model Sanctuary.

Commodore E. C. Benedict, millionaire banker, is planning to convert his estate of 100 acres at Greenwich, Conn., into a model bird sanctuary, combining a frontage of Long Island sound with a back country. Part of the estate compares favorably with the Adirondacks for primeval wilderness.

The Greenwich Bird Protective society, which has a membership of 300 prominent and wealthy residents of the community, including E. C. Converse William G. Rockefeller, Mrs. A. A Anderson and Ernest Thompson Seton has agreed to furnish the ways, and the commodore promises to supply the means. The work of preparing for returning birds will proceed at once.

Commodore Benedict, now eighty-two years old, attributes his good health to his outdoor life.

HELEN KELLER "HEARS."

Caruso Sings Lament of Samson For Blind and Deaf Woman.

Helen Keller, the famous blind and deaf woman, placed her fingers on the lips and throat of Enrico Caruso, the tenor, in his rooms in an Atlanta (Ga.) hotel the other morning and "heard" him sing the lament of Samson, blinded and in chains grinding corn for the Philistines.

Through the medium of her marvelously sensitive fingers the voice of the tenor was transmitted, and as she sat and "listened," her lips apart, her blind eyes wet with tears, she whispered:

"Oh, wonderful, wonderful! Though I cannot see your face, I can feel the pathos of your song."

Miss Keller almost collapsed, so powerfully had the voice of the tenor stirred her.

Days You'll Never Forget

TRIBE NOW DEAD.

Ishi, Noted Aborigine, Succumbs to White Plague.

ORIGIN MADE HIM FAMOUS.

Shown as Survivor of Last Tribe of Deer Creek Indians of Yano Line. Lived on Victims of His Bow and Arrow.

San Francisco.—Ishi has been gathered to the land of his fathers.

Last of the Deer Creek Indians, tribe of Yano, Ishi has gone to the happy hunting grounds. He died at the University of California hospital, a victim of the "white plague," disease of the paleface.

For several months the aborigine, who was captured in the wilds of northern Butte county in the summer of 1911, had been in ill health. A year ago he developed acute lung trouble, and at times he suffered greatly, bearing his pain with the stoicism of his kind.

Just a few minutes before he passed away Ishi joked with Curator Gifford of the affiliated colleges. At that time he was in agony. Final relief came with a hemorrhage.

Ishi, who never had seen any money of the white man until he was brought into civilization, left what he considered a fortune in worldly goods—about $350 and personal effects. With the common desire of all California Indians, Ishi labored to accumulate wealth. Unlike the members of most tribes, whose standing is rated by what they give away, Ishi, with the characteristics of California and British Columbia Indians, hoarded his pennies, which he earned in various ways. His estate was taken in charge by the public administrator.

Ishi, living the life of a savage in Butte county, stole a calf in the summer of 1911, and officers of the law ran him down. They were amazed to discover, the thief was a primitive creature, clad in animal skins and armed only with a bow and arrow. The prisoner was taken to the Butte county jail, and it was there that T. T. Waterman, assistant professor in anthropology, pronounced him to be the only surviving member of the lost tribe of Deer Creek Indians of the Yano line.

The scientific world was greatly interested in Professor Waterman's announcement, and Ishi became famous. He was brought to this city and lodged at the affiliated colleges on Sept. 4, 1911. After months of patient effort Professor Waterman was able to talk with Ishi. What he learned from the captive left no doubt in his mind that Ishi really was the last of the savage tribe of Deer Creek.

Ishi adapted himself to the ways of the white man. He built himself a home on the grounds of the affiliated colleges, where he was the object of much curiosity. He attended lectures by Professor Waterman and other savants of the State university.

In May, 1914, Ishi took Dr. A. L. Kroeber, head of the affiliated colleges museum, and Dr. Saxton T. Pope to Butte and showed them his former haunts, reverting to his skins and bows and arrows. The report of Dr. Koeber and Dr. Pope confirmed the belief of Ishi's descent.

KILL 2,000 RABBITS IN DRIVE.

California Farmers Wreak Vengeance on Field Pests.

Stockton, Cal.—It is estimated 2,000 jack rabbits were killed in the south San Joaquin district and at least one coyote met his fate in the rabbit drive held by the south San Joaquin farmers under the direction of Ed Powers of Manteca and county farm bureau officials.

Hunters from all parts of the country gathered in the south San Joaquin during the morning, and when the chase started at 9:30 o'clock there were more than 400 shotguns pointed out toward the hiding places of the long legged jacks.

The march on the rabbits lasted from 9:30 in the morning until after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and during the afternoon hundreds of automobile parties visited that part of the country to see the huntsmen and others gathering up the slain field pests.

MONKEYS SCARE CO-EDS.

Human Skeleton Placed Near Girls' Dormitory Also Causes Terror.

Alliance, O.—Five stuffed monkeys taken by students from the museum of Mount Union college and placed at strategic points near the entrance of Elliott hall, the girls' dormitory, frightened the co-eds when they left the dormitory.

Scarcely had they recovered from their terror when they saw a human skeleton dangling from a tree near by. It, too, had been taken from the museum.

The library also was entered, and books and catalogues were disarranged. As a result an investigation is being made.

PROSPECT PARK DEVELOPMENT

In spite of local business depression, activity in realty development is evident in more than one section of the city, and nowhere is it greater than on the tract formerly known as the Bovard property, but now as Prospect Park. This tract was bought last year by Mr. V. D. Calkins, contractor, and is developed as fast as the market demands. It is bounded by North 2d, North 3d, Walradt and Fulton ave. and embraces Lyman ave. It contains about two acres, lying east of the old baseball park. Mr. Calkins has the ground plotted for 20 lots, averaging 43x100 feet.

Two houses are built and occupied by Dr. Whitbeck and Mr. Royal Yager respectively, and three more dwellings will be started at once, one of them to be occupied by the contractor and the others as investments. The Whitbeck and Yager homes are in Lyman ave. In 2d st. there is a sewer which is to be extended thru Lyman ave. and elsewhere as fast as the development demands.

Mr. Salkins is to be congratulated for his enterprise, and the West Side, North, for having the benefit of his spirit.

THE CROSS: ITS MEANING TO US

Father Stephen Concludes Mission for Women---Men's Services Begin Tomorrow Morning, to Last a Week

The Church of the Immaculate Conception was crowded to capacity last night on the occasion of the sermon on the Passion by Father Stephen, O.M.C. The service was for women only and every available seat in the main floor floor of the church and gallery was filled, when the service began.

Father Austin, O.M.C., who is conducting the mission in conjunction with Father Stephen, announced the progress for the last day of the women's mission as follows: tonight a service will be held for school children of both sexes and for the women, which will consist of a dedication of the congregation to the Virgin Mary, the recitation of the Rosary, and benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. On account of the length of the services tonight they will begin at 7:30 o'clock instead of 7:45 as heretofore. Father Austin asked for the donation of flowers for the altar tonight, and requested that all those giving flowers should bring them to the church early today.

Cards of membership to the Rosary society and the order of Children of Mary were distributed in the church last night ,to be filled out by those desirous of joining either society.

Mission of the Order.

"We preach Christ and Him Crucified," words taken from the first epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, was the text selected by Father Stephen for his sermon on the Passion.

Father Stephen said it was the mission of Christ on earth to draw all things to Himself at the foot of the cross, Such was the mission of the Franciscans, also, the priest said, and pointed out that the cross was the emblem of the order.

Father Stephen said in part:

"We are here to lead you to the foot of the cross, that you may learn the great love of Christ for the world.

"In our past sermons on Death and other topics concerning which the average person does not care to think, our motive was to strike fear to your hearts, that you might realize the danger that confronts you if you do not follow God's teachings. Now, however, we appeal to a nobler virtue, that of love. Fear doubtless has a place, but love outranks fear. We hope now to inspire you with a love for your dying Saviour, whose love for you was such that He gave Himself as a sacrifice in order to appease the justice of His divine Father.

Power of Divine Love.

Father Stephen divided the Passion of Christ into two parts, the sufferings of the body and the sufferings of the soul. He pictured the last hours of Christ, beginning at the Last Supper, when Christ instituted the sacrament of the Eucharist, and then led his hearers, in fancy, into the garden of Gethsemane, where Christ left His Apostles and went into the garden to pray. The priest drew a vivid picture of the mental sufferings of the Saviour on that fatal night, when, during his prayer, he beheld the sins of all the world passing before him, and was so weighed down with anguish that blood oozed forth from the pores of His body.

Passing over the more familiar parts of Christ's physical tortures and his final trial and condemnation before Pilate, Father Stephen pictured the final altar of sacrifice, the Mount of Calvary, and told of the Saviour's humility and patience until the last, as evidenced by His last words, Father, forgive them they know not what they do."

Father Stephen concluded by exhorting his hearers to consider the great sacrifice that had been made that the world be freed from the domination of the devil, and urged them to begin at once to make themselves worthy of redemption. In all respects the sermon was one of the most eloquent of the mission. Father Stephen will preach again tomorrow morning at high mass when the mission for men will begin.

HIGHWAYMAN RETURNS TO N.Y.

Wanted There Charged With Rifling Shopkeeper's Till ---His First Arrest, Says Detective.

Detective John Morrell, of the Central Office, New York city, arrived here last night and will return to the metropolis today with Richard Van Saders, who was arrested in First st. Thursday afternoon by Patrolman Fred Sweet. Van Saders is wanted in New York on a charge of highway robbery, first degree, and his description has been sent broadcast throughout the country.

Detective Morrell stated this morning that Van Saders was formerly employed by the Erie railroad as a detective, and that his home is in Little Ferry, N. J.

Early on the evening of March 16 in company with Joseph Matchok, of Hackensack, N. J., Van Saders entered the store of Rinaldo Sanolo, at 552 Vaness Ave., Bronx, and drawing a revolver, order Sanolo to throw up his hands and come out from behind the counter. Sanolo obeyed, and while Van Saders kept the gun trained on him, Matchok rifled the till, which contained about $40. Both men then ran from the store, but Sanolo recovered from his fright and gave the alarm. A crowd gave chase to the highwaymen, and Matchok was run to earth in the basement of a tenement house. One pursuer caught up with Van Saders, but on account of the man's great strength, was unable to hold him until help arrived, and Van Saders escaped. The police were furnished with his description, however, and one of the circulars reached this city about a week ago.

Van Saders had been working for a short time in the Peter's Chocolate Works, but more recently went to work in the woolen mills. He left his job there Tuesday night, and was preparing to leave town when he passed Officer Sweet Thursday. The officer noticed that the man tallied with the description furnished by the New York police, and accosted him on the pretence of an acquaintanceship. Van Saders' suspicions were not aroused, and when Sweet offered to take him to a man who could give him a job, VanSaders willingly accompanied the officer. Sweet led him to City Hall, where he was identified by Chief Dyer and locked up.

Detective Morrell said today that Van Saders comes of a good family, and has never been arrested before, as far as the New York authorities know. His companion, Matchok, who was captured, was recently sentenced to Elmira Reformatory by Judge Gibbs in the Bronx county court.

Which costs most— painting or waiting?

After your house needs painting, every year you wait it will require more paint and more labor to put it in good condition. And every year you wait, your house is worth less. A little paint-money is good paint-insurance.

METHODISTS MAY RAISE THE BANS

Sub-Committee Reports Radical Change in Laws, but Church Would Remain Opposed to Diversions.

Saratoga Springs.—Card playing, dancing and attendance upon theatres will not hereafter subject members of the Methodist church to expulsion, if the recommendations of the sub-committee of the General Conference receive a favorable report at Monday's session.

By a vote of ten to eight the subcommittee recommended the elimination from the book of discipline of the clause prohibiting these amusements and offered as a substitute an additional paragraph in which warning is made against the diversions.

Continues the Opposition.

The effect of the proposed change is to remove the absolute prohibition, but to place the church on record as still strongly opposed to these forms of amusement. A minority report was submitted advising the retention of the paragraph as it now stands.

It was maintained by those favoring removal of the restriction that the penalty now provided is not enforced in any church and that the effect upon young people will be much greater if a provision that cannot be enforced is withdrawn and a general warning is sued tha the church does not sanction "dancing, playing at games of chance, attending theatres, horse races, circuses, dancing parties, or patronizing dancing schools." Opposition to the change is based on the allegation that it means the church is "letting down the bars."

Labor Question Debated.

The delegates to the conference were brought to a high pitch of excitement today by a proposal, submitted in the report of the Commission on Social Service, which is designed to place the church on record as indorsing the preferential shop, which, it was charged, will lead to the closed shop.

If this is adopted, according to delegates who spoke in opposition, it will place the church in the position of specifically indorsing the methods of labor unions and will result in the abolishment of the "open shop" system in the publishing plants of the Methodist book concern in Cincinnati, O., and Chicago. Although technically "open," the plant at New York city now employs only union labor.

Harry F. Ward, of Boston, Mass., who made a vigorous plea for the move, urged that Christian labor leaders who are making an effort to wrest the leadership of unions from unworthy men require the support of the church if they are tobe successful.

"What you do today," he explained, "will help or hinder our efforts to advance the gospel among 20,000,000 persons who are connected directly or indirectly with labor unions. This is the largest unevangelized group in the world."

The election of new bishops will not be held before next Tuesday. At least five bishops will be chosen in succession to three who have died since the Minneapolis conference in 1912 and two who will be retired. The committee has decided to recommend that there be no reduction in the number of resident bishops, and it is considered likely that some others may be chosen. Whether the Board of Bishops will be enlarged will depend on the committee's recommendations concerning the establishment of other Episcopal areas in Europe. A new European territory with headquarters in Rome, to have jurisdiction over southern Europe and northern Africa, has virtually been agreed to, but no decision has been reached on the question of placing this area under a bishop or a general superintendent.

Driving It In.

The bright newspaper wit who is on the job twenty-four hours a day recently heard a lady remark on the stability of posts in a public building which had but one nail driven in each.

"That's nothing," he cut in. "Look at the magnificent physical organization which we call a human body, and yet it is all put together with only twenty nails."

The lady's expression showed it was not a point which needed to be hammered in.—Baltimore American.

LAW SURELY GIVES A PUZZLE TO SOLVE

Owner of Bees Must Know Name of Every One Before He Can Swear Out a Warrant.

Birmingham, Ala.—Becoming involved in a dispute over a trivial matter, two citizens of Montgomery county struck a snag in the law when a swarm of bees owned by one migrated to the home of the other. This renewed the trouble, and W. C. Frizzle, bailiff of the city court, was appealed to.

"I want my bees," said the original owner. "They have gone to that fellow's home."

Frizzle began an investigation to ascertain whether he had authority to return the bees to the rightful owner. After consulting many lawbooks this was his conclusion, as expressed in his own words:

"I find that before you can obtain your bees you must have them arrested in the regular way. And before they can be arrested you must swear out an individual warrant against every bee in the swarm. I also find that before you can swear out an individual warrant against every bee you must know the name of each one."

The rightful owner said he was willing to give his neighbor a warrant deed to one swarm of bees, but he did not know the name of each one in the swarm. So the bees are still in their new home.

GIRLS WITH FLOWER NAMES.

Arrange a Club For the Study of Wild Plants.

Mill Valley, Cal.—Out of the deep tangled wildwood of this hamlet, nestling at the base of Mount Tamalpais, has come a school children's club, unique at least in the nomenclature of its governing officers.

The club has been organized for the study of wild flowers, which are now a gay pattern of many colors over the sloping hills of the countryside. The children, mostly girls, met and elected officers, as follows: President, Charlotte Rose; vice president, Margaret Leaf; secretary, Doris Plant; treasurer, Mary Moss; Directors, Violet White and Fern Murphy.

They will begin at once their studies, which are to be prosecuted vigorously in all of their out of school hours.

No blooms of rarest ray serene will be permitted to bud and blush unseen in the shady dells of Tamalpais.

CHILD SAVES HOME.

Little Boy Fights Fire and Climbs on Chair to Telephone For Help.

Lead, S. D.—Nerve and pluck exhibited by the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Mitchell saved both himself and the family home from destruction by fire, although the child was nearly overcome when the firemen rescued him.

The little fellow had been left alone with a playmate while his parents were out, and they commenced to play with matches. Soon the bed was afire, and the flames spread.

The other boy ran out, but the Mitchell child fought the flames with small pails of water, in the meantime climbing on a chair to reach the telephone, by which he notified the fire department. Chemicals quickly extinguished the blaze.

Billy Treadwell's Sacrifice

A Story For Commencement Days

By BARBARA PHELPS

Billy Treadwell and his chum, Johnny Haywood, were lounging in Johnny's room, No. 42 University hall, when there was a rap at the door and a letter was handed in for Johnny. He opened it, read it and exclaimed:

"That's too bad!"

"What's too bad?" asked Billy.

"Why, my cousin, Bess Hinckley who has been at school in Geneva ever since she was twelve years old, has come home. She writes me that she is dying to see an American college and will be down Saturday morning to spend the day with me. Saturday we play Claypole."

"Cut the game."

"Cut the game? Why, where will they get a pitcher to take my place?"

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Johnny. Of course it will be a sacrifice for me to spend a Saturday showing a young woman the college, but I'll meet your cousin, tell her of your engagement and how sorry you are and take her off your hands."

"Will you?" cried Johnny, grasping his chum's hands.

"I'll have to; there's no other way out of it for you."

On Saturday morning Billy met the train on which Miss Hinckley arrived. Seeing a pretty girl answering to Johnny's description of his cousin looking wildly about for some one, he walked up to her and asked:

"Cousin Bess?"

"Yes—how you have changed from the little boy I used to play with!"

"I've an auto outside," said Billy. "Let me take that wrap."

Billy led her to the auto. They got in and sailed away.

"We'll go up on to the hill, and I'll show you the college buildings. After that we'll do the country round about."

"I'm very anxious to see your chum, Mr. Treadwell, that you wrote me about."

"I wrote you about?" said Billy, pricking up his ears.

"Why, yes. Don't you remember saying that you had picked him out for me?"

"Did I say that? Oh, yes. Now I remember. Bill's a good fellow in his way. But"—

"But what?"

"Well, if I've picked him out for you where do I come in?"

"Oh, you're my cousin."

"I see. Well, you can't see Billy today. He's pitcher in the varsity team, and they're playing the Claypoles today."

"That's too bad."

"That's what he said when your letter came to say that you'd be down today."

They did the college buildings, then re-entered the auto and sailed away into the country. Billy addressed his companion as Cousin Bess and when they were in a secluded place endeavored to take a cousinly kiss, but, whether for propriety or that Billy's manner had passed from cousinly to lover-like, she would not permit.

"My kisses," she said, "I'll keep for my fiance."

"What fiance?"

"Why, the one you have picked out for me, of course."

"Humph!" said Billy. He was about to add, "Very well, I'll take one now," but thought better of it and refrained.

That was a delightful day for Billy, and he was accorded one cousinly kiss at parting. His conscience doubtless smote him, for when Johnny returned from the game Billy kept out of his way. However, the next morning Billy received his chum's thanks for having sacrificed himself in taking a girl around instead of enjoying a holiday.

Several days later Johnny went into his chum's room with an open letter.

"What the dickens does this mean, Billy? Bess writes me thanking me for my kindness last Saturday and says in a postscript: 'Never mind your chum, Mr. Treadwell. He will not interest me.'"

"I cannot tell a lie, Johnny. Your cousin mistook me for you, and I hadn't the heart to correct her."

"Well, I like that! And she supposed it was I who was her attendant?"

"She did."

"What does she mean by saying, 'Never mind you; you wouldn't interest her.'"

"A strict regard for truth compels me to say that she's wrapped up in you."

"Do you really think so?"

Of course Billy's regard for truth failed in the end, and he was exposed.

"What does she mean by saying, 'Never mind you?'"

"Why, you see, Johnny, she was so wrapped up in— Oh, you can never tell what a girl means by what she says. They are no more to be understood than so many Greek particles."

"H'm," replied Johnny, unconvinced. "I don't think this case is so unintelligible. Bess, supposing that she was talking to me, being really fascinated by that happy way you have with the creatures, tumbled to all the lies you told her and, like a wolf in sheep's clothing—I don't mean that exactly"—

"To tell the truth, Johnny, it was she downed me. Take me to see her for a week end, won't you?"

John, with a mock grimace, consented, promising to smooth Billy's way in accounting for his deception. But he only made the matter worse. However, Bess thought little of the trick that had been played upon her. Indeed, she considered it a compliment. At any rate, she and Billy are now life partners.

UNITED STATES POSITION ON ARMED MERCHANTMEN.

A memorandum by the state department on the attitude of the United States toward armed merchantmen has become known in Berlin.

The memorandum was interpreted by close observers as bearing directly on the crisis with Germany.

The position of the United States now is that an armed belligerent merchantman under instructions to attack in all circumstances enemy naval vessels, or influenced to do so by offers of prize money or penalties, loses its status as a peaceable merchant ship.

It is stated further:

"It should, therefore, be considered as an armed public vessel and receive the treatment of a warship by an enemy and by neutrals.

"Any person taking passage on such a vessel cannot expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship."

BETTER CHANCES NOW FOR BABIES OF UNITED STATES

Analysis Shows That Healthiest Period Is About Eleventh Year.

A native white boy baby now has at birth one chance in two of living to the age of sixty. So it has been discovered by S. L. Rogers, director of the census, from an analysis of the vital statistics of the New England, northern and middle states.

At the end of his first year the baby has a trifle better than an even chance of reaching sixty-four. He has one chance in two of attaining seventy under the same conditions.

A girl at birth has an even chance of living a few months past sixty-four. At twenty-two her chance of reaching seventy is an even one.

Thus a native white male at forty-two and a native female at twenty-two have about the same chance of celebrating their seventieth birthdays.

On his first birthday the chance that the boy or girl will die within the coming year is only about one-fourth as great as it was at birth. The rate continues to decrease until the twelfth year.

The healthiest time in the life of the average native is between his or her eleventh and twelfth birthday. When the man grows to be forty-eight his chance of living is just what it was in his third year. When he is sixty-two his chance is as it was on his second birthday.

In its first year of life the boy New Yorker's chance for reaching his second birthday is nearly one-fifth less than if he lived in the country part of that state. Thus at birth the country boy in the Empire State has an expectation of 7.7 years more of life than the boy in New York city, until he is thirty-nine. The country man has more than five years better chance of life than his metropolitan cousin.

Not until the New Yorker is eighty-eight is his chance of living longer better in the city than in the country.

Pinched Him Financially.

An esteemed citizen went into a shoe store in a metropolitan town and asked to see some leather goods. Another minute an obliging salesman was hauling out some boxes.

"That's a nice looking shoe," remarked the customer as the salesman pushed his foot into a shiny right and started to lace it. "What is the price?"

"This pair is $8," responded the salesman as he finished the lacing and ran his hand across the vamp. "Does it pinch you any?"

"Well, I should say that it does!" was the prompt rejoinder of the customer. "Give me something about $5 cheaper."—Kansas City Star.

The Purist Lost a Sale.

"I've just happened to remember that my wife told me to get a tin pan that will go under the icebox. Have you any?"

"No, sir, but we have some that can be shoved under the icebox. Won't that do just as well?"

"I think not, young man. My wife is a bit particular about my getting the exact thing that she tells me to get. I presume I can find it at some other store. Good day, sir."—Chicago Tribune.

Bismarck and His Dog.

Sultan, Prince Bismarck's favorite boarhound, attacked a passing railroad train and was cut to pieces. Bismarck's grief over the dog's agonies was such that his son Herbert tried to lead him away, but the prince would not go. "No; I cannot leave him like this." Then, when the dog's sufferings were over, Bismarck wiped his eyes and murmured: "Our Teuton forefathers showed benevolence in their religion. They believed they would find in the hunting grounds of their paradise all the dogs that had been their faithful comrades here below. I fervently wish I could believe that."—London Mail.

A Theory Of Progress

By ETHEL HOLMES

Miss Mary Medford and Miss Gwendolen Tracy, chums, twenty-two and twenty-three years old respectively, both rich in their own right, thought much on the same lines.

"Gwen," said Miss Medford, "I have an idea that progress is the only means to happiness. We must be constantly going onward and upward. You and I are apparently at the end of our rope and still very young. We have independent fortunes. If we marry ordinary men we'll be bored through life. Let us go abroad and each marry a title."

"What kind of a title?"

"A knight, for instance."

"Then, I suppose, according to your theory, in time we'd have to divorce the knight and marry a baron. From the baron we'd have to rise to an earl, then a duke, and so on till we got a king. But I'm with you."

The two girls sailed for Germany, where every other respectable man is a noble—at least a Von—but that was not the kind of nobility they wanted.

So they went on into France. Here they found it difficult to understand what a title was worth. France being a republic, they couldn't see what advantage a count or a duke had over a commoner. Besides, the old nobility were all either legitimists or Orleanists and the most recent ones, Bonapartists. If the sovereign of either won the government the others would be down and out. Our heroines, being practical American girls, had no use for uncertainties.

So they went over into England. Britain has always been considered the best preserve in the world for noble game. The law of primogeniture provides for one branch of the family at the expense of the others. But the prizes were correspondingly few. The scions of some of the oldest blueblooded titles were or had been married to music hall girls, and this further reduced the American girls' chances. Though they had brought letters to families in England and were admitted socially, neither of them saw anything worth purchasing, for really that is what their intentions meant. After spending several months in England looking over the bargain counters they made up their minds to return to America and take up some fad. Gwen said she would prefer a dog.

But what they had been hunting for all over Europe came to them on the steamer coming home. They had met a young woman in England whom they had asked to help them in their quest. This lady informed them that two young noblemen, the Earl of Elmhurst and the Marquis of Bablington, were going to America incog. Whether the girls purposely bought tickets on the same steamer as the nobleman, or vice versa, does not appear. At any rate, the four crossed together, and before they had been out twenty-four hours they were as thick as peas in a pod.

The noblemen passed by ordinary names, Elmhurst as Mr. Calkins and Bablington being Mr. Strynger. They did not tell the girls that they were noblemen incog, and the girls did not tell them that they had been informed concerning them. Calkins froze to Mary; Strynger made up to Gwen. The men both declared that if they ever married they would wish to be married for love. Naturally, after such a statement, the girls would have been very foolish to tell them that they knew them to be British peers.

Of course it could not be expected that the two American girls would snare two such men within the few days of a voyage, but they came very near together. The night before they made the port of New York both couples were on deck sitting close in dark corners. Calkins told Mary that he wished to give her some memento of the voyage which she had made so happy for him, and she promised to accept a silk umbrella that he had intended for an American lady friend of his in Boston. Strynger prevailed upon Gwen to accept a box containing a dozen pairs of gloves.

In the morning while the vessel was steaming up New York bay the ladies gave the gentlemen their addresses and the gentlemen gave the ladies the mementoes of the trip. When the ship was docked the ladies went down the gangway together and were driven home. During the ride Mary, while comparing notes with her friend as to the probability of a conquest, was fingering the handle of the umbrella that had been given her.

"Why, it unscrews," she said.

She twisted it till it came off, and something dropped from it into her lap. Picking it up, she examined it.

"Why, it's a diamond!" she exclaimed. From the head of the umbrella that she had removed she poured out a couple of dozen more. "Good gracious, what a gift! It's worthy of an emperor."

Gwen at once examined her glove box. She found nothing but the gloves at the time, but after she got home a further examination revealed a false bottom and more diamonds.

During the day a customs inspector called with an order for the contents of the gifts. Two smugglers had been announced from the other side of the water, had been arrested, and a compromise had been made by which they were to escape with their liberty.

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed Mary. "Strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel."

"In other words," added Gwen, "aimed at two noblemen and caught a pair of smugglers."

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.

What Small Folks Are Wearing Closely Resemble Their Mothers'.

Suits for little girls are after the models shown for women. The skirts have considerable fullness, and the coats are inclined to ripple below the waist line. Some very attractive suits for children are made with skirts of broken checks and coats of serge in solid color. They have suspenders attached to the skirt or are finished with a belt. The coats, as a rule, are loose and belted and of hip length. Belts which encircle the waist or belted back styles with pockets on either the skirt or coat, and buttons fastening the front of the skirt, are especially good looking.

Children's skirts are usually cut circular and have considerable flare at the foot, fitting fairly close over the hips. The coats are finished with a coat collar and lapels, and some are made in Norfolk styles.

There are many variations in trimmings. Buttons are used profusely and in novel ways. A number of suits in solid color have collar and cuffs of blue and white polka dotted silk or of green satin piped with white.

Coats of shepherd checks are sometimes trimmed with black satin in bands at the foot, and the collars and cuffs are also of satin. Little coats of light blue silk poplin are smocked on either side of the front and in the center of the back. The blue collar and cuffs are embroidered in white. Coats have girdles of ribbon tied loosely around the waist, ending in a loose knot on the side. A little coat of two toned corduroy in brown and white is made with a flared skirt, piped at the waist line and on the collar and cuffs. Black and white and blue and white corduroy coats are also seen.

The little middy dresses, the Russian blouse, the one piece dress joined with a belt, the coat and Norfolk styles and the little suspender dresses worn with guimpes, as well as the short waisted effects, are all seen in attractive assortments. Some dresses hang in loose lines from the shoulders and are trimmed with smocking.

The majority of sleeves are made in the set in effect, but there are also sleeves with a low shoulder, the bishop sleeve and also those with a flare effect.

Ginghams, percales, linens, reps and lawns are the prominent wash materials. Plain and fancy materials are frequently combined in the making. Colored dresses are often trimmed with collars and cuffs of white. Sashes and belts of leather, self material or silk are used. White dresses, with sashes of color, with the waist line low, normal or slightly raised, are in many attractive styles. The little skirts are very full.

king's blue velvet ribbon with extension bow. Around the band is a row of green leaves set primly to give a flat effect. The result is quite charming.

Don't Rush Through Life.

How many women are there who rush through their day's and their evening engagements without a moment's relaxation? A bath before dressing for the evening is substituted for the rest which the body needs. If pallor of the face offends the ever handy cosmetic is drawn upon and the "bloom of youth" applied. But no artificial coloring ever hid successfully for any length of time baggy eyes, sunken cheeks and other marks which worn out nerves register upon the face.

The surest way for a woman to maintain her attractive appearance—to be "easy to look at," as one of our famous humorists said—is to keep the body up to its highest standard of efficiency. If this be done rosy cheeks, a clear complexion, sparkling eyes, a sweet breath, grace of carriage, will follow as surely as sunrise follows the night.

Covering the Neck.

Soon we shall be thinking about pretty ways of decorating the uncovered neck and shall no doubt revive the old time lace hemmed net ruche fastened by a rose or a ribbon bow, which in the portraits of young French beauties of the eighteenth century looks so fascinating. Devices of this and other kinds the collarless blouses which are arriving will make possible and desirable. There is a decided leaning toward the decollete blouses, with a choice of chokers.

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

A Tailored Frock for Mild Days.

Blue faille makes up this charming suit for mild days, although silk poplin or gros de Londres may be substituted.

Particularly enchanting are the tailored suits for mild days—days when it is too cool to be without a jacket, and yet too warm for a serge or gabardine. Faille is used for this costume, the color dark blue. Nothing is smarter than blue or wears better. The interesting feature of the suit is the jacket, which has a convertible collar. The back may be made with or without tab extensions, while the circular peplum is cut in three pieces. To make the entire costume requires 5½ yards 44-inch or 4½ yards 54-inch materail.

As two styles of sleeves are provided, the home dressmaker should be careful to distinguish between the coat sleeve and the fancy sleeve when cutting. These are marked "H" and "I", respectively, and plainly shown on the cutting guide. The back of the jacket and back of the peplum, with the collar, are laid on a lengthwise fold of the silk, while the front section of the peplum is placed on a lengthwise thread. The underfacing, sleeve section and front of the jacket are laid on a lengthwise thread.

If the back of the jacket is desired without extension cut off ⅝ inch below small "o" perforations.

Next to blue, gray is exceedingly popular for these silk tailleurs. A soft, medium light tone, rather like a light castor, is the most favored. Quite as effective as faille and less expensive are the silk poplins. Gros de Londres and lightweight satins also make charming tailored costumes for summer.

DEVICE MAKES BOMBS HIT.

Range Finder For Air Craft Bought by Government After Tests.

The government, after tests by naval officers, has purchased the invention of a Philadelphia youth which will drop bombs accurately from an aeroplane.

The inventor is Alfred J. Erickson. He is nineteen. His father was working on the bomb dropping device when he died. The boy took up the problem, finally got a patent and brought the invention to the attention of the government. Tests made at Norfolk with a hydroaeroplane are said to have shown that bombs can be dropped within a radius of twelve feet.

The device adopts the idea of an automatic range finder for guns. In a frame before the face of the aviator is an indicator by which he can plot out any object in sight on the ground and time the release of the bomb.

Perfectly Qualified.

"I have called," remarked the aggressive young person in the checked suit, "in answer to your advertisement for a man to sell refrigerators to the Eskimos."

"Well," said the man behind the desk, "what makes you think you can fill the bill?"

"I know I can," said the applicant breezily. "I spent last summer very successfully retailing 'The Lives of the Saints' to residents of the city of New York."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Sincere Regret.

A seedy looking individual in a West street saloon turned from the free lunch counter, where he had been helping himself most generously, and said to the barkeeper:

"Friend, can you trust me for a glass of beer till tomorrow?"

"No," said the barkeep.

"I am sorry to hear that," said the seedy one. "It seems kinder mean to eat the amount of free lunch I have and then not buy nothin'."—New York Globe.

Appropriate.

The worshipers in a certain chapel had some trouble to keep their faces straight a short time ago. During the service some commotion was caused by a gentleman who accidentally ignited a box of wax matches in his pocket and was trying to put them out, while his alarmed neighbors struggled equally hard to help him. The minister, being shortsighted, could not make out the reason of the disturbance, and, thinking diplomatically to cover the incident, he innocently said:

"Brethren, there is a little noise going on. Until it is over let us sing 'Sometimes a Light Surprises.'"—London Answers.

Women Make War Machines.

An exhibition of the work women are doing to replace the men who are at war is being held in Kensington, England. All that is best in women's industry is shown, including what is done in the home, in the munitions and Red Cross work and women's ability to provide new careers for others. One woman, a consulting engineer, demonstrates how the aeroplane depends on women. Careful and responsible workers are necessary, for the safety of the aviator depends on the women's work. In Glasgow the women are instructed in tram driving so that as male employees leave for enlistment their places may be filled quickly.

Fresh Gloves.

Soiled gloves are an abomination, especially in the spring. There may be a day when we shall look back upon the soiled white and colored gloves of which some of us are guilty occasionally with as much distaste as we now look on soiled shoes. Work out some scheme now whereby your gloves can always be fresh. Wash fabric gloves, wash kid gloves and silk gloves can all be kept spotlessly fresh without much trouble.

MODISH SUIT.

A Smart Model Put Up in Blue Serge For Wear.

Durable, popular, ubiquitous navy serge gives this good looking outfit, cut with a box plaited jacket and skirt.

ULTRA LINES.

An unusual finish is gained by a white organdie piping around the coat to match the collar. The slashed belt is also interesting.

FOR SUMMER SHOWERS.

Gay Umbrellas Are Appearing Like Broken Off Bits of Rainbows.

It is not a bit too soon to get ready for summer showers. Indeed, one need not regret the gentle downpour if she is provided with one of the new umbrellas made of silk taffeta in green, blue, burgundy, prelate, orchid, dull yellow or African brown. The color choice is broad, so that the costume or the salient tone thereof may be matched.

These silks are waterproof, and the color looks no worse after its summer bath. The handles are quite short and are said to be copied from the stick of the British or French officer. There is no handle in the usual sense of the word, but instead there is a heavy cord loop run through a perforation in the handle, and this is swung over the wrist.

One advantage of the new umbrella is that it may be used for sun protection quite as well as for the rain defense. One feels less foolish starting out in the morning under a cloud, as it were, umbrella in hand or raised above the head, and finding herself equally prepared when the sun unexpectedly pierces the clouds later in the day. Moreover, the gay color seems to anticipate the appearance of the rainbow.

Kitchen Helps.

In order to keep lettuce fresh for an indefinite time put the head in a glass containing water and place it in the icebox or some other cool, dark place. The roots will absorb the water, which should be changed daily, and keep the lettuce fresh and crisp.

If you would save your hands from unsightly vegetable stains always peel or scrape potatoes, turnips, etc., under warm running water.

When your grocer sends you hard lemons and you want them for immediate use let them stand for a few hours in water, and they will soon become soft and juicy.

A home "cold storage" for eggs may be made by placing two inches of wood ashes in the bottom of a tin pail. In this stand on the small end as many fresh eggs as will fit easily without letting them touch. Over these sift a couple of inches of ashes and adjust another layer of eggs. When the pail is full cover it tightly and place in a cool place, and the eggs will keep perfectly for an indefinite time.

On Ironing Day.

One will find it a great help on ironing day to have a goodly supply of clothes hangers at hand. As soon as a garment is ironed slip it over a hanger. Each hanger will hold a number of the same kind of garments, and in putting the clothes away all that is necessary is to place the hangers in the closet. In this way many pieces do not have to be handled twice and wrinkled clothes are avoided.

AMBROSIA—Food For the Gods.—Ambrosia is a fresh fruit dish that for lusciousness cannot be equaled. First take an attractive looking large glass salad bowl; have ready twelve oranges, a box of strawberries, a fresh pineapple or the contents of a large can of sliced pineapple and a box of stoned black cherries. Slice six of the oranges, removing seeds and rind. Place a layer in the bowl, then a layer of strawberries, then a layer of pineapple cut in small pieces, then a layer of cherries. Keep alternating layers of fruit until bowl is filled. Take remaining six oranges and squeeze juice over contents of bowl. A few maraschino cherries may be scattered over top of fruit. Place away in icebox for three hours before using.

Marguerites. — Three-quarters of a cupful of sugar, a quarter cupful of water, three marshmallows, a tablespoonful of shredded cocoanut, white of an egg, one-eighth teaspoonful vanilla, half a cupful of chopped walnut meats and crackers. Boil sugar and water until sirup will thread. Remove to back of range and add marshmallows cut in pieces. Pour on to the whites of eggs beaten stiff, then add cocoanut, vanilla and nut meats. Spread crackers with the mixture and bake in hot oven till delicately browned.

Marguerites.—Whites of three eggs, a quart of peanuts in shell, a teaspoonful of vanilla, one and a half or two cupfuls of powdered sugar. Beat the whites of eggs very stiff, chop peanuts rather fine, mix all together and drop on saltines, browning in oven.

Pineapple Marmalade. — Peel and grate or chop as many pineapples as are desired. Weigh and allow a pound of sugar to each pound of fruit. Mix well and stand in a cool place overnight. In the morning cook for half an hour or until soft enough to put through a coarse sieve. Strain, return to the preserving kettle and continue the cooking, stirring almost constantly for half an hour or longer until a clear amber jelly results that will thicken into a paste as it cools.

Apricot Roll.—Sift a pint of flour with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a little salt and a tablespoonful of sugar. Mix two tablespoonfuls each of butter and any shortening and about three-quarters of a cupful of milk to make a soft dough. Roll out lightly and spread with a cupful of apricots or any dried fruit which have been cleaned and stewed. Roll up and place in baking tin with half a cupful of juice drained from the fruit and baste with this during the cooking. Serve hot with sweet liquid sauce.

Tribute to the Mule.

The mule has earned all the decorations that are worth while—the medaille militaire, the iron cross, the Victoria cross, the medal of honor, etc.

As a campaigner he has no equal in any climate under the sun. He is the philosopher and stoic of animals. Even his stubbornness is sometimes a virtue. The mule is permanently associated with the army's bill of fare. Strategy has saved many a beleaguered force, but the mule with his pack has often routed starvation, the worst enemy that ever threatens troops. The mule does not crave respect, but every soldier loves him. Long may he balk and talk!—New York Sun.

Warming Gold Dishes.

Castle Kilkenny is one of the oldest inhabited dwellings in the world, some of the rooms being 800 years old. Among its ancient treasures is a service of gold plate. Besides the ordinary plate service, Castle Kilkenny has the whole series of gold cups used at coronation banquets down to the time of George IV. The gold of the service plates is almost without alloy, consequently very soft and easily marred. Hence the plates are warmed and presumably also washed after use by being dipped into hot water held by a pair of tongs whose tips have been muffled in chamois leather.—London Globe.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

MOTHER, we bow our heads in great respect, for tomorrow we are celebrating the day named after you. Let all the people in the city of FULTON, observe this great day and let us rejoice that we have at least a chance again to show you, DEAR MOTHER, that our hearts are in the right place.

* * *

What would this world be, if it were not for MOTHERS, who toil and think always for OTHERS. She is the most unselfish creature born and we have a right to DEMAND respect for HER, the ONLY woman in the world. Take off your hats for MOTHER; wear that carnation and be proud of HER, who has done so much for you.

* * *

The MASTER MEN of FULTON on the Clean-up Campaign were: W. C. BURNS, F. E. GOODJON and J. A. MORRILL, who worked like trojans and showed that their hearts are as big as can be found anywhere. You men are respected by the entire community for the gigantic work you have done and we greet you as MASTER CITIZENS.

* * *

The FIRE DEPARTMENT, the POLICE DEPARTMENT and all those who have donated wagons, automobile trucks, and all the members of the ladies' and men's committees, are herewith extended the thanks of the FULTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, for the assistance they have given during the CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN.

* * *

The city of FULTON is cleaner now than it was ever before and we have in our experience never seen a CLEANER city than FULTON is today. Let's keep the good work up and let's show those other fellows that FULTON is in reality the CLEANEST city in the State of New York.

* * *

There are of course a few men in the city who, seemingly, do not have enough SELF-RESPECT in them to CLEAN UP their own premises. Those men are really not worth while mentioning, because they show that they have the wrong spirit in them.

* * *

The next great event will be GOOD ROADS DAY; this will be a day of hard work, because we want to get certain streets in good condition and we want to show the tourists that you can't beat FULTON in cleanliness and good roads.

* * *

There are men and women who are willing to get out any time for the sake of mankind and those people have the respect of the entire community, no matter who or what they are. Three cheers for those people and may they prosper forever and ever.

* * *

We witnessed the hard work done for the last few days by men and women who are in business and they did not forget their duties to the community. That's the class of people we are PROUD of.

* * *

FULTON can be and will be a city of co-operation.

* * *

Have you seen those nice flowers on the West side of the river? They have been planted in the little park just across the lower bridge. The people of the WEST SIDE are to be congratulated upon this great little park and we sincerely hope that the people of the EAST SIDE will take a lesson from the WEST SIDERS.

FULTON, the city of possibilities—so many that is is difficult to give it a name.

FULTON, the city beautiful.

"What Shall I Do With Jesus Who Is Called Christ?"

Last night Evangelist Peacock took his text from Matthew 27:22, "What Shall I Do With Jesus Who Is Called Christ?"

Almost 2,000 years have passed and gone since Pilate asked this question. It was an important question then, and it is an important question now. No more important question can come to anyone than the question, What shall I do with Jesus? It is a question that should be given consideration by every sane person in the world. There is no other question to be compared with the question, "What shall I do with Christ?" it is a question every one must decide for themselves.

From the time the angel of God announced to the shepherd lads who were keeping watch over their flocks "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior who is Christ the Lord," until Jesus was nailed to the cross, the enemies of God and the enemies of Christianity dogged His footsteps, tried to undermine his authority, and did everything in their power to make this world a regular hell for Him. They hated Jesus Christ, they despised the religion He founded, they did everything in their power to destroy His influence, and to keep people from becoming His followers. No matter where Christ went or what He did they found fault with Him. We find this same spirit in the world today. This reveals to us that humanity is a very treacherous thing. When people once turn against a man, they will do anything to ruin him. Nothing is too low or too mean or too contemptible for them to do. ePople will do anything in order to defeat the man they dislike. Especially if he has the courage and manhood to denounce their sins. They will lie enough in five minutes to send the whole cammunity to hell forever. This wa sthe way they treated Jesus. This is the way they have treated a great many people since the time of Jesus. The devil always has had, and always will have his imps. Many of these people who accused Christ of being anything but a gentleman were supposed to be the leaders in God's work. They hated Christ because He told them the truth about themselves. They accused Him of being a man who associated with ignorant people. They said: "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them." They said: "He is a gluttonous man and a wine bibber. He is a blasphemer, He stirs up sedition, He is a devil." This was the way they talked about Jesus and this was the way they treated Him.

Pilate, the author of this passage of Scripture, before whom Jesus had been brought for trial, knew all these things. He fully understood the spirit manifested by the enemies of Christ. He knew why they hated Christ, and why they thirsted for His blood. He was under obligation to protect Jesus, but he was a coward. But instead of doing his duty, he came out before the mob and said: "Whom will ye that I release unto you?" It was customary at the time of a certain feast for the governor to release a prisoner to the people whom they would. At this time they had a notable prisoner called Barabbas. The chief priests and the elders persuaded the people that they should ask for Barabbas, and when the governor said unto them: "Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you?" they said: "Barabbas!" Pilate said: "What shall I do with Jesus who is called Christ?" They all said: "Let Him be crucified!" Then Pilate took water and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it." Then answered all the people, and said, "His blood be on us, and on our children." Pilate delivered Jesus to the mob and to death because he was a moral coward. He had it in his power to save Jesus, but he feared Rome, and to protect himself he sacrified the son of God. This is where he made a mistake. This is where a great many people make mistakes. We are afraid of the people. No man ever did right but what some one opposed him. Men can find plenty to help them to heaven and they can find plenty to drag them to hell. We can find things to help us to do right, and we can find things to help us to do wrong. And every one has the power to decide which had it in his power to do right, but the course they intend to prsue. A lot of people know what they ought to do, but they haven't the courage and the backbone to do what they know is right. There isn't anything in all the world which stamps a man as being so low down and contemptible as to know the right and refuse to do it. Yet we find a great many people who consider themselves good citizens but refuse to do their duty as citizens. This is where they make a mistake. Pilate knew Jesus wsa a good man. Probably he had heard Him preach the glorious gospel of the Kingdom of God. Probably he had witnessed Jesus performing miracles. He knew from the life of Jesus and from the spirit manifested by Christ that He was a good man. This should have been sufficient to give him backbone enough to protect Jesus Christ. People are slapping Jesus in the face for the very same reason today. Some men will sell out to the devil for a two by four political job. Some people will sell out to the whiskey crowd for a few dirty dollars. People will slap Jesus in the face, slam the church of Jesus Christ, curse and damn the preachers, in order to keep in the favor of a few saloon keepers who are doing everything in their power to damn and curse the whole community. Some of them are church members. They are aafrid of the whiskey bunch. Some of them do not have even as much courage as Pilate. They haven't backbone enough to even wash their hands. They are contemptible cowards. And yet they want the good people of the community to respect them, when even the devil is ashamed of them.

Obey the Call.

Some may mock, some may sneer, some may laugh, some may refuse to take a hand for Christ, but you do your duty. Probably you have vowed you never would take this stand, that was the spirit of the devil and not the spirit of Christ. Forget the past, look forward into the future, consider the future destiny of your soul. You must decide this question. The decision you make will settle forever your happiness or your woes. If you reject Christ you are lost. This is a question we must decide for ourselves. Our friends can't do it, we must do it. Husbands cannot decide for their wives, wives cannot decide for their husbands, parents cannot decide for their children, children cannot decide for their parents, brothers and sister cannot decide for each other, we must decide the matter for ourselves. What shall I do with Jesus? The decision we make will mean heaven or hell. You folks know what you should do. You know you should accept Christ as your personal Savior. Are you going to do what you know in your own heart and soul you should do? Probably you do not have the courage to decide this matter in the right way. Probably you do not have the will power. Probably you cannot give up your sin. Some would accept Jesus if they could still live in sin. Some would come if they could still be impure. Some would come if they could still be dishonest or use intoxicating liquors, or be grafters or be moral perverts, and if they could still continue their intrigue and their skullduggery and their rottenness, they would be perfectly willing to identify themselves with the church, but thank God when people come to Jesus it is unconditional surrender.

Throw down your arms, my friends, if we want to follow Christ it must be unconditonal surrender to Jesus. Some say: "I won't accept and I won't reject. That is an impossibility. We must do one or the other. Jesus says: "He that is not with me is against me. He that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." He says: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Your stubborn will is keeping you out. You will not give up sin. You will not walk down the aisle. Probably you promised a dying father or a dying mother years ago that you would make your peace with God. Have you kept your promise? What are you going to do with Jesus. Not what is Herod or Pilate or your neighbor or your husband or your wife or your children or your uncle or your aunt, not what is society going to do, not what is the person beside you going to do, this a personal question: What are you going to do? What will your answer be? What will you do with Him tonight? What will you do with Him at death? What will you do with Jesus on the day of judgment? You cannot get away from Jesus. Turn Him down He will come back. Think what He would have done for you long ago if you had only permitted Him to come into your heart. I beg you in the name of Christ, present your bodies a iiving sacrifice wholly acceptable unto God which is your reasonable service.

My last appeal to you tonight is to accept Jesus Christ as your personal Savior. What decision are you going to make? What are you going to do with Jesus who is called Christ?

GERMANS BREAK BRITISH LINES

London.—Masses of German troops stormed and carried the British lines in the neighborhood of Lens, northern France, last night, but today a portion of the lost ground was won back.

There was desperate fighting in both engagments, and "heavy losses" are officially reported.

The center of the struggle was at Hulluck, just north of Lens and south of Vermelles. Hulluch was taken by the British in their offensive last September, and the Germans have made several attempts to recapture it. Hulluch commands Lens, and Lens is a strong base for an attack on the great German supply center, Lille.

The German attack today, therefore, mayhave been designed to break down an impending attempt at Lille, or it may be the beginning of a determined and general German offensive on the lengthened British lines. Color is letn to the latter proposition by the fact that there have been artillery duels all along the line as far north as Ypres, and continued, more violently on the Belgian front along the Yser.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEETING TONIGHT

No charge made for this space.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

This evening a meeting will be held in the tabernacle under the auspices of the City Health Department when Dr. F. W. Sears and Prof. Laurie D. Cox will speak on sanitation and landscape gardening. These two men will also show moving pictures and slides. This meeting is of importance, because it comes as such a good time right after the Clean-up campaign. It is the hope of the Health Department that a good crowd will greet the two speakers and the Chamber of Commerce, vitally interested in a movement of this kind, endorses it most heartily.

After all is said and done, you can't get away from the fact that FULTON is a good city. The history of the world has taught us that a city cannot be perfect in every detail and that it is up to the citizens to make it better and bigger. If every citizen of FULTON would work a little towards this end, there is no doubt to the fact that we will win in the end.

Repeatedly have we called the attention of the citizens of FULTON to the fact that the watchword of modern times is CO-OPERATION and not separation. Only by joining together for the common good, can we accomplish great things. As soon as we are going to SPLIT the ranks, we are lost and it will take another few years to get over the results of separation. Separation is nothing more or less than a sickness and we should do all we possibly can, to prevent this sickness from spreading and we should do all we possibly can to prevent this sickness from spreading all over the city. Join the good people who are working almost day and night in the interest of YOUR town. It pays you in the end, because conditions will get better and the result of this is that YOU will benefit.

Have you ever compared YOUR city with others? Have you ever seen the mistakes of other cities? If you have you will admit that there are worse cities than FULTON; in fact you will have to admit that FULTON is a GOOD city after all in which to live and work.

We appreciate HOME more after we have been away for a little while. You will appreciate FULTON more, if you will compare the city with other places on the American continent.

* * *

Never go out from the standpoint that you know it all; there are lots of things to be learned yet and when we can sit together in a friendly way and talk matters over, the different ideas we all have will form a basis on which to work.

* * *

What does it matter, if the other fellow thinks a little different than you do? Is it not true that we are all children of ONE FATHER? Let us have peace within the gates of our good city and let us prosper. That's better than a thousand arguments about the different thoughts we may have.

* * *

If you are willing to do something for your city, please attend the meeting this evening. It will do you good and your city also.

* * *

FULTON is a city that should be appreciated by every man, woman and child living here, because it is a GOOD city.

* * *

There are opportunities to be found all over the world for the man who is looking for them and who has the vision of taking them. But you have to admit that FULTON offers MORE opportunities to the square inch than many another city of its size and larger ones to the square mile.

Good citizens of Fulton
Will meet tonight
At the trail-hitters' shed
On the First street pike.

There'll be movies and talks,
So you'd better be there
And learn of our city, how
To make her more fair.

Put on your old bonnet,
Hike down there at eight,
Do your best for old Fulton
To keep her awake.

Germans Hold Ground Gained on Sunday

(By United Press.)

Berlin.—British troops were today unsuccessful in their efforts to drive back the Germans repulsed in their attack yesterday at Armentieres.

Following the usual heavy bombardment with every class of big gun, the Germans last night made three seperate attacks on the British trenches about the Ploegstreet woods, north of Armentieres, which is ten miles northwest of Lille.

One of the attacking detachments entered the British trenches, but in the other two cases the Scots rallied to the defense, and after a sharp hand-to-hand fight at the edge of the entrenchments dispersed the assailants.

The railroad man broke the seal on the car door and the first words uttered by the lad whose imprisonment lasted four days, was, "Please get me water."

"The Prodigal Son" Gave Peacock His Best Sermon Theme

Yesterday was a busy day at the tabernacle, and from every point of view, one of the most successful ones. The attendance at two of the services reached the 2,300 mark. The offerings at the morning meeting reached $108.38, and at the afternoon and evening they were $89.49 and $48.87 respectively.

The attendance for the last two days was as follows:

Saturday night..........1,700; trail hitters 36
Sunday morning..........2,300; trail hitters 107
Sundayafternoon (men)..1,800; trail hitters 42
Sunday morning (women) 1800; trail hitters 10
Sunday night..........2,300;; trail hitters 89

The reports for the previous meetings are: attendanee, 56,900; collections, $2,744.14; trail hitters, 1,877, making a grand total in each instance of 65,800, $3004.82 and 2161 respectively.

The present week will be one of the busiest and most interesting of the campaign, the program being as follows:

Tuesday—Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Y. P. U. and paper-makers.

Wednesday—Masonic night.

Thursday—Chocolate workers and High school students.

Friday—Business men, who will include all who work.

The business women of the city will partake of luncheon Tuesday and Friday at the noon hour at the Presbyterian and Congregational churches.

Miss Spear will entertain the High school girls at Bible class tomorrow afternoon immediately after the school hour. Mr. Warth will conduct a Bible class Wednesday and Friday at 2:30 p.m.

Miss Spear has a treat in store for the 7th and 8th grades of the public schools Thursday afternoon.

One week from tomorrow the prayer meeting districts 1, 2, 3, 21, 22, 23, which are located north of the lower bridge, will meet at the plaza at 7:15 and march to the tabernacle in a body. The day following districts 5 to 12 will meet at the N. Y. C. station at 7:15, and on Thursday districts 13 to 20 will meet at the same place and hour.

In announcing yesterday that no more offerings will be sought at the evening services this week, the Evangelist made one exception, that of the Salvation Army, who were described as a blessing to this community.

Last night's sermon was in part as follows:

Evangelist Peacock preached last night on "The Prodigal Son," taking as his text Luke 15:22, 23, "But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and a ring on his hand and shoes on his feet; and bring hither the fatted calf and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry."

God's way of dealing with man is altogether different from man's way of dealing with his fellow man. God not only forgives, but He is willing to give. His giving spirit is very seldom found among us. We think we have done our fellow man a great favor when we pardon, but we seldom go so far as to lavish favors where we have overlooked faults. Perhaps it is well enough to make those who offend, realize that they should do something for their short comings. But I question, very much, whether forgiveness is true which is not, like God's, attended by large hearted gifts.

GOOD FELLOWSHIP NEEDED

Co-operation is described in so many ways by different people that it seems superfluous to add one whit to what has been said about it. As we here, in Fulton, have come to know the word it applies to community building; and we believe it to be the golden key which unlocks the door of success.

No matter how much we may dislike to obey the demands made by the men in authority, in this or that enterprise; for instance, in cleaning up the city's dirty spots, there must essentially be behind the work a spirit of good-fellowship, which is sure to develop into co-operation for the general good of the community.

Every citizen of Fulton is an integral part of the community, and no success will attend any movement for the common good unless we recognize this fact. If this city is to be made the cleanest city in the Empire State it is necessary for every individual to pitch in and do his share, and the more who do this, the greater the influence for good it exerts on the man next door. It is not only a very selfish motive but a very narrow and contracted view to take for one person to consider his premises clean enough, and leave out the general welfare of the community in his transactions with others. The same principle applies also to business firms.

If Fulton is to be made a clean city every day in the year no exception should be made in our enforcement of the rules. If we insist upon one clean vacant lot, then why not every vacant lot and every spot on the river bank. Why rob one man of what he may think is his prerogative and allow the neighbor to have his way. By making fish of one and fowl of another we are hurting the cause of community building; we are keeping hidden the golden key, which unlocks the door of success of co-operation, and we cannot achieve the higher results. There is no such thing as half doing things.

SATURDAY NIGHT

In these amazingly fast days of cabarets and country clubs, of one-piece bathing suits and no-piece musical comedies, of twenty-cent liver and twenty-cent gasoline, we have got very far away from the good old Saturday night of by-gone generations. It is so far back to the old times that it almost seems like a dream; to the young it seems like a joke.

But let memory turn the curtain back and tonight let's live over the Saturday night of long ago, you of us who know of it by actual experience.

The week's work is done, says a Georgia editor, and the chores of the farm are over; the stock has been fed, the wood boxes in the kitchen and big house filled, the plow gear and stocks under the shed, and the farm has put on its Sunday dress.

The soil of toil has been removed by vigorous application of home-made soap, and the Sunday clothes donned. A clean shirt, home-laundered (we were independent of the Chink and the steam laundrymen those days) a tie of gorgeous colors fastened with a glistening pin of the mail order kind—there were no jewelry stores to supply us; brogan shoes of serviceable cowhide which took on renewed youth from a coat of suet and soot, carefully adcinistered.

Solomon in his glad raiment perhaps made a more glittering show, but he did not feel any more dressed up than the boy long ago as he left the home domicile to quickly foot the intervening miles to where she lived.

She had brothers—they always had—these gave the visitor a hearty welcome. Having done his own chores, he turned in to help the others, and these were over by the time the call to supper came. She was not in sight, but she knew he was there and he knew that she knew.

After the substantial supper, tender collards on a great flat dish flanked with slices of home-raised bacon; fresh butter and buttermilk, perhaps biscuits, but not always, and sweet potatoes; but to the long table with its benches on either side and her father and mother sitting at the ends, keen appetites were brought and the joy of youth and good fellowship lent a zest to the viands that those of many costly banquets since have lacked.

And after supper, when the dishes were cleared and the home made ready for the night, and she came out on the piazza, the soft rustle of her skirts, the faint perfume peculiar to her telling of her presence before his head was turned; and after awhile the brothers somehow disappeared and on the broad piazza he and she were alone except for the man in the moon, who smiled with the knowledge of the centuries and the cricket chirped by the steps. The scent of the jessamines in the white clean-swept yard filled the air and their blooms glistened like snow in the moonlight.

Youth and maid alone with God and love. And down from the ages the spirits of millions of lovers looked on and smiled, the kindly stars winked in friendly appreciation, and the twilight world was their friend, for all normal existence loves youth and lovers.

What mattered it to her that his clothes were coarse, his speech embarrassed and broken—they did not need the spoken word. What mattered to him that her best dress was calico, for was not the ribbon at her throat a thing of beauty surpassing, that in her air an aureole? What mattered to them that week past had been six days of toil? Was not the night, Saturday night, and the morrow Sunday, with Sunday school and church, and many hours of priceless companionship ahead?

This must have been what Saturday night was made for.—Gary (Ind.) Times.

PRECIOUS WASTE

Waste paper is now worth saving. Three pounds of old magazines will buy a pound of sugar. Rags are worth their weight in bread. The wastage of war has created extraordinary and undreamed of values for our waste. It is an intricate, topsy-turvey process, and when the war is over we shall soon open our eyes to other intricate and topsy-turvy processes, unthought of while the struggle continues.

But if we can be converted from our national extravagance to the transformation of our waste into marketable products our elemental lesson in conservation should have lasting value.—Country Gentleman.

Opinions

A DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S ETHICS

What are the duties and ethics of the office of district attorney? This question has arisen from the action of Claude B. Alverson, district attorney of Jefferson county, in accepting a retainer from Elmer E. Palmer, indicted in Onondaga county for complicity in the loss of thousands of dollars in connection with the construction of the county's hospital. Palmer has a Syracuse lawyer to defend him at the trial which is now proceeding under a change of venue in Watertown, but the district attorney of Jefferson county is helping Palmer's lawyer to fight the district attorney of Onondaga county.

The ordinary conception of the duty of a district attorney is that his business is to take sides against those accused of crime. Mr. Alverson apparently believes that this duty extends only to Jefferson county criminals.

To go a little further, it is doubtful whether a district attorney has the highest ethical conception of his office if he enegages in outside work which may interfere with his duties as district attorney, or which may make the expenses of his department higher. But to find a district attorney in one county standing by a person accused of crime in another county is unusual, to say the least. It is reported that Mr. Alverson offered to help the prosecuting attorney of Onondaga county for a price, but was not accepted. That probably explains the situation. Duty or ethics did not enter in the case. It was a matter of a retainer. At the next election of a district attorney in Jefferson county there will be at least one good candidate for private life.—Utica Observer.

Days You'll Never Forget

THE WURD "LOVE."

In the Orient It Means to Like or Is Used to Express Good Will.

The word "love" has been more highly specialized in the west than in the east. In its proper English use it means only that ardent, amorous feeling which cannot be created by will and design. In the west the word "love" has been relieved of the function of expressing the less ardent desires, such as the terms "to like," "to have good will toward" and "to be well disposed toward" simply.

Not so in the east. The word "like," meaning "to be favorably inclined toward," is not found either in the Bible or in the Arabic tongue. In the English version of the Bible it is used in two places, but the translation is incorrect. In the twenty-fifth chapter of Deuteronomy and the seventh verse, "If the man like not to take his brother's wife," should be rendered "If the man 'consent' not," and in the fourth chapter of Amos, the fifth verse, "For this liketh you, O ye children of Israel," is in the original, "For this ye 'loved,' O ye children of Israel." In any standard concordance of the Bible the Hebrew verb aheb—to love—precedes these quotations.

So to us orientals the only word which can express any cordial inclination of approval is "love." One loves his wife and children and loves grapes and figs and meat, if he likes these things. An employer says to an employee, "If you 'love' to work for me according to this agreement you can."

It is nothing uncommon for one to say to a casual acquaintance whom he likes, "I must say, sahib (friend), that I love you!" I know of no equivalent in the Arabic for the phrase, "I am interested in you." "Love" and "hate" are the usual terms by which to express approval and disapproval, as well as real love and hatred.

From all this it may be seen that when the Great Oriental Teacher said to his countrymen, who considered all other clans than their own as their enemies, "Love your enemies," he did not mean that they should be enamored of them, but that they should have good will toward them. We cannot love by will and design, but we certainly can will to be well disposed even toward those who, we believe, have ill will toward us.—Abraham Mitrie Rihbony in Atlantic Monthly.

SAINTS OF ILLS AND TRADES.

Holy Friendships Consoled Pious People In the Middle Ages.

The trustful and childlike piety of the middle ages believed that the citizens of heaven were interested in every phase of men's lives, and there was not a single trade, profession or occupation that did not boast a special patron, while certain diseases were thought to be cured and certain visitations warded off through the intercession and agency of particular saints.

Thus St. Andrew was the patron of fishermen, St. Isidore of husbandmen, St. Christopher of porters, St. Mark of lawyers, SS. Cosmas and Damian of doctors, St. Joseph of carpenters, St. Crispin of shoemakers, St. Vitus of actors, St. Gregory of singers, St. Dismas (supposed name of the good thief) of criminals condemned to death. St. Apollonia was believed to cure toothache. St. Blaise sore throat, SS. Clara and Lucy sore eyes, while St. Benedict preserved his clients from poison and St. Hubert from the bite of mad dogs.

"Men," says Montalembert, "lived in a tender and intimate familiarity with those forefathers whom God had evidently called to himself and whose sanctity the church has proclaimed. From the king and the pontiff to the poorest workman each had a special protector in heaven, and in the battles, dangers and sorrows of life these holy friendships exercised a most consoling and strengthening influence."—Irish World.

PULP FOR PAPER.

It Is Now Mainly Obtained From Wood and Vegetable Fibers.

Paper derives its name from the fact that it was originally made by the Egyptians from papyrus, a rushlike plant formerly common in Egypt along the Nile. Today paper is largely made from vegetable fibers and cellulose.

When it was found that the fibers of the cotton and flax plants were best adapted for making paper and the uses of paper were few the ragman did a flourishing business in buying old rags to keep the paper manufacturers supplied with raw material. The rags were first allowed to rot to remove the substances incrusting the cellulose and were then beaten into a pulp to which water was added. The pulp was then placed in a sieve and drained and subjected to heavy pressure which united the fibers and produced paper. By the modern method the rags are boiled with caustic soda, which separates the cellulose fibers, and placed in a machine in which rollers set with knives tear the rags to pieces and mix them with water to make a pulp. This pulp is bleached with chloride of lime and mixed with alum and a kind of soap to give a smooth surface.

The way man's discoveries operate to supply his needs in the progress of civilization is notably illustrated in the production of paper. Under the old method the big supply required today for newspapers and other uses could not have been produced.

The discovery that pulp could be made from the trunks and limbs of trees came to the rescue. It was found that by boiling wood shavings in strong solutions of caustic soda in receptacles that would withstand very high pressure the wood fibers were separated and a very good quality of cellulose for paper manufacture produced. As a result of this discovery paper today is mostly made of wood.—Boston Herald.

Fault of the Moon.

A partial eclipse of the sun was the subject of conversation in the little grocery store, where a number of villagers sat about awaiting bedtime.

A man happened to be present who was well versed in the subject under discussion, and he was asked to explain the curious phenomenon of an eclipse. He pointed out that the moon simply came between the earth and the sun and blotted out from view a part of the sun's surface.

"Waal," remarked an old veteran as he unburdened his mouth of a deluge of tobacco juice, "it sure is a pity the moon wasn't full, 'cause then we'd had a total eclipse."—Indianapolis News.

STORY OF A SEANCE.

In Which the Medium Predicted a Royal Assassination.

Eleanor Calhoun was an American actress who went to London when James Russell Lowell was United States minister. In 1903 she became by marriage the Balkan Princess Lazarovich Hrebelianovich. Recently she wrote a book which bears the title "Pleasures and Palaces."

The book contains the strange story of a spiritualistic seance held by an Englishwoman, which was attended by W. T. Stead, who afterward went down on the Titanic; the princess and her husband and some others. The prince handed to the medium some sealed envelopes. She selected one, sat for a moment pressing it in her hand, and said, "This is from a person of importance—a king."

Mr. Stead then asked her to describe him. She gave a very good description of King Alexander of Servia, though she could not tell his name or his country. Suddenly she leaped up, her eyes tight shut, her face white, and, speaking as though she were in the midst of a real scene, she described the assassination of the king and queen. Mr. Stead asked what soldiers they were and of what race, and she answered: "I don't know. I never saw such people. Their uniforms resemble the Russians, but they are not Russians." Then she uttered exclamations of horror and said, "Oh, Mr. Stead, let me not go on!"

Mr. Stead, says the writer, urged the seer, and she proceeded to describe the tragedy. This seance was held in March, 1903, and the murders did not occur until the following June.

Rodin and His Models.

It is one of the peculiarities of M. Rodin, the famous sculptor, that he never poses a model. When a model enters his studio he engages her in conversation upon a subject foreign to art and thus encourages her to forget herself. Meanwhile his attention appears to be engrossed elsewhere, but he is watching her keenly. When the model unconsciously assumes a pose or an expression which he believes would be effective he bids her hold that position, while he sets to work. By this method he believes he avoids stilted and studied poses.

It is impossible to know who was the author of the multiplication table, but it is known to have been in existence in the days of the builders of the ruined cities of Mesopotamia, whose records are now being patiently deciphered by archaeologists. His Job.

"What position has that amateur astronomer on your paper?"

"He? Oh, he's a star reporter."—Baltimore American.

The allegorical peace group in "The Birth of a Nation," returning to The Quirk theater, May 19 and 20, with matinee Saturday.

A well-known artist visiting D. W. Griffith's Los Angeles studio recently remarked on the film director's almost uncanny gift of composition. "Griffith," he said, "groups his figures like an artist in oils—water color rather than like a stage director. I don't know whether he ever studied perspective, composition and harmony or not, but anyhow his mass pictures to my mind have the same quality as those of the greatest artists."

This remark was occasioned particularly from watching Mr. Griffith assemble the multitude in the scenes of war and peace in "The Birth of a Nation." The scene representing the future brotherhood of love and peace is a remarkable work. The effect of distance is obtained by constructing two stages with rising steps, one near the camera and the other removed about 100 feet. Between the two stages there is a hollow. The principals are stationed on the near stage, then comes the intervening hollow, and finally the more distant features of the background show on the second or more remote platform. The ultimate distance fades into blackness, contrasting wonderfully with the gauzy robes and veilings of the characters at the fore. Costumes of many nations are used, but the effect is light and gossamer-like, the joy of a fiesta in the Land of Utopia.

In striking contrast is Mr. Griffith's treatment, in "The Birth of a Nation," of the contrasting theme of the misery of war, wan, skeleton-like figures are selected. Their dress is of many lands and nations, but all suggestive of grime and cordidness. Some of the lean emaciated figures are bare to the waist. Men and women are strewed about the stage like the piled up victims of a battlefield. Arms are raised in entreaty to Heaven. Bodies, legs and arms (as it were) shreds of human beings are inextricably mixed. Utter woe stamps itself upon that picture as pure joy radiates from the other. Griffith's method of making it caused one clever artist to nickname it a "human salad." But that is not how it impresses the spectators, who sense the mighty thought, the deep emotional appeal, in the wonderfully bizarre effects.

MONEY IN WOODEN LEG.

Body to Be Exhumed In Search For Woman's Wealth.

St. Louis, Mo.—Charles Kroener of Detroit will have the body of Miss Elizabeth Hauck exhumed at Alton to look for money which he thinks she may have concealed in her wooden leg. When she died, Sept. 15, $700 was found in her clothing. Kroener, who was her guardian, thinks she must have had more money than that.

Kroener also doubts whether the finding of the coroner's jury that she killed herself is correct. He is making an investigation and will place evidence in the hands of the state attorney and ask him to take action.

Miss Hauck was thirty-five years old. She was formerly in the millinery business in St. Louis, at California avenue and Arsenal street. She set herself up in business with part of the $3,000 she received from a railroad company for the loss of her leg twenty years ago. On account of failing health she stored her millinery stock and went to Alton.

SHE FAINTS AT WAR NEWS.

Later Seized With Convulsions After Reading Newspaper Headlines.

New York.—A well dressed woman gazed fixedly at headlines of newspapers on a stand at Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue for a few moments and then fainted. Later she was seized with convulsions.

The hundreds attracted by her screams and struggles with two policemen heard her say she had lost two brothers in the war. Dr. Loughlin of St. Vincent's hospital diagnosed the case as acute dementia, probably caused by her bereavement, suddenly recalled by what she had read in the headlines.

At Bellevue hospital the woman said she was Mollie Fogarty, but gave no address. She is about thirty-five years old.

Three Brothers Lose Eye Apiece.

Albert Lea, Minn.—The right eye of Hugo Brenner, a young farmer, was torn from its socket the other day while he was cutting down a tree. This is the third accident of its kind in the Brenner family. While his brother William was playing mumble-the-peg recently his companion flipped the knife too high, and the sharp blade penetrated the left eye. Another brother was kicked in the right eye by a colt.

A CENSORED LADY

American Author Whose Book Has Been Suppressed.

WAS AT FRONT TRENCHES.

One of the Four Women War Correspondents Sent Out by the Biggest Magazine Gives Her Definition of War—Describes Her Impressions Eloquently.

When the editor sent four women correspondents to the great war because he believed that "the big story of a war is never at the front, but in the hospitals and in the homes, that war is largely a woman's affair, and woman, I think, best understand the little things that go to make up the big story," Mary Roberts Rinehart, trained nurse, wife of a Pittsburgh physician, author of several successful plays and many delectable stories, was one of the women picked by the magazine.

She interviewed both Queen Mary of England and the king and queen of the Belgians. Her description of refurbishing up her toilet before presenting herself at La Panne, her quest of shoe buttons in ravaged Belgium and her final transfer of those she had from the top of her boots to that section most prominent below her gown when she sat is one of the liveliest parts of her story. Her latest book has recently been suppressed by the British censor on the ground that it contained information of value to the enemy. When asked what effect the nearness of battle had on her own literary powers Mrs. Rinehart replied:

"I do not know how other writers are affected, but I could do nothing at the front. I wrote the interview with the king of the Belgians there and ruined a really fine opportunity. Of course I have had no newspaper training. But that was not the only trouble. For me writing has two phases, each distinct from the other. One is receiving and absorbing impressions; the other is giving them out. And between the two there must be a lapse of time to give me perspective, to let me see the 'high light,' as it were—to know what should be emphasized. It is a matter of proportion, as all writing is. That is why I think that the real literature of the war will come after the world is once more at peace.

"Once under a great strain I did write something that reflected my attitude of mind. I had just been through a bombardment by aeroplanes, and I wrote that night with cold hands and a hot head my definition of war. It is this:

"'War is not two great armies meeting in a clash and frenzy of battle. It is much more than that. War is a boy carried on a stretcher, looking up at God's blue sky with bewildered eyes that are soon to close; war is a woman carrying a child that has been wounded by a shell; war is spirited horses tied in burning buildings and waiting for death; war is the flower of a race torn, battered, hungry, bleeding, up to its knees in icy water; war is an old woman burning a candle before the Mater Dolorosa for the son she has given for king and country!'"

The Raffle.

Nellie, aged nine, was learning to crochet. One day she saw a large crocheted quilt, which was to be raffled off, hanging in a store window. She read the announcement and looked at the quilt with amazement. What an endless amount of work it seemed!

"Mother," she cried on entering her home, "there's a crocheted quilt in Mack's window with a big card on it that says it is to be raveled out at 10 cents a chance—all that work for nothing!"—Harper's Magazine.

MINISTER QUITS CHURCH BECAUSE MEMBERS SMOKE

He Did Not Want Tobacco Used at Informal Meetings of a Brotherhood. Members Bitterly Opposed Him.

Jefferson City, Mo.—As the result of a controversy with the members of the local Presbyterian brotherhood over the question of whether there should be smoking at the informal meetings of that body, Rev. J. A. Cowling, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Jefferson City, resigned.

Mr. Cowling was opposed to the use of tobacco by members of the brotherhood at their meetings and on one occasion openly suggested that smoking be not permitted. The members of the brotherhood, by common consent, went on with the smoking at the meetings. First one and then another member would bring along a box of cigars.

The smoking controversy went on for several weeks, and gradually the relations between pastor and brotherhood became more strained, with the result that Mr. Cowling tendered his resignation and the congregation voted to accept it.

Stuffed Sweetbreads.

Materials.—Six sweetbreads, a pint plain stuffing, one-half cupful mushrooms, sliced; toast, beaten egg, flavor, four tablespoonfuls butter, three-fourths cupful cream, a tablespoonful flour, two tablespoonfuls orange juice, cracker crumbs, salt and pepper.

Way of Preparing.—Parboil the sweetbreads until tender. Plunge them into cold water. Drain, wipe dry and trim into shape. Make a plain stuffing, as for poultry. Cut a pocket in the sweetbreads and stuff. Then sew up the pocket. Melt the butter in the chafing dish, flour the sweetbreads lightly, then dip them in the beaten egg, roll in crumbs and fry in the butter in the chafing dish. Remove to a hot platter. Now add the flour to the butter in the chafing dish. When it bubbles add the orange juice, cream, mushrooms and salt and pepper to taste. Cook five minutes. Arrange six pieces of toast on a platter, place the sweetbreads on the toast, pour the sauce over and around, garnish with sliced oranges and watercress and serve. These stuffed sweetbreads will be found delicious for a Sunday supper or an informal dinner.

TO AID FARMERS.

New Organization Recently Formed Will Advance Agriculture.

JAMES WILSON IS PRESIDENT.

T. N. Vail, Vice President, and T. Coleman du Pont, R. V. Lindabury and W. H. Moore Among Directors—Will Be Farmers' Mouthpiece.

New York.—The organization of the National Agricultural society, to improve agricultural conditions throughout the country, was completed at a meeting of prominent men here.

James Wilson, who was secretary of agriculture in the cabinets of Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft, was elected president, and Theodore N. Vail, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, was chosen as vice president. Mr. Vail is largely interested in agriculture, having founded an agricultural school for boys on his farm in Vermont, which he recently turned over to the state.

G. Howard Davidson was elected chairman of the executive committee. Mr. Davidson was one of the founders of the International Live Stock exposition and is identified with many agricultural and live stock associations. These directors were elected: James Wilson, Theodore N. Vail, G. Howard Davison, T. Coleman du Pont, John A. Spoor, Richard V. Lindabury, William H. Moore, Henry C. Stuart, James W. Wadsworth, Jr., Robert A. Fairbairn, Samuel Insull, Charles A. Otis, N. H. Gentry, Peter Jansen, Fairfax Harrison, Walter A. Johnson, P. C. Long.

T. Coleman du Pont, who lately secured control of the Equitable Life Assurance company, is one of the largest breeders of prize dairy cattle in his home state of Delaware. John A.

JAMES WILSON.

Spoor, chairman of the board of the Union Stockyards and Transit company of Chicago, was one of the men responsible for the success of the International Live Stock exposition. Richard V. Lindabury has found time to reach a high place in the agricultural world because of his success in improving the breed of Guernsey cattle and Berkshire pigs. William H. Moore, a director of the National Biscuit company and interested in other large New York enterprises, is a familiar figure at horse shows both in this country and abroad.

Governor Henry C. Stuart of Virginia is the largest raiser of beef cattle in the south. He made the production of beef on a large scale successful in the east. Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., is the proprietor of a model farm at Geneseo, N. Y. He also has had extensive ranching experience in Texas. Robert A. Fairbairn, vice president of the International Paper company and one of the foremost breeders of Clydesdale horses, has for years been interested in the work of the New Jersey state live stock commission. The studs of Samuel Insull on a 4,000 acre farm in Illinois are known throughout the middle and far west.

Charles A. Otis and N. H. Gentry, the former in New York state and the latter in Missouri, are known to up to date agriculturists for their work in cattle and horse breeding. Peter Jansen of Nebraska has been rated as the largest sheep raiser in the central west. As president of the Southern railway and a practical farmer in his native state of Virginia Fairfax Harrison has worked consistently for the improvement of farmers' conditions in the south. Walter A. Johnson, who was elected treasurer, and P. C. Long, who was chosen as secretary, both have been long connected with farmers' publications.

Among others who have been instrumental in organizing the society are James J. Hill and W. K. Vanderbilt of New York, J. H. Wade of Cleveland, Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, Mortimer L. Schiff of New York, William du Pont of Virginia, ex-Senator C. W. Watson of Maryland, V. Everit Macy and W. Averill Harriman of New York.

It is felt by those responsible for the founding of the National Agricultural society that there should be in this country a national organization to which the farmers could look for help and guidance and which would be their mouthpiece in agricultural matters of national concern. Permanent headquarters for the society eventually will be established at Washington.

MISSIONS FOR MEN AND CHILDREN

First of Services Held Yesterday---Mass Each Morning at 5 O'Clock---Non-Catholics Welcomed.

With a high mass at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning, at which Rev. Father John Lindsman, pastor of the church was celebrant, the mission for men, under the direction of the Franciscan Fathers, began at the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Fathers Austin and Stephen, O. M. C., who conducted the mission during the past week for women at the church, will be in charge of the services this week also, and in a short address yesterday Father Lindsman took occasion to laud the work of the missionaries among the women of the parish. The result of their labor was plainly visible already, Father Lindsman said, as evidenced by the increased number of parishioners who attended the sacraments during the past week. More than 850 confessions were heard at the church in this city, and 150 people went to the sacraments in Phoenix, where the priests also conducted a mission. Yesterday morning at the 8:30 mass, a large throng received the sacrament of the Eucharist. Father Lindsman urged the attendance of the men of the parish at the mission services, and delegated several men of the parish to act as ushers during the week.

Services for Children.

Before the first sermon of the men's mission, which was delivered at the conclusion of the mass, Father Stephen announced that a special mission for the school children, both those who attend the public schools and the parochial schools, will be held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. The first service for the children will be held this morning at 11 o'clock, and there will be an afternoon service at 4 o'clock. Tomorrow the hours of service will be the same, and on Wednesday the children's mission will conclude with instruction at 11 o'clock. By special arrangement with J. R. Fairgrieve, superintendent of schools, an excuse from the parents will permit any child to leave the school in time to attend the morning service. The afternoon services will be held after school hours.

A mission for the Italian Catholics of the parish as been arranged and on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, an Italian priest from Syracuse will hear the confessions of the Italian parishioners, and deliver a short instruction in the basement of the church, If necessary, the Italian mission will be extended to Friday night. The congregation was asked to convey this news to their acquaintances among the Italian people of the city.

Father Stephen again reminded the people that the mission was not confined to the attendance of Catholics, but that non-Catholics of every denomination were heartily welcome at all times.

"We preach nothing but the truth," said the missionary, "and nothing that has not been told before. If any of your friends of a different belief express a desire to attend the services, invite them to come, they may be interested."

Women's Services Closed.

aFther Stephen announced that the mission for women would close Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at which time all the women who made the mission during the past week would assemble in the church. A renewal of baptismal vows would be made, and the Benediction of the Holy Father would be given, the services to connclude with Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

During the mens' mission, the services will begin with mass at 5 o'clock in the morning, followed by a short instruction by the missionary in charge. This service will surely conclude every morning by 5:45, allowing the men who have to go to their work at an early hour plenty of time in which to return home for breakfast. Another mass will be said at 8 o'clock, which will also conclude with a short instruction about 8:45. The evening services will begin promptly at 7:45 o'clock, and will consist of the recitation of the Rosary, a sermon, and Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Liberality in the collections during the coming week was asked of the people, and Father Stephen explained that the money would be expended in work of the order, principally in the training of young men for the priesthood. None of the Franciscan missionaries receive any salary, and in joining the order they give up all claim of ownership to anything.

"I charge you, before God and Jesus Christ, to preach the Word of God, in season and out of season, to rebuke, to entreat and to reprove, but always with charity." These words, taken from the Epistle of St. Paul to Timothy, were selected by Father Stephen for his sermon.

Object of Mission.

The missionary said in part:

"These words of the epistle, words of the greatest missionary of all time, constitute the instructions given every priest of the Church at his ordination. It is in accordance with these orders that we are here to hold this mission for the people of this parish, and to place before your eyes your condition at the present time, and in the past, that you may choose for the future. We are here to preach to you, to reprove you, to rebuke you if necessary, but always with charity."

"And through this work which we hope to accomplish by the mission for the men of the parish, we hope to bring true happiness to the your hearts.

"In what does true happiness consist, you ask?

Some of you, perhaps, have attempted to find happiness in worldly power. Others among you have hoped to become permanently happy in establishing a proud name. Some in the gathering of riches. But there is not a man among you who will not admit that true happiness can not be found through any of these channels. The only true happiness comes thru the service of God, and through this mission we hope to bring you into His service.

"This mission is not expected to make saints, but it will, I am sure, close the gates of Hell against any many a man of this parish. The mission is not only for those of you who have long been negligent in your duties to God, but also to those who observe their church duties carefully. It is only human nature to become lukewarm and indifferent to religion, and the mission is held to arouse all Catholics to a state of fervent love and devotion to God."

AMERICAN AUTOISTS ENJOY RECIPROCITY

Albany.—New York State automobilists crossing into the province of Ontario, Canada, will no longer be required to take out Canadian license plates at an expense of anywhere from $6 to 35. A like courtesy is to be extended to motorists entering this State from across the border. A twenty-one day reciprocal agreement will be entered into between New York State and Ontario this week, the cabinet of the former having already ratified an act of Parliament to that end. Steps to secure such were taken last January when Secretary of State Hugo and Herbert W. Baker of the New York State Aumobile Association met and addressed a large gathering of Toronto motorists.

WEST BROADWAY

ABOUT THE TOWN

The town is in the midst of a far-reaching religious revival, and in every quarter the small-talk turns to trail-hitting and conversions. The motion picture houses are playing to small crowds, and dispensers of liquid refreshment of the stronger variety are experiencing a decided lull in business. They say that Evangelist Peacock's sermon on "Booze" knocked many of them out of their seats, to use a theatrical term, at the Tabernacle yesterday.

A. P. Huggins, who formerly conducted a taxicab business in this city, returned from Eddystone, Pa., Saturday for a short visit. Mr. Huggins is now employed as production foreman of the final assembling department of the Eddystone plant of the Remington U. M. C. Arms and Ammunition Co., and will move his family to his new home in Collingwood, Pa., some time this week. Mr. Huggins plans to make the return trip in his car. He reports plenty of work in the Remington plant and great industrial activity generally throughout the eastern part of the Keystone state. Several other Fultonians who are employed at Eddystone, have received rapid advancement and are doing well, according to Mr. Huggins.

With two consecutive victories to their credit, the Fulton High school baseball team has made a flying start of the season. Oswego fell an easy victim to the locals Friday afternoon, and on Saturday the home lads administered a bitter pill to the Mexico high school team. The Fulton lads are after the county championship this year and, if they continue the season as they have started it, their chances of copping the honor are better than even.

It is reported that crops are suffering from too much rain in the farming districts about the city. Last year a long drought made the spring season a backward one, and this year the farmers are hoping for sunshine.

The marriage of Philip R. Stevenson of this city to a Watertown belle occasioned great surprise among the young man's friends here. It is said that his bride and her most intimate girl friend had planned to go to Denver in the near future where they were to be married to two young men of that city at a double wedding. Mr. Stevenson's advent, however, necessitated a change in plans, and now the other young lady has decided that she doesn't want to make the trip to Detroit alone, and the probabilities are that both Michigan swains will be disappointed. However, there are several eligibles left in Fulton, and doubtless in Watertown, in spite of the fact that it has been a hard winter.

Nathan Nadler, for the past ten months salesman and window-dresse of the Bennett store on South First st., resigned Saturday, and will leave the city some time this week to take a position with a Syracuse mercantile house. Mr. Nadler was recently married, and his bride is a Syracuse girl.

Just as we were under the impression that our large and imposing post office was commanding enough to attract instant notice, a traveling man, a stranger in the city, walked up to the library Saturday night, and dropped his week-end mail in the slot of the door, under the impression, doubtless, that the library was the post office. The librarian turned the mail matter over to Postmaster Conley this morning.

TENNIS CLUB FORMED OVER THE GREAT DIVIDE

Ernest Black, the West Side baker, and several young men of the First ward, who are enthusiastic tennis players, have formed a tennis club, and work on the courts, which will be laid out on land owned by Mr. Black near the Walradt st. school, will be started this week. The courts will be modern in every respect, and the players will have the privilege of using the shower baths and dressing rooms in Mr. Black's plant.

Good tennis courts in this city are few and far between, and since there are many young people on both sides of the river who are enthusiasts in the racquet game, it is probable that many applications for membership will be received by the founders of the new club. The membership fee will be a nominal one, but only a restricted number will be permitted to join, in order that the courts may not be overcrowded.

71 CYCLES, $88.75 FEES RECORDED

Albany.—With a total of 9,293 motorcycles registered in this State during the past month, 15 of the number by non-residents, the sum of $11,607.25, representing onehalf the registration fees, is now being returned by Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo to the counties to become available immediately for the maintenance and repair of State and county highways. The motorcycle law became effective April 1st. New York county registered the most machines during the month, 1,033; Kings and Erie counties sharing second place with 990 machines while Hamilton county had the distinction of not registering a single one.

The April report shows 71 machines registered from Oswego county, giving the county $88.75 for use on its improved roads. In addition to the regular amount that has come thru the registration, the State is also some dollars richer by reason of certain miscellaneous fees.

Of the total registered last month, 8,157 were classed as pleasure and 1,136 as commercials. A total of 47 motorcycles are so far exempt from registaation fees.

Under the provisions of the new law, New York city receives a check of $3,375.50 this month from Secretary Hugo, the amount being one-half the fees received from registration of motorcyclists in the Bronx, Kings, New York, Queens and Richmond counties. The check made payable to the city chamberlain, is to be used in meeting the ordinary expenses of the city. The checks going to all other counties represent one-half the registration fees received from that county the past month, the other fifty per cent going to the State Treasurer to be used in the general maintenance and repair of the State roads.

Odd Superstitions.

In England there is a superstition that if a bride and groom eat periwinkle leaves together they will love one another. Should he after marriage prove recalcitrant here is a way to win him back: Take a piece of the root of a wallflower and a partridge's heart, roll them into a ball and make the man eat it. If you want to know whether your lover loves you crush some bleeding heart. If the juice is red he does, but if it is white he does not.—London Globe.

FATHER AUSTIN SPOKE TO MEN

Deprecates the Haste and Waste of Modern Men and Conditions--Father Stephen Preaches Tonight.

A large congregation of men attended the first sermon of the mission for men at the Church of the Immaculate Conception last night. Father Austin, O.M.C., was the preacher.

After the Rosary had been recited at the beginning of the service, Father Stephen, O.M.C., was the preacher. dress, urged the men to come out in large numbers for the mission this week, and called particular attention to the spititual benefits derived from the devotion known as the Stations of the Cross. He explained the significance of the pictures of the Stations which adorn the walls of every Catholic church, and the purpose of the devotion. The men were asked to make the Stations at least once every day.

Before Father Austin began his sermon, the men of the congregation joined with the choir in singing, "Come, Holy Ghost."

Father Austin chose as his text the words of the Gospel, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his soul; or what exchange shall a man give for his soul?"

'What For?"

He said in part:

"If you were to go with me and stand on any corner of the business streets of your city tomorrow morning as men were hurrying past to their daily work and put this question to them, "Whither goest thou?" you would in all probability be answered for the most part with a highly significant smile, which could be intepreted in th words, "You poor fool!" If, however, you succeeded in obtaining an answer from a passerby, he would say to you, "I have a wife and a family, dependent upon me for their daily bread. I am going to work. I must work that they may live."

"If you were to go into the office o fa business man, and put the question to him, in some instances he would say, "Here's a dollar for the charity you are collecting for, I have no time to talk to you." And if you were able to draw from him an answer to your question, he would reply, "I am here at work. I must continue to work in order to remain in the forward ranks of business. I want to be a success and if I stop work, my competitors will ruin me, and the world will pass by and leave me in the lurch."

"A professional man, a doctor, a lawyer or a student would reply in the same vein. They would tell you that it was absolutely necessary for them to continue at the grind if they wished to be looked upon as men in the forward ranks of their professions."

Few Exceptions.

"Then, my friends, you might ask another question, and that is this, 'What for? Why all this bustle and hustle, why this never-ending study and toil?'

"Again you would receive many different answers. The laboring man would tell you that he was forced to work and could not afford to stop and shirk the responsibility that rests upon his shoulders. The business man's answer would be familiar. The professional man and student would say they were forced to continue, because only by study and practice could they be considered leaders in their professions.

"I grant that men must work, that the poor laborer must toil in order to sustain those who depend upon him for bread, any man with a spark of manhood in him will not shiry his responsibilities. But I do insist that these words, "What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and suffer the loss of his soul," are applicable today, just as much so as they were twenty centuries ago, when they were first uttered by our Saviour.

The Soul Immortal.

'We are not animals, my friends, We are not easily satisfied, nor can we find lasting happiness in things of this world, in comforts and luxuries. Read the pages of history. Even the pagans of old realized before and definite knowledge of a God had become to them, that they were a distinct part of creation. They realized that they possessed a soul, and that soul was immortal.

"Any thinking man today will admit that every man possesses a soul, something that raises him above the level of the brute beast.

"Take your laborer, your doctor, your business man, and give him everything he wants in this world. Take the laborer from his humble cottage and put him in the lap of luxury. Raise him into the highest ranks of society. What will be gain in the end? Is he satisfied? No! For a short time, perhaps, he is amused and pleased like a child with a new toy. But soon he becomes tired of his new life and aspires to something else.

"And what is the reason? Man is not satisfied with earthly things because man is destined for Heaven and God alone can satisfy him."

Father Stephen will preach at the services tonight, which will begin at 7 45: o'clock. The children of the parish will attend a mission service this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

WAGON BORE NO TAIL LIGHTS

A fatality was narrowly averted on the West River road north of the city Saturday night when Louis Salisbury and Maurice Kennedy, both of Minetto, who were riding a motorcycle and sidecar to this city, crashed into the rear end of a wagon, and were hurled to the road. The men were proceeding toward Fulton at a lively gait, and Salisbury, the owner of the machine, was operating it. A horse and wagon suddenly loomed up out of the darkness, and Salisbury, taken unawares because the wagon carried no rear lights, just managed to pass the vehicle safely. The men were congratulating themselves on their shave, when another wagon was overtaken, only a few feet further on, and this time Salisbury could not guide the machine past and the crash resulted.

Both men were rendered unconscious for a few moments by the impact, and a passing machine was requisitioned to bring them to the Lee Memorial hospital in this city. Dr. Kellar was called and an examination disclosed that Salisbury had sustained a compound fracture of the humerus in his upper right arm, and several severe bruises about the face and body. Kennedy, who landed on his head and face in the road, had a badly bruised face, a large cut over his right eye, a cut on the head, and contusions of the bladder and liver. Fear is expressed that complications may result from his internal injuries.

Both men were resting comfortably at the hospital this morning. The machine was almost a total wreck, and the wagon was also badly damaged.

Hens Lay Two Eggs a Day.

Sandusky, O.—Henry McEllery, a farmer living near Milan, says he has built a henhouse so illuminated with acetylene gas that each day is divided into four periods, two of darkness and two of light so alternated that his hens have what they think is two days and two nights every twenty-four hours. "The result is an egg from each hen every time one of the artificial days dawns," said McEllery, who, fighting the high cost of living, refuses to protect his scheme.

DISLIKES AWARDS IN SMALL SUMS

Would Have Compensation for Injuries Sustained in One Lump Sum---Pendergast Presses Claim.

George H. Robillard, of West 1st st., this city, who was awarded $15 a week by the State Compensation Commission some time ago, appeared Saturday in Syracuse before the entire State Commission, in proceedings instituted by his attorney, Robert Pendergast, of this city, to compel the insurance company to pay Mr. Robillard either a lump sum of $35000 or to grant an increase over the weekly allowance of $15.

Robillard was employed by the Charrebois and Deline Construction Company on the work of erecting the new plant of the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Company, last October. While at work one day on a scaffold, with James Donohue, also of this city, the scaffold broke and both men fell to the ground. Robillard sustained an injury to his back, which will probably prevent him from working at his trade for the rest of his life. The Charlesbois Deline company was protected by compensation insurance, and the insurance company attempted to prove that kidney trouble was responsible for Robillard's disability and not the accident. Commissioner Richards of the State Commission awarded Robillard $15 a week, and the jury disagreed in the suit of Donohue against the company.

The insurance company has appealed the Robillard verdict and counsel for Robillard is also continuing the case, in an attempt to have the company settle with a lump sum. Donohue testified at the hearing Saturday, which will be continued this week.

GRANBY'S PITCHER EASY FOR WOODMEN HITTERS

The Woodmen's baseball team opened the season yesterday with a win over the Granby Paper company team on the Fair grounds, by a score of 21-11. The game was close until the eight inning, when the count stood 11-9 in favor of the Woodmen, but in the eighth the Woodmen landed on Tyler, the Granby pitcher, with a vengeance, and batted in ten runs.

L. Bray, Barnes and G. Bray formed the battery for the winners, while Tyler and McCaffery were in the points for the Granby team.

FAY PIPER VISITS SCENES OF YOUTH

Fay Piper, son of Mr and Mrs. Giles S. Piper of this city, arrived here Saturday from his home in Montana for a short stay with his parents. This is the first time that Mr. Piper has seen his native town in many years, and he is busy renewing boyhood acquaintances and visiting familiar spots about the city.

Almost twenty years ago, while attending a boys' school at Manlius, N. Y., Fay Piper decided to run away, and with a boy companion he left the school and made his way westward. His companion lost courage after some months of wandering and came back home. Young Piper's parents attempted to locate their son thru his companion but the lad knew nothing of Fay's whereabouts.

Mr. and Mrs. Piper mourned their son as lost for many years and no word of him was heard until last summer, when like a bolt from the clear sky he wrote his parents, informing them that he had settled in Montana and was doing well as a rancher. His parents immediately planned a trip West to see their long-lost son, and a happy reunion followed.

Fay Piper expressed a desire at that time to return to the East and visit Fulton, but business duties prevented him from coming until last week. The town has assumed an entirely new aspect since he saw it, and his father is experiencing a great deal of pleasure in showing him around and pointing out the improvements that have been made during the past decade.

TWO INJURED IN CYCLE CRASHES

New Owner Unable to Turn Sharp Corner Smasned St. Louis' Store Front---Car Uninjured.

Two motorcycle accidents over the week-end marked the opening of the motorcycle season in this vicinity. One accident in which two vehicles were involved, nearly resulted fatally, and two men were seriously injured.

Tony DiBello, of 404 Erie st., the proud owner of a new motorcycle and side-car which he had just purchased, tried conclusions with the side of a brick building occupied by J. H. St. Louis in South 1st st. yesterday morning, and came out second-best. Di Bello, it appears, had a rather hazy knowledge of the operation of his machine, but was confident of his own ability and invited a friend to occupy the side-car yesterday morning. After touring about the city without mishap, DeBello guided his machine down the Cayuga st. hill, and when it gained momentum rapidly after crossing the railroad tracks at 2d st., he became confused and by improper manipulation of the controls increased the speed of the motor. He attempted to turn the corner of Cayuga and South 1st sts. to the north, but the machine swerved across the slippery pavement and brought up with a crash against the front windows of the St. Louis establishment. DiBello and his passenger were catapulted from their seats, but escaped with a few scratches. The motorcycle, likewise, was little damaged, but a large pane of glass in the lower part of one of the display windows of the store was smashed into fragments and part of the window frame torn away.

Officer Smith, who was on duty in the business section heard the crash and arrived just as DiBello was explaining how it all happened. The officer took the man's name and address and released him on his promise to appear in court this morning. It is probable that a charge of reckless driving will be preferred against him.

LET UP PROTEINS.

Avoid "Spring Fever" by Cutting Down Fuel.

SUMMER DEMANDS LESS FOOD

Warm Weather Means You Can Replace Hot Soups, Thick Gravies, Heavy Sweets and Rich Pastries With Greens, Salads, Fish and Fruits.

It will be only a few days now before some one will be heard to complain of "that tired feeling" so inseparably connected with springtime. But why not try a little modern therapeutics and see if you cannot escape that tired feeling this year? The tired feeling comes from only one thing, and that is an overclogged system. To use the hackneyed but nevertheless illuminating comparison, the body may be likened to a steam heating plant which has been going at a pretty high pressure all winter, but now, when the weather becomes warmer, we must open the furnace door, shut down the drafts and keep the fire as low as possible if we do not want to be overheated. Similarly we must cut down the fuel supply of the body with the approach of warm weather. It is foolish to keep on stoking our engines when the higher temperature about us does not require that the body work so hard to keep warm.

The only way to keep cool and thus not feel tired is by avoiding those foods which create heat or build tissue too generously. First of these are all the fats and then the starches or sweets. Let us therefore avoid the alluring doughnut, the elusive croquette, the pastry tray and the meats with rich gravies, for foods that are fat or heavy should be shunned in the changing season, when the body most particularly cries out for foods that are cooling, refreshing and light. Avaunt with puddings, discard the pot roast, and in their places substitute salads, fish, fruits and the uncooked cereals. Give the body a chance to work off the clinkers of winter without choking it up with new fuel. Patronise nature's medicines and you won't need the doctor's. Drink plenty of water, lemon and fruit juice. Cut down your helping by a third and see if you don't feel as sprightly as a robin instead of logy and weak. Your spring tonic is on the vegetable stand, and your spring prescription is to eat less and drink more.

The group of foods called proteins, of which meat is most important, are those which, science tells us, build up body tissues. Now, the spring is not the season to build up tissue unless we have been overworked during winter; also the protein of meat is particularly likely to leave a residue of uric acid in the body. But our aim now is to house clean the system, and we want to avoid complicating the housecleaning by eating foods which will leave still more refuse. Elimination of meat almost entirely is one of the wisest plans for summer health. Cheese also is not an advisable diet for most.

The Vogue of Wicker.

Many of the wicker materials—reed, rattan, cane and bamboo—are of Asiatic origin, Singapore being the world market for them. Reeds are used both whole and split.

Bamboo, while not strictly wicker, is often used with rattan or with grass matting. Its chief merit is its cheapness.

Grass, too, is hardly wicker, but is used as an outer textual covering rather than as a material for construction, the base being some light wood like willow.

Lace Embellishes This Fetching Blouse.

A pretty fashion in blouses is this design in satin crepe trimmed with filet lace. A cape of chiffon or filet may be added, if desired.

Particularly modish are the separate blouses trimmed with lace. If satin crepe is used for the development of the waist, as shown here, the most modish lace to select is filet, 1¼ yards 5 inch wide being required for the waist section and ⅛ yard allover insertion 18 inches wide for the collar. Two yards 36-inch crepe will make the waist, if plain satin be used for the vest and deep cuffs.

If desired, a cape of lace or chiffon may be added, as many of the smartest separate waists feature this trimming. It is necessary to study the guide carefully before attempting to cut the waist. Note that the front and sleeve are laid on an open width of material, while the waistband is placed along the edge.

If a cape is added, ¼ yard extra of material will be required and to avoid seams the capes must be laid on a lengthwise fold of material, as shown in sections "F" and "E" on the guide. The back is placed in the same way, leaving the shoulder piece and the cuff to be laid on a lengthiwse thread of material.

There are many ways of finishing the neck and this season, all of them attractive. The percentage of high necked arrangements is small. Women do not sacrifice comfort to fashion as lavishly as they once did and high necked waists are an abomination in hot weather. The cape and the standing turn-down collar seem to be the most popular compromises between high and low effects.

HE'S THE WHOLE TEAM.

Mills Will Play Baseball Alone Every Afternoon.

When the Newark Federal league baseball team went out of existence recently Patrick T. Powers, one of the owners, got rid of all of the players except Rupert Mills, a high school graduate, who was under contract to play first base for two years at $3,000 a year.

A few days ago the youth sought out Powers and asked as to his future.

"I have no place to put you," replied the former magnate. "I hadn't heard from you and supposed you'd engaged yourself somewhere."

"Well, I haven't," Mills said. "There's a year left of my contract, and I'll hold you to it. I'm ready to play, so you get ready to pay."

"Do you want to play alone?" queried Powers, getting an inspiration.

"I don't care if I do."

"All right then," exclaimed Powers. "Report for practice from 9 to 12 o'clock every morning on the grounds at Harrison and return every afternoon at 2 o'clock and play the game alone until 6."

Mills appeared and carried out his instructions. When asked how he would enjoy playing baseball alone for an entire season he simply said:

"I hope it rains every day."

Limbs.

Limbs come on trees and people. They are seen on trees, in courtrooms, on the stage and at the seashore. They may be covered with bark, plasters or silk, as the case may be.

Limbs are useful in many ways. Pelicans, who are very economical and therefore never get into deep water, use only one at a time. Soldiers use them for various purposes, sometimes standing upon them and sometimes running away.

Limbs are made of cork, wood or bone. Cork limbs are useful as life preservers. Wooden limbs can be taken off and used for purposes of defense. Bone limbs often enable one to get on one's feet.—Life.

Barnacles and Birds.

As a rule, the Scottish fishermen believe that the common ship's barnacle develops into a bird. How has this metamorphosis been so long held to be a fact, with no experience in its favor and all experience against it? It is so held not only in Scotland, but, for instance, in Jersey. It is not long since a Jersey parlor maid ran to her employer, in much excitement with a barnacle in her hand. "Look, ma'am," she said; "it's off a ship, and it will soon change to a goose!"—London Mail.

LET THE CHILDREN DIG.

Nothing Pleases Small Ones Better Than a Garden Patch.

If you live out of town or spend your summers there, let your children study nature first hand in their own gardens. Nothing will teach them more quickly of trees, flowers, birds and vegetables than the planning and developing of a small garden.

Of course each child can personally manage only a very small garden. This can be in the form of a bed or in the form of certain possessions at various places in the big family garden. For instance, you might give into one child's keeping a climbing rose over a summer house, a dwarf evergreen in the far corner of the shrubbery border, a row of beans (a short one) in the vegetable garden and a little patch of flowers in the flower border. In this way the child has a chance unconsciously to study trees, flowers and vegetables.

If possible, make the child interested in all the details of garden growth. If the child can sketch let him sketch leaves and flowers and roots, seeds and seed pods and all the other parts of the plants he works with. Let him keep a little notebook for his sketches. Without doubt they will prove so interesting as he collects them that they will form the nucleus of an interesting lot of sketches, which he will refer to even when winter has made gardening impossible.

Buy a bird house or two for the child's garden. By watching the chance inhabitants who occupy it from year to year he will become familiar with birds, for his interest in one pair will lead to an interest in all birds.

Perhaps an interesting book or two will stimulate the child's desire to garden. There are children's bird books and gardening books and simple guides of all sorts. Then there are botany books, fascinating when mastered in the open, but rather dry work to most children indoors.

Let the child have possession of the fruits of his garden—vegetables, flowers or fruits, whatever they are. It is a mistake to give a child anything, even a raspberry bush, unless the gift is free and complete.

Collars Make Blouses.

Do you know how to "trim up" the plain blouse and make it become your individual style? Get a collar in white chiffon or sheerest organdie which in turning back covers the nape and the sides of the neck, runs flatly across the shoulders and straight down over the bust, forming a slender "V" opening below the throat. This collar is bordered with pin tucked self material, straight on its outer edge and widely scalloped along the line, embroidery outlined inner edge. Another blouse dominating collar has a tapering, narrow turnover coming high against all save the front of the neck and widened by an extremely broad frilling of the plaited material a-jour hemmed. In crepe de chine this second collar is extremely practical as well as dainty.

Toddler's Apron.

A charming little work or play apron is made of soft pink linen with a yoke, sleeve bands and hem of white. The little apron buttons at the back of the yoke and is cut with flaring lines, so that it spreads wide at the hem. There is a cross stitched design of Little Bo-peep and a couple of her wee lambs. The same apron could be made in blue and white, with any other Mother Goose character or animal or flower in the cross stitch.

WARSHIPS TO BE WORLD'S BIGGEST

General Board Plans For 36,000 Tons Displacement.

WILL CARRY 16-INCH GUNS.

Tentative Plans Have Been Drawn and Must Be Approved by Congress. Navy Department to Insist That New Battle Cruisers Make Speed of at Least Thirty-five Knots.

If the plans of the general board are followed out the new battleships to be authorized at this session of congress will be the largest and most powerful afloat and will be equipped with the biggest caliber armament. Tentative plans drawn for their construction by the naval authorities put their displacement at 36,000 tons and their armament ten sixteen-inch guns.

The recommendation for ten sixteen-inch rifles comes direct from the general board and has the indorsement of many ordnance officers, although there is a difference of opinion in naval circles as to whether sixteen inch or fourteen inch guns should prevail. The same arguments caused a division of opinion among naval authorities when it was proposed to use fourteen inch instead of twelve inch guns.

The tentative plans for battleships, battle cruisers, destroyers, submarines, gunboats, a hospital ship and a fuel ship have been drawn in anticipation of the authorization of these various types of vessels.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels said that the most interest was centered in the battleships and battle cruisers, with expert opinion about equally divided as to which of these types would be of the greatest value for the efficiency of the fleet.

Cruisers' Plans Delayed.

Detailed plans for the battle cruisers have not yet been completed at the navy department, it was explained, as the design for these ships is entirely new in the United States navy. It is already calculated, however, that the speed of these vessels must not be under thirty-five knots.

It is believed at the navy department that congress will be disposed toward the smaller type of coastal submarine in preference to the fleet type. The theory followed by the supporters of this view is that it is better to await the results of the trial of the Schley and the two sister ships before authorizing any more fleet submarines of the largest displacement.

The characteristics of the new destroyers included in the 1917 program probably will be about the same in appearance as the destroyers designed last year, with some minor improvements and a slight increase in speed.

The designs for the gunboats contemplate a vessel of the improved Sacramento type, which has given much satisfaction and which seems in its 1,425 tons displacement to well serve the purposes of the navy for this type of craft. The fuel ship will probably be a duplicate of the Kanawha. The hospital ship will be designed after recommendations submitted by the bureau of medicine and surgery and will have the most advanced facilities for caring for the sick and wounded.

part of his repulsed army of 200,000 Turks against the center of Grand Duke Nicholas's army. The Russian line runs from Trebizond on the Black Sea to Bitlis, 180 miles south. The center has advanced about sixty miles from Erzerum, captured February 15, with Erzingan as its objective.

It is here that the Turks are making their great fight.

The Turks have been massed on the Kope Mountains, northwest of Erzerum, and on the 11th drove the Russians from their positions on the eastern slopes of this range. A series of attempts of the Russians to regain these positions has been repulsed, according to the Turkish reports, with heavy losses to the Grand Duke.

HIGH WON GAME IN EASY MANNER

The Fulton High school baseball team won its second game of the season Saturday afternoon at the Fair grounds, by defeating the Mexico High school team in easy fashion, 10-6. Rowlee, pitching his initial game for the Fulton school boys, was touched for nine safeties by the visitors, but managed to keep the hits fairly well scattered. Several of the Mexico tallies were directly due to loose playing in the Fulton infield, Dingle alone making three misplays, two of which gave the Mexico lads an opportunity to score.

Jones, who worked on the slab for Mexico, was no puzzle to the locals, who found him for eleven safe hits, five of which came in the sixth inning. He was accorded better support, however, than Rowlee received. Jones had the number of several of the Fulton lads and was credited with twelve strikeouts. O'Brien fanned five times, and Krauss and Green had difficulty in touching the Mexican.

Bray scored for Fulton in the first inning, and Reynolds counted in the second. Bray, Lewis and Green tallied in the third.

A batting rally in the sixth netted five runs for the locals, and Jones was obliged to retire the side by strikeouts.

The Mexicans scored in the first and second innings, and in the third four hits off Rowlee brought in four more tallies. For the last five frames Rowlee let the visitors down with four hits, no two of which came in one inning.

A game for Wednesday with the Union school of Minetto is pending, and on Friday the Fulton team will meet Oswego. Saturday the boys will go to Baldwinsville to meet the high school team of that place.

TIN CANS BREEDING PLACES FOR MOSQUITOES AND FLIES

So much progress has been made in modern sanitation during the past ten years that no well regulated community now will permit existence of scum-covered swamps in its immediate vicinity. The danger that mosquitoes will carry malaria has come to be quite generally recognized. Yet the fact that every city continues to tolerate a thing as bad as swamps must be recognized from a late warning against tin cans issued by the United States Public Health Service. We are told that tin cans, accumulated by the thousands in the city and outskirts, afford the finest kind of breeding places for mosquitoes and flies.

One need only take a stroll through the outskirts in any direction to find cans lying in great heaps. Casual inspection reveals that many of them are half filled with colored water, precipitated by the winter rains. The coloring emanates from decayed food left in the cans and provides mosquitoes with an excellent base of supplies. In fact, not even the ordinary swamp offers them such fine inducements for propagation and for disseminating germ-bearing particles among their sworn human enemies in the city. The malaria bearing mosquito from the blackest swamp is held no more dangerous than the insect from the polluted tin can habitat in the back yard or on the edge of town.—Portland Oregonian.

Ancient Egyptians.

The race or breed of the men who built the pyramids is and will probably remain an ethnological mystery. They were not white nor black, nor has it been possible clearly to identify them with the Turanian or Arab race. We simply do not know the kind of people they were. They were probably a mixture of many breeds.

PRODIGAL SON SERMON THEME

Zachariah saw in a vision, the high priest standing at the heavenly tribunal clad in filthy garments. A voice said, Take away the filthy garments from him. Behold I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee with a change of raiment. You all know about the parable of the man without a wedding garment. He was cast out because he had not on a wedding garment. Paul quite frequently spoke about, putting off the old man, putting on the new. John, on the island of Patmos saw the armies in Heaven that followed the victorious commander, clothed in fine linen, pure and white, which is the righteousness of the saints. This reveals to us, that when God forgives sin, men and women clothed with a character which fits them, to sit down at their Father's table. Sometimes people get the idea that forgiveness is impossible, because things done must have their consequences, and that character is the slow formation of actions precipitated, as it were, from our deeds. This is true enough. But it does not conflict with this other truth, that there may be and does come into men's hearts, when they set their faith on Jesus Christ, a new power which transforms the nature, and causes old things to pass away. Gods' forgiveness revolutionizes a life. It changes the one forgiven in every way. It makes him a new creature. We have all sinned against God; we all have turned our backs upon our Father; we have all wanted to be independent; we have all preferred the far-off land, and yet in spite of all these things, if we go to God, He will smile away our sins, and His forgiving love will melt the stains and the evil as the morning sun drinks up the dew and mist of the night, and they who come knowing themselves to be foul and needing forgiveness will surely receive from Him, the fine linen, white and pure, the righteousness of saints. The father did not only command the servants to bring forth the best robe and put it on him, but he said put a ring on his finger. The prodigal wanted to be placed in the position of a slave, but the father would not hear his request. He said: put a ring on his finger. The ring is an emblem of wealth, position, honor, that is one significant of this gift to the penitent. It was also an ornament. It is a signet of delegated authority and of representative character.

When Joseph was exalted to be the second man in Egypt, Pharoah's signet ring was placed upon his finger. This ring on the finger of the prodigal signified that he had been restored to his proper placein the old home and had been given a dignified position.

Have you ever noticed that by the mercy of miraculous loving kindness and quickening power of God, it is possible to raise the lowest man to the highest position. It seems to me that God quite frequently takes men out of the deepest sin, and out of the walks in life, and raises them up to the highest positions, it is possible for man to occupy in the service of God in this world. Now I would not advise men and women to plunge into sin, because of this. Sin always leaves a scar, and the memory of sin is anything but pleasant, and it is much better to be innocent than to be cleansed. Yet we have many examples of those who have been raised from the lowest depths to the highest position. Thes best of us have sins enough, to get all the benefits out of repentance. Sometimes men think they are so low they can never master their sins. I have stained myself so foully that I cannot hope to have the black marks erased. Let me say to such persons: Remember that the man who ended with a ring on his finger, honored and dignified, was the man who had herded with pigs and was guilty of almost every crime.

God has the power to heal men of their diseases and to cleanse them from all sin and raise them to the dignity of a man, if they will only come back and ask for mercy. And God can make such a change in men, as to give them the power to be His witnesses in this world, and to do His work. When God gives pardon, He gives beauty to character. Then the father commanded the servants to put shoes on the feet of the prodigal. No doubt this young man had come back home bare-footed and bleeding. He needed shoes for his feet. God not only forgives a man for his past sins, but gives him patience to run the race that is set before him, having his feet shod with the gospel of peace. This life is a rought road for all of us. There are places where rocks jut out for us to stumble over. There are all the trials and sorrows that necessarily attend upon our daily lives, and which sometimes make us feel as if our path were across heated plow-shares, and ever ystep was a separate agony. God will give us, if we go to Him for pardon, that which will defend us against the pains and sorrows of life.

CONVICTS FED TOO WELL.

Chemists Say Inmates of State Institution Get Too Much Food.

Topeka, Kan.—The men confined in the Kansas penitentiary are fed better than is necessary for the work that is required of them, according to a report on the food served the prisoners by Professor E. H. S. Bailey of the chemical laboratories of the University of Kansas. The report has been filed with the civil service commission. The test was made of the foods served to the prisoners in December and January.

The chemists collected samples of the twenty-four different articles of food furnished the prisoners, and only three were found to be below standard, and the quantity furnished each prisoner was more than sufficient for his needs. The cheese was of poor quality, and the pepper contained too many pepper shells. The bread, while nutritious, was not first class, due to a poor bakery at the prison.

"Some of the inmates of the penitentiary are performing hard, muscular work," said the report, "but a large number are doing only moderate work, so that the average would not be much above moderate muscular work, which chemists have found can be done efficiently on food containing 3,400 calories or heat units daily. In no case was the food served at the prison below 4,000 calories a day, and in many instances the food was above 5,000 calories a day."

YOU CAN'T BEAT IT

One of the easiest things these swift moving days is to become a back number. A lawyer may school himself thoroughly in the knowledge of his profession but if he is to win, he must continue his study; this in substance is what a local attorney has to say. Continuing the same man says there is always something for the lawyer to learn every day, and then he will wish for longer days in which to learn more.

Naturally lawyers are no exception in this respect. It is the same with everybody, and it is the same with towns and cities—and, for that matter, with the people in the rural districts. That is why it is so easy to become a back number. We have to keep abreast of the knowledge peculiar to the times as well as to municipal advancement. It is hard work and constant work but the reward is abundant for the man who exerts himself for the sake of his business, profession, municipality or community.

What is true of the profession of law of the occupation of farming, of merchandising, may be applied to a membership in the community surrounding Fulton. Anyone can avoid becoming a back number by reading The Fulton Times which supplies the information to enable him to keep abreast of the local happenings of the day—while the news is fresh. This newspaper is a home instituion and is giving your city the right kind of support. You can't beat that.

FALSIFYING NEWS IS SILLY BUSINESS

Saturday's cable dispatches reveal the fact that even General Joffre's popularity and great service have been so far forgotten that a formidable movement to deprive him of command is under way in France.

The reason for popular dissatisfaction is the steady progress of the German attacks at Verdun.

This news must be an astonishing surprise to Americans who read and believe the newspapers which have continually asserted the German attacks at Verdun to be failures. And here we have a curious example of unreasonableness in war times.

Thousands of people complain that newspapers lie to them, and the same people bitterly denounce as pro-this or pro-that the few newspapers which will not lie to them.

We have never been able to account for this silliness among grown men, though it certainly exists on all hands. We should think that every man would want to know facts, no matter how unpalatable they might be.

Take the war situation to-day, for example. The facts are that the German assaults upon Verdun have proceeded with clock-like regularity; that they have been carried on by methodical artillery pulverization of one point after another with a minimum of infantry assaults, and, of course, comparatively small losses of men; and that this slow, careful, engineering process has moved steadily forward until the vital railway lines behind Verdun, which are the real objective, are almost in the German grasp.

These are plain facts, stated without the slightest bias, as a newspaper should state them, and yet we do not doubt that, insead of being thanked for telling facts instead of lies, many persons, who ought to be ashamed of such childish behavior, will angrily denounce us as pro-German—probably as un-American.

As we say, it is hard to explain such silliness in grown men. Yet we know that thousands of grown men are thus afflicted.

For example, there are doubtless some thousands of grown men who find intense mental enjoyment in the overwhelming, irreparable, complete and finally crushing defeats which the New York Times editorially inflicts upon the Crown Prince's armies at Verdun every other day, at least.

Seriously, don't you think we Americans ought to be big enough and sensible enough to want our newspapers to tell facts and not childish falsehoods which are only told one day to be exposed perforce on the next day?—N. Y. American.

A FISH ELEVATOR

In order to restore the normal habits of fish that have suffered through the building of dams which cut off their spawning ground, the Canadian government has installed fish elevators to enable fish to ascend rivers that otherwise would be closed to them. The device as described in Popular Mechanics, works automatically at intervals, which can be regulated according to the number of fish. A sluiceway is built to a point near the foot of the falls or dam, and an elevator tower erected from the sluiceway in such a manner that the fish cage can be dumped at a point convenient to the upper level. The counterbalance to the elevator proper is a reservoir somewhat lighter than the fish cage. When the cage is at the bottom, a door is left open to admit such fish as may wander into the cage. The counterpoise reservoir meantime is being filled from a hydraulic ram, and when enough water has been received the counterpoise starts down and the fish elevator starts up. The elevator door is opened automatically and the fish find themselves floundering down a short incline which spills them into the river above the dam. The reservoir is then emptied and, being lighter than the elevator proper ascends as the elevator descends. In this way the action is practically continuous and inexpensive requiring only the attendance of a laborer to keep the parts oiled and adjust the frequency of the lifts to the demands of the season.—Indianapolis News.

ENGLAND REAPS THE WHIRLWIND.

England is already beginning to reap the whirlwind of her folly in Ireland. The reaction has set in among the Irish people. They are resentful of the attitude of the British executing those implicated in the recent uprising, when 350,000 Irishmen were fighting for king and country in France and Belgium. The resentment is showing itself not alone in Ireland, but wherever there are Irish. Canada is being touched with it and it is evident there in the withdrawal of Irish who contemplated enlistment; it is observable on every hand among the Irish in the United States, who feel that their people have been ostracized as factors contributing to the success of British arms on the continent.

John Dillon, Nationalist leader, expressed the feeling in the statement of an incident in the commons yesterday:

"Yesterday my son, 17 and 1-2 years old, applied for a military pass to Kensingtown. He was asked his name and college, and was grossly insulted by a British officer, who refused the pass. This son had asked permission on his 17th birthday to join the army. I gave him leave to enlist when he was 18. He will never join it now, and there are tens of thousands of others in similar cases. After all, it is our country, although you look upon it as a sort of back garden, which you can trample into dust without consideration."

There is no gainsaying the fact that the right exists to execute the leaders of the uprising. It is so written in the law. But it is not a matter of justice and fairness to weigh the acts of these few against the acts of the great multitude of the Irish, who are serving the country in its hour of trouble. Especially is the weighing unfair when one considers the treatment Ireland has received for a hundred years at the hands of the royalty her sons are now fighting for.

Asquith has gone to Ireland, and it is well. There still remains opportunity to end some of the trouble by stopping the executions. But of all of England's many blunders since the war began the folly of the Irish executions seems consummate.—Watertown Times.

"THERE'S MONEY IN IT."

"The proper study of mankind is man," said Pope.

It is interesting indeed to analyze the thoughts and actions of our fellows; and to record those deeds, to report the spoken word of men, is one of the functions of a newspaper.

Two items that have been made public during the past few days, by reason of the very oppositeness of sentiment they express, deserve recognition and notice.

Pugilist Frank Moran has announced that he means to become an evangelist when he is through with the fighting game. Moran is evidently a great admirer of Billy Sunday and has followed his methods closely.

Now that is all right and no one objects to Moran challenging the devil with K. O. intent. But Moran adds a sentence to his declaration that jars the senses. He says: "There's a lot of money in that Billy Sunday game, too."

CRUSHED BY JUNK IRON.

Victim in a Car Released When Cries Attracted Train Crew.

Lafayette, Ind.—When a westbound Wabash freight train was passing through Lafayette recently the shrieks of a man in distress were heard, and the train was brought to a standstill.

When the train crew investigated it was found that James Fisk of Springfield, Mass., aged twenty-four, had become imprisoned in a car of loose junk iron.

Fisk had been "beating" his way on the train, and a short time before the cries were heard the train had broken in two. When the cars came together with a crash a mass of junk iron slid over on top of Fisk's legs. At the time he was sleeping in the end of a gondola car, and it was impossible for him to free himself. He could not be rescued until the car had been bumped several times to jar the mass of iron away from his legs. He was taken to the hospital in a terribly crushed condition. His cries aroused hundreds of people from their sleep. It is probable he will recover.

CHILDREN EXEMPT HIM.

Father Receives a Canceled Tax Receipt When Sheriff Sees Seven Sons.

Wichita, Kan.—James Gourley, an expressman, appeared at the Sedgwick county courthouse recently to pay his personal taxes, which amounted to $4.70. He did not have the money, but he took along with him his seven children, all boys under thirteen years old.

"It'll work a hardship on me to pay this money," Gourley told Sheriff Frank Sarver, "as I've got my hands full feeding and clothing and keeping these children in school." County officials gathered around the sheriff's office and observed the family, all healthy, clean and happy.

When Gourley left with his seven boys trailing behind him his personal tax receipt was marked paid and each of the children carried a quarter.

GIRL WITH "MOVIEITIS" IS SENT TO A HOME FOR CURE

She Cut Off Hair as Cowgirls Do and Wrecked Rooms a la Film Comedy.

Paterson, N. J.—Rose Rossini, fifteen, of this city, was arraigned before Judge Klenert in the juvenile court, charged with incorrigibility. She had cut off her long brown tresses, and she explained that cowgirls in the movies did it, and she wanted to be a cowgirl.

"I guess you've got a plain case of 'movieitis,'" said the court, "so I am going to send you to the Florence Crittention home until your hair grows again. Perhaps a stay in the home will cure you."

"Why, it'll take a year for my hair to grow back again," cried Rose. "I can't stay there all that time!"

"It will all depend on your behavior," said the court.

Detectives testified that Rose had wrecked rooms in homes where she had been employed because she had seen it done in the movies.

SPEECHLESS A YEAR, SHE SUDDENLY TALKS

Family of Woman Is Astonished When She Says, "I Feel Better Now."

New York.—Suddenly regaining the power of speech she lost through a stroke of paralysis a year ago, Mrs. William Cuppinger, thirty years old, of College Point, N. Y., startled her family by remarking, "I feel better now."

Her long period of silence had been broken while she suffered from what was believed to be grip. She said she first felt a violent snap in her head. This was followed by a buzzing sensation which passed away and left her feeling much better. Finally her speech came in whispers and then was loud enough for those at the bedside to hear.

Dr. [illegible], her physician, was greatly astonished at the outcome of the case, for he never expected that Mrs. Cuppinger would ever talk again. He said he thought the loss of her speech was due to the rupture of a blood vessel. A blood clot formed, and the physician used treatment to dissolve it.

Portrayal of President Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," Quirk Theatre, May 19 and 20.

Joseph Henabery, the actor, who portrays President Lincoln in D. W. Griffith's historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was selected from twenty players who were coached and prepared for the part before the choice was made. Mr. Lincoln's appearance and mannerisms were carefully counterfeited, even to the small, but interesting, detail of the President reaching back for his shawl just a few minutes before Wilkes Booth attacked him. It was a Spring day in Washington, April 14, 1865—but a late frost had set in that night and it was raw and cold. Mr. Lincoln felt the chill and drew the shawl around him.

The first scene in "The Birth of a Nation" showing the War President is of Lincoln's signing the call for 75,000 volunteers. Around him are his Cabinet heads and private secretaries. Lincoln fully realized the momentous character of the act that summoned Federal troops to subdue the individual sovereignty of rebellious States. After the deed was done and the attending company departed, he slowly buried his face in his hands as if in prayer.

Another view of Lincoln's character is exhibited in his granting of a pardon. As this scene opens, the gorgeously uniformed diplomatic representatives are being received by the President. They then depart and he turns to a plain middle-aged woman dressed in sombre black who had been awaiting a hearing. She tries to kneel to him, but he gently raises her up and talks to her, reads her petition and signs the paper granting to her the life of her son.

After the Appomattox surrender the Leader of Congress calls with a proposal to deal harshly with the South for its rebellion. "I shall treat them as if they had never been away!" is Lincoln's gentle answer. Then, two or three days later, comes the awful tragedy in Ford's Theatre, Washington, when Southern hopes of clemency are blasted by the assassin Booth's maniac act. That great and terrible scene is reproduced in the play to the minutest historical detail. Mr. Henabery, the portrayer of the great President, has been widely commended for the sincerity, dignity and pathos of his characterization.

UNITED STATES POSITION ON ARMED MERCHANTMEN.

A memorandum by the state department on the attitude of the United States toward armed merchantmen has become known in Berlin.

The memorandum was interpreted by close observers as bearing directly on the crisis with Germany.

The position of the United States now is that an armed belligerent merchantman under instructions to attack in all circumstances enemy naval vessels, or influenced to do so by offers of prize money or penalties, loses its status as a peaceable merchant ship.

It is stated further:

"It should, therefore, be considered as an armed public vessel and receive the treatment of a warship by an enemy and by neutrals.

"Any person taking passage on such a vessel cannot expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship."

IN THE FULLNESS OF AGE IS WEALTH

Evangelist Peacock Tells Borrowed Timers Their Judgment Outweighs That of Youth---A Lecture-Sermon

Luther Knox Peacock was the guest of honor, and incidentally the speaker of the afternoon at the regular semi-monthly meeting of the Borrowed Time Club yesterday afternoon at the First Presbyterian Church. Members of the club and their friends to the number of forty attended the meeting, and listened with undisguised interest and approval to the remarks of the man who is working to better Fulton.

Probably thirty of those present had passed the mark of three score and ten, and Mr. Peocock's address was especially applicable to men advanced in years. Although his talk was in the nature of a friendly discourse and he gave it no title, it might be entitled "The Opportunities of Age," as that was the subject he dwelt on for the most part. The speaker's discourse took on the aspect of a sermon as he progressed, and Mr. Peacock said at one time, "I didn't come here to preach to you, but I can't talk to you without doing it,—it's born in me."

"Age has its opportunities, richer and better than those of youth in some cases," said the evangelist. "I firmly believe that God has a work for a man to do as long as he permits him to remain upon the earth. Some of you men may think that your day of usefulness is past, and that you are now nothing but a burden, something to be overlooked in the rush of events, and that it is your place now to retire into the background of things and let others have their sway. Don't accept that conclusion, don't think of yourselves in that way. Your day of usefulness is not past as long as you are allowed to remain upon this earth.

"My mother lived until she was past sixty, and my father lived until he was eighty-six years of age. I tell you men, my father was dearer to me in his old age than ever before, and the last thirty years of his life was a benediction to me. I made it a point to stay with him at home at least one month out of every year, and during that month I sought his companionship constantly, and talked to him and listened to his conversation at every opportunity. I realized that he had been a part of life which I could never know, that he had had experiences which I could never have. I always found his advice reliable, and trusted to his decision in many things. I remember that my brothers, some of them over fifty years old, would make long trips from their business to consult my father on various subjects, and to obtain his judgment on business matters. And I tell you that it was proven time and time again that by following his advice and listening to his counsel, they were successful in their business projects.

The Richness of Age.

"You men have not lost your usefulness to the world. Some people say, "Well, when a man's fifty, he begins to go down hill." Others, chiefly scientists, say that a man loses his usefulness to the world at a certain age and after he passes that mark he should be taken out and chloroformed. The man that says that is a fool, no matter how great a scientist he may be.

"Look for proof among the generals of this war of wars which is now being waged across the waters. Who are the men who are directing this war, who are handling these vast armies, and occupy positions where good judgment, strategy and keen foresight are indispensable?. They are all men of sixty years or over. And thus far, statistics will prove, the older generals have the greatest successes to their credit.

"No, you men have not lost your usefulness to the world, and to your city and neighbors. Your advice, your influence is respected and should be respected. Any sane man will pay more attention to the advice and counsel of an old man than to the words of a two by four snip who smokes cigarettes and parts his hair in the middle.

"Old men have done many great things for God. When Finney, the evangelist, was first going to preach in Auburn, because of a false rumor that preceded him, some of the ministers and business men in the town got up a petition to prevent him from making his speech. Finney was told that they were hostile to him and was advised to forego speaking. He took counsel with God, however, and decided that it was his duty to preach.

"Some years later, when broken in health, Finney was passing through Auburn to his home for a long rest, a committee of business men of the city entered the train with a petition asking Finney to get off the rain and speak to them again. Finney finally discovered the reason for this change of heart among the people. An old man had worked unceasingly to tell the people of Finney and his work and had at last succeeded in convincing them that Finney was doing the work of God.

Live to Influence.

"And along this line I ask you men, are you doing the work of God? Are you using your influence for good in this community. Now is the time to show your colors, if there ever was a time in Fulton when men should declare themselves for God or the devil. You are living now, waiting for your appointed time to come, living on what you call borrowed time, and are you living so that your influence will continue for good after you are gone from the earth?"

Rev. Charles Olmstead, in response to a request from Chairman Whitaker of the club, addressed the members in a short speech, in which he spoke of his envy for the old men, because of their experiences, and of the instructions he received at his ordination from an old clergyman, who said, "Be a good pastor to the old people." Mr. Olmstead quoted Phillips Brooks, who said that temptation besets those of all ages, and expressed a belief that the men of the club would overcome their temptations and make their lives good examples for their younger fellow men.

At the conclusion of the meeting the club tendered a rising vote to Mr. Peacock, and an informal chat followed.

A photograph of the club and Mr. Peacock was taken on the steps of the church by Frank Wooster, after the meeting.

MASS MEETING HUGE SUCCESS

Prof. Cox and Dr. Sears Gave Inspiring Talks to Local People Last Night.

The good people of Fulton, who availed themselves of the privilege of attending the mass meeting felt amply repaid. Secretary Hallinga, of the Chamber of Commerce acted as chairman, introducing as the speakers of the evening, Dr. F. W. Sears and Prof. Laurie D. Cox.

Dr. Sears, as Sanitary officer of Onondaga county took as his topic Sanitation. By the aid of moving pictures, which told in story form, the importance of cleanliness was depicted. The first reel showed how a farmer's pretty daughter was a near victim of typhoid because the father would not adopt modern methods of cleanliness about his premises. The second reel showed in story form, The Work of the Red Cross Society, and a third reel showed the marvelous methods of cleanliness exercised by the Borden Milk Company in the handling of its product. The course was traced in a highly interesting way from the pasture to the home.

Prof. Cox, of the College of Forestry of Syracuse University, brought to Fulton such an inspiring message of a City Beautiful that it is to be deplored that every man, woman and child in the city was not present.

In beginning his talk Prof. Laurie stated he would not be able to give any definite rule as to how this city might become a City Beautiful, as there is no such rule. "There are so few really beautiful towns in the country," said the speaker, "but when one is beautiful we may be sure its people are really wide-awake progressive people." He stated ugliness, or lack of beauty, is an unnatural condition, for we are all lovers of the beautiful. The things that are beautiful are orderly, and nature, the handiwork of God, is always orderly and beautiful, was pointed out. The old addage "God made the country and man made the town," was used to explain why towns in the midst of a beautiful country may be ugly. Man is not always orderly, hence his handiwork the opposite of beauty.

In the building of our towns all styles of architecture are used, and the color of the buildings as varied as fancy pleases, Prof Cox said, and as a result there is nothing, from a standpoint of beauty, to hold the town together. Paint your building white, he urged. Even if white becomes dingy it is far better as a whole than a hetrogenous mixture of greens, grays, browns, reds, etc. By the aid of a wonderful collection of colored lantern slides he illustrated the point. Beautiful groupings of trees masses of shrubbery, vines, and flowers were accentuated by their proximity to white buildings.

Other slides showed the wonderful results from beautifying river banks, parks, gardens, etc. If anyone present failed to stretch the imagination as far as the banks of our own river there must have been a mistake.

Prof. Laurie when showing the slides of the beautified country roads leading into the city said, "With such an invitation to enter your city most people would ge glad to come."

As a whole the evening's program was one of the most pleasing and instructive that intelligent desire could command.

In bringing the meeting to a close Secretary Hallinga expressed his pleasure at the loyal co-operation of the followers of the civic flag of Fulton, and anticipates a greater day when the true nature of mutual helpfulness will dawn upon Fultonians as a unit.

THE MISSION IS TO SET MEN RIGHT

This Was Explained to Church Crowded With Men---Why Catholics Bless by Prayer.

A decided increase in the attendance was noticeable at the mission services for men last night at the Church of the Immaculate Conception, under the direction of Father Stephen and Austin, O. M. C. The service began with a congregational recitation of the Rosary, and before the sermon, Father Stephen addressed a few remarks to the congregation.

"This mission has a two-fold purpose," said the missionary. "Primarily, it is intended to help the men of this parish to set themselves right with their Creator, to restore them to His friendship, if they have become his enemies by sin. Secondly it is to supply you with necessary and useful articles of devotion.

"There are several articles of devotion necessary in every Catholic home which the Church blesses. Among them are palms amulets, Holy Water, oil' and other articles which may be used to advantage by Catholics.

Needs of the Home.

"Among the various articles which the Church blesses with special prayer, are several which should be in every Catholic home. The first of these is the crucifix. Every Catholic home should have a crucifix, and if possible there should be one in every room. The crucifix will remind you of the greatest of all sacrifices, of the price that God paid for your redemption. Every Catholic home should have holy pictures, statutes and images of the saints. Not to be adored, as oftentimes those ignorant of the Church falsely state. No they are not for adoration. The Church recommends the placing of images in the home for the same reason that the State places statutes of prominent men in the parks. The State honors the memory of these men, these departed heroes or statesmen, by erecting statues of them, which remind people of the work these men did in the establishment of our country. We all honor pictures of our parents, and we place pictures of them in conspicuous places in our homes. We don't worship them or adore them, but they are there to remind us of them at all times. In many instances, if they were not there, we would soon forget them.

"So it is with the statues of our saints and of the Blessed Virgin. They are our heroes of the Church, they are our models. We can look at them and respect an honor them as those who fought the good fight and conquered. They seem to say to us, "What we have done, you also can do."

"Every Catholic home, should, if possible, possess a small altar, a replica of the altar you see in your church. Upon this altar should be the articles necessary for sick-calls, or when the priest visits the home to administer the sacraments.

"The Church also blesses several articles for individual use. The prayer-book and the Rosary are among these. Notice in church on Sunday and see how many worship with neither a prayer-book or Rosary. They are present in body, but where are their minds? When a workman goes to work, he takes his tools with him, and so it should be with you when you come to worship.

"Every man in this parish should be enrolled in the Holy Scapular, under the protection of Our Lady of Carmel. You can wear your scapular or a small medal, which shows your membership in the society, as a watch-charm, or pin it on your coat. It identifies you as a Catholic, and if you ever are seriously injured in an accident, it may be the means of securing you the administration of the sacraments. Whenever a man is injured people usually attempt to ascertain of what religion he is. If he is a Catholic, they call a priest. If you are unable to talk, or are unconscious, the possession of a crucifix, a scapular, or any other small article, may identify you as a Catholic, and perhaps secure the last rites for you.

Indifferent Churchmen.

"Catholics are sadly deficient in the study of Catholic literature, and good Catholic books. These may be obtained in the mission. The Church urges its members to study their religion and to read books on the subject, for the more you know of your religion, the more you will appreciate it."

Father Stephen requested a large attendance of the men at the masses each morning in the Church. The first mass is held at five o'clock and the second at eight o'clock. Both services last only three-quarters of an hour, and this includes a short instruction.

"They are cursed who decline from Thy Commandments," words of the 118th Psalm, comprised the text of the sermon of the evening, preached by Father Austin, O. M. C.

The missionary said in part:

"Last evening we considered the soul of man in the light of reason, without the aid of Revelation. We heard that even the pagans of old were convinced that man possessed a soul, and that the soul was immortal. God himself emphasized the value of that soul to us when he gave his only Begotten Son as a sacrifice that we might be redeemed.

"It is of mortal sin that I shall speak to you tonight. I shall try to show you the malice of sin, the consequences of sin, that you may realize what sin is, and know the reasons why God hates sin and detests sin, with an eternal hatred and an eternal detestation.

"What has God done for us? What has He given us that other things of the world have not? Consider the flowers, the birds of the air, the beasts of the forest. They enjoy the air, the sun, the comforts that come from the fruits of the earth. Consider then man. He has all these benefits, and he also has something identical with the angels,—a soul. He alone is endowed with intellect and will, he has reason. He is not governed by instinct, as are the beasts. He is not governed by the laws of nature, as are the flowers of the field. No, he has reason to guide him. And how does man use reason?

"He, alone, of all the creatures of God on earth, does not do the will of God. Man refuses to do the will of God. Man defies God, and cries, 'I will not, I will do as I please, law or no law.'

Man's Defiance.

"Reason tells you that that which you make belongs to you, to be disposed of as you will. Reason tells you that you are not the product of chance, that you are responsible to a Supreme Ruler for your being and living on the earth. Reason tells you that you are destined for a nobler purpose than the things of this earth. You must acknowledge Him who gives you life and everything that you have. And if you will but use this God-given reason, my friends, you will come back to Him.

"What does God wish of us? Here divine revelation comes to our aid. It tells us conclusively what he wishes. Still, notwithstanding the dictates of reason, and the commands of revelation, man stands boldly, defiantly before his Maker and says, 'Though all the rest obey, I will not.'

"And this is what man does every time he commits a mortal sin. The angels in Heaven bow down to God, and tremble in his presence, but man defies, scorns and mocks a Being, who could at will cast him into the depths of Hell.

"Sometimes you hear people say that priests exaggerate when they speak of mortal sin. Look back at the results of sin, at the results of the first sin in the Garden. What does it prove? God stood as judge in the case, He heard and saw all the evidence, and what was the verdict?

"Cursed is the serpent cursed is the earth cursed is everything on the earth and cursed is man's body, dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return.'

"This, my friends was the verdict, this was the punishment, and it was all due to one mortal sin.

"We are Christians, and when we look back on the life of Christ, there is one act of his enemies which we despise. When Christ was called before Pilate, and Pilate discovered that the hatred of the Jews was the only tangible reason for his arrest, he sought to give Christ justice. He washed his hands and said, 'I am innocent of the blood of this just man' and then in order to excite sympathy for Christ in the hope that the Jews would relent and release the Saviour, he gave Christ over to a brutal soldiary, who took the Saviour to their quarters and scourged him. They crowned him with thorns and put a reed in his hands, and then Pilate dressed him in the robe of a fool, and led him to a balcony before the people. Christ stood there, covered with blood, and Pilate said 'Behold the man.' But the Jews were not sympathetic, and Pilate thought of another scheme by which he hoped to free the Nazarene. It was the custom to release a prisoner on the event of the Jewish holidays, and Pilate selected Barrabas, a noted criminal and robber, and the Christ, and asked the people to choose, thinking they would order Christ released.

We Should be Charitable.

"He asked them to choose between Christ, who had never done anything that was not good, and Barrabas, who had been a notorious criminal all his life, and a murderer and robber. The Jews gave Barrabas his freedom, they shouted 'Crucify him'.

"But we should not judge the Jews too harshly. St. Paul tells us that we are crucifying Christ anew each time we commit a mortal sin. When we disregard the laws of God, we cry the cry of old, 'Crucify him.'

"You do that, you who have had the sacraments and benefits of the church for 1900 years. What an awful, rank exhibition of ingratitude!

"It is not the sin in itself so often that offends God. When God said, 'If you give a cup of water in My name' He did not mean that you might gain Heaven by the gift of the water, but by the spirit in which you gave it. So it is wiih sin. The gratification of a lustful moment, the sin of a drunken debauch, offend God, not only in themselves, but because of the eternal contempt, the eternal ingratitude with which these sins are committed.

"We sometimes hear people say, 'I haved sinned, what harm has befallen me?' Let us look back once more. What befell Adam and Eve? What befell Cain, when he slew his brother Abel, and was marked by God as an outcast on the face of the earth? Do you suppose Cain cried out in after years, 'I have sinned, and what has befallen me?' When God destroyed Sodom and Gommorah can you imagine the people asking that question? Come down to our day. Visit the slums of our cities, in all their poverty and misery. Visit our jails, our hospitals, our insane a sylums. What caused this suffering? The answer is —mortal sin.

"Go back to Calvary. Look at the Cross. What is the reason for the sacrifice of the Son of Man? Sin, and sin alone. He was the victim of sin.

"Do we need more proofs? No, these are sufficient. Mortal sin makes you an enemy of God. You and I can not afford to pass God aside. What we sow, we shall reap, and if we sow in the flesh we shall reap corruption. Those words are as true today as they were the day they were uttered.

"Let us promise ourselves henceforth to avoid each and every mortal sin. Let us resolve to shun the occasions of sin. Let us walk in ilfe as God intends to have us walk. Let us keep His Commandments."

MRS. EMILY HAWKES

Mrs. Emily Hawkes, wife of J. F. Hawkes, of Palermo was found dead in her home last night by Mrs. John Pitcher, a neighbor. Mrs. Hawkes was evidently stricken as she was about her household duties, as she was lying on the floor of the dining room when Mrs. Pitcher entered. The dead woman had been in ill health for some time, and had been under the care of Dr. Simpson, of Palermo. He was called last night, but life was extinct before he arrived. Heart trouble was the principal cause of death, in his opinion.

Mrs. Hawkes is survived by her husband, one son, five daughters, and two brothers. The funeral will be held at Lindsley's Corner Thursday afternoon. Rev. H. D. Holmes will officiate and burial will be made in Roosevelt cemetery.

Leo Sevalia, a grand-son of Mrs. Hawkes, died two weeks ago at the Hawkes home.

"AN ETHER SOUSE."

Prisoner Tells Judge Why He Stole Drug From Hospital.

Los Angeles, Cal.—How and why he invaded the county hospital, stole a can of ether, a package of iodoform and a roll of bandages, told by H. L. McCaslin in Judge White's court, was declared by the court to be the most peculiar statement ever made before him.

McCaslin described himself as "an ether souse" and pleaded guilty to the larceny charge. According to his story, his indulgence in the soporific dates back two years. He said:

"One night I started to ride to work at Bakerfield on a motorcycle and on the way was struck by a car. They took me to a hospital to operate on my leg, and for the first time in my life I smelled ether. I thought it was the finest experience I ever had. Since then I have persuaded six more doctors to operate on me. Then I found I could buy the drug.

"Lately I have been living in Pomona. On Orange day I brought some of the fruit from Pomona to the county hospital, where I met some of the boys who were there when I was a patient. I got a chance to get a big can and some things for my leg. Then I was arrested."

Judge White sentenced McCaslin to ninety days in jail.

CURB GAS TANK IS UNPOPULAR

Neighbors Fear Higher Insurance Rates and Board Defers Action; Mayor Wants New System of Buying.

Because of objections advanced to some of the members, the Board of Public Works in regular weekly session last night, deferred action in granting a permit to Edward Van Amburgh, of West First street, who wishes to install a curb gasoline tank in front of his store on that thoroughfare. Some property owners and representatives of business interests in that district have entered objections with members of the Board, claiming that the installation of the tank will result in increased rates of insurance on their propery. Until these claims have been investigated, the Board will table the VanAmburgh application.

Councilman E. O. Baker made application to the Board for the dirt which will come from South First street, when excavation for the paving is made. Mr. Baker wishes to use the dirt in improving several streets in the Third Ward. Action on this application was also deferred.

Mayor Lewis, in the course of the meeting, recommended that the Board adopt the requisition system in vogue in several of the city departments, by which all supplies are purchased through the office of the city clerk. No action was taken by the Board on the suggestion.

Residents in the vicinity of Fifth and Academy streets complained of the bad condition of a cross-walk at that point. Complaints were also received that water lies in the alley which adjoins the Waldhorn block on South First street. This alley is not the property of Mr. Waldhorn.

Residents of West Broadway applied for a light at the end of that street. The Board took no definite action on any of the applications.

City Engineer Hill was notified that work on the Fremon street sewer should begin at once. Director of Works Frank Rumsey will have charge of the work of construction, and work on the excavation will probably begin tomorrow morning.

The Board audited and approved the pay roll of the department, and was authorized to purchase a new brush for the street roller, subject to the discretion of the Mayor.

Commissioners Wiltsie, O'Brien, and Allen, and Mayor Lewis were present at the meeting.

TEST RESULTS NINE YEARS AT COLLEGE

Striking Differences in Orchard Yields Through Fertilization Reported.

"Orchard fertilization deserves greater attention by farmers for three reasons. First, it is the orchards that have been producing well that are likely to be in need of some extra assistance if they are to maintain their pace," writes J. P. Stewart, of Pennsylvania State College, in Pennsylvania Farmer. "Second, the man who continues to have good crops to sell is in better condition than those who have not, and third, the most immediate need, after better methods of marketing are devised, is better and greater production."

Professor Stewart explains the Pennsylvania experiments which have been conducted during the past nine years and with them links the many other experiments along the same lines to show the value of attention to orchard fertility on quality and production of fruit. In one case, the unfertilized trees have averaged 78 to 85 bushels per acre annually, while the adjacent trees receiving proper fertilization have averaged 180 to 216 bushels. Moreover, these trees were relatively young. In more mature trees the net annual gains from fertilization have ranged from 150 to 325 bushels per acre on the average for a period of seven years.

"In some cases the yields are being retarded by other conditions, such as a deficient moisture supply, a frosty or otherwise improper location, poor spraying or too much pruning," continues Professor Stewart. "After these factors have received attention, it is quite likely that fertilization of the right sort is the most important need. In most cases, proper additions of nitrogen and phosphorus are all that are needed to supplement the present resources of the soil. This does not mean that potash is not required by trees, as we have one important experiment in which it is proving to be the leading element, but incidentally this happens to be a fortunate condition just at present in view of the fertilizer market."

Where the orchard interests are large, Professor Stewart points out that it is advisable to accompany the use of fertilizer in general with a local test to determine the exact needs of the orchard involved.

Putting the Back Yard to Order

Even the smallest back yard may be made to yield a supply of fresh vegetables for the family table, if two or three crops are successively grown to keep the area occupied all the time, according to the garden experts of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Half an acre properly cultivated and fertilized may easily produce $100 worth of vegetables in one year. The soil in the average back yard is not only lacking in plantfood, but also has been packed until it is hard and unyielding, say the garden experts. To loosen such soil requires that the ground be spaded, hoed and raked until a fine seedbed is produced. Manures and commercial fertilizers should be applied to supply humus and plantfood to produce the rich soil necessary for the growing of garden produce in a profitable manner.

GOOD OLD SUMMER TIME.

A yield of 49 bushels per acre was obtained from this field, on which 300 pounds per acre of high grade fertilizer was used.

Professors' Theories Practical

Two Massachusetts professors, F. A. Waugh and F. C. Sears, are succeeding in the orchard project which they started in 1908. The way they have developed their orchard of 125 acres indicates that their theories will work. They now have 18,000 trees, and have recently purchased more land until they now have 400 acres, and have improved their land by investing their profits each year and putting the surplus of their profits into the business. Commercial fertilizers, intelligently used, provided the missing plantfood in their sandy soil and their cultural methods and orchard management methods have made their project financially successful beyond their expectations.

CROPS AND SOILS SHOW THEIR NEEDS

Each Type of Crop and Soil Has Characteristics and Special Requirements.

Low and decreasing yields, spindly growth of stalk, low quality products, small, pale, insipid fruit, poorly filled kernels of wheat and large ears of unsound corn are among the crop indications of the need of fertilizers. If the tendency of the soil is to produce too much stalk growth, a fertilizer which carries a small amount of ammonia and a liberal amount of phosphoric acid and potash should be used. If stalk or straw is poor and too weak to stand storms, then a complete fertilizer high in ammonia and potash should be used. If the crops of previous seasons have not matured early enough, a fertilizer high in phosphoric acid should be chosen.

Each type of crop requires characteristic proportions of plant food for best results. A corn crop, for instance, is usually grown more for ears than for stalk. Ear corn or other grain takes up over 60 per cent. of the phosphoric acid required by the plant, hence the growing of any grain crop makes a heavy draft on this plant food which must be met by a generous supply of phosphoric acid. Hay crops are harvested for stalk, stem or leaf growth, and need much ammonia. The supply in the soil must be supplemented if the productivity is to be maintained.

Adjust Soil Conditions.

Soil conditions that are essential to the best results from fertilizers may be obtained by rotation of crops, wherein legumes are grown periodically, plowing under green manure, applying strawy barn manure and correcting the acidity of the soil by proper drainage and applications of lime when needed. Sandy soils are usually weak in nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash; clay soils are better supplied as shown by analysis, but often the elements are unavailable or slowly available, and require the assistance of available plant food if they are to produce large yields of high quality. A peaty soil is usually strong in nitrogen but exceedingly weak in phosphoric acid and potash.

The use of a fertilizer containing all of the essential constituents of plant food gives best all-round results under average conditions. Various soils differ in their plant food needs, and observation of previous crop indications combined with a knowledge of how the soil has been treated in the past should be used as a basis for determining what proportion of the plant food ingredients is best for both soil and crop.

Song of the Convert

Yields of hay were getting less—
Made me blue I must confess.
I'm no longer in distress.
Reason is—I now top-dress.

Pioneer Eastern Alfalfa Man

"Alfalfa is the greatest stuff in the world and can be grown throughout the Eastern States by every farmer who is willing to follow the proper methods," says John P. Nelson, the New Jersey pioneer alfalfa grower who has been raising alfalfa since 1895. A loam soil of reasonable fertility and good drainage is recommended by Mr. Nelson, who advises that it be plowed deep, that lime be used, that 1,000 pounds of fertilizer be applied at the time of seeding, and that the same amount be applied annually as a top dressing to give the crop a quick start and enable it to make the best yields per acre. When manure is available, he advises the use of three to five tons per acre with 600 pounds of fertilizer per acre.

Helping Corn Fight Insect Pests

Rotation of crops, keeping the land free from weeds and trash of all kinds, late fall plowing of infested lands, and properly nourishing the corn plants, are the practical preventive measures that can be applied to the insects that attack corn in different ways, according to Prof. James Troop, of the Purdue Experiment Station. Manures and fertilizers produce vigorous growth and help the plants to withstand the injury, and also have an effect as repellants against the attacks of insects.

Peach Trees Quick To Respond

Many of the old theories regarding the proper feeding of peach trees have been overthrown. The peach appears to be the most susceptible of all fruit trees to the influence of commercial fertilizers, according to the Practical Farmer. While results obtained by the various experiment stations regarding the value of fertilizers on apple trees are not complete, there appears to be a remarkable agreement in the results found in fertilizing peach trees. "Feed the crop and the crop will feed you," applies equally to orchards and to grain and other crops.

GROW 64 BUSHELS OATS PER ACRE

Chattaraugus County Agent Gives Results of Experiments With Lime and Fertilizer.

Does it pay to fertilize in growing oats? Herman K. Crofoot, manager of the Cattaraugus county farm bureau, last year conducted 15 field tests, and is planning to continue his studies through a number of years in order to determine the residual effects of the fertilizer and lime that was used.

Four hundred pounds of acid phosphate per acre was applied by the farmers taking part in the testing. The yields where this fertilizer was used in connection with lime averaged 64.3 bushels per acre, contrasted with the average yield of 42.5 bushels per acre where lime was used but no fertilizer was applied, and 39.5 bushels per acre where neither lime nor fertilizer was applied.

"In Cattaraugus county there are annually grown over 31,000 acres of oats. If 25 per cent. of the oat-growing farmers would adopt the practices of these findings, it would result in an increase in value of the oat crop of this county of over $87,265 a year," says Mr. Crofoot. "With the lime and the acid phosphate, we secured an increase of 24.8 bushels per acre of grain and .3 ton of straw per acre. At a fair valuation, this increase is worth $18 per acre, without counting the effects of the applications upon the succeeding crops. The experiments will be continued through 1916."

STRAWBERRIES FOR MARKET

YIELD, SIZE AND FLAVOR CAN BE SECURED THROUGH PROPER MANAGEMENT.

"Very often growers fail to realize the importance of fertilization in the growing of strawberries. When strawberries are grown for home and nearby markets, yield, size and flavor are the chief considerations. Good texture is another necessity when the berries are to be shipped to distant markets," says Earle W. Gage, of Chatauqua county, New York, in Green's Fruit Grower. "As a general rule, an abundance of nitrogen will produce heavy yields and large berries, but sufficient phosphoric acid and potash in available forms are needed to develop the flavor, color and firmness of the fruit. The kind and amount of fertilizer to use depends upon the nature of the soil. From 1,000 to 2,000 pounds per acre is generally applied, depending somewhat upon the locality and the natural conditions."

Prices vs Profits

Don't let the increased price of fertilizer scare you out this year. Of course it isn't pleasant to be compelled to dig down somewhat deeper into one's pocket to pay for the ton or two of plantfood needed, but remember that the same war that is making your fertilizer prices high is also boosting the price of your farm products. Corn and wheat are very materially higher than in normal times.

Let's figure for just a minute. Suppose you have been using 300 pounds per acre of 2—8—2 fertilizer on your corn. At normal prices this would figure around $3.75 per acre. It would be difficult to buy this same analysis of fertilizer today—the price has been kept down by reducing the potash content. A brand containing the former amounts of ammonia and phosphoric acid and a small percentage of potash would cost approximately $4.75 per acre when applied at the above mentioned rate. This makes an increase of only $1.00 per acre—the price of one and one-half bushels of corn.

When you consider also the better quality, the greater assurance of early maturity, and the residual effect on succeeding crops, it seems foolish to stand back because of increased fertilizer prices. Now, doesn't it?

Lime Supplements Fertilizers

"Lime is not required by all crops and when used in excess may cause loss instead of gain. This is shown by the experiments at Pennsylvania State College, in which two tons of burnt lime applied every four years in a rotation of corn, oats, wheat and clover, produced a reduction instead of an increase in yield when manure and fertilizer was not used in connection," declares Director Charles E. Thorne, of the Ohio Experiment Station. "One of the effects of lime is to cause a rapid decomposition of the organic matter in the soil by fostering bacterial action, and when the lime is not supplemented with manures and fertilizers that will favor a larger growth of crops and roots, the stock of organic matter may be so depleted as to reduce the yield of the land."

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.

What Small Folks Are Wearing Closely Resemble Their Mothers'.

Suits for little girls are after the models shown for women. The skirts have considerable fullness, and the coats are inclined to ripple below the waist line. Some very attractive suits for children are made with skirts of broken checks and coats of serge in solid color. They have suspenders attached to the skirt or are finished with a belt. The coats, as a rule, are loose and belted and of hip length. Belts which encircle the waist or belted back styles with pockets on either the skirt or coat, and buttons fastening the front of the skirt, are especially good looking.

Children's skirts are usually cut circular and have considerable flare at the foot, fitting fairly close over the hips. The coats are finished with a coat collar and lapels, and some are made in Norfolk styles.

There are many variations in trimmings. Buttons are used profusely and in novel ways. A number of suits in solid color have collar and cuffs of blue and white polka dotted silk or of green satin piped with white.

Coats of shepherd checks are sometimes trimmed with black satin in bands at the foot, and the collars and cuffs are also of satin. Little coats of light blue silk poplin are smocked on either side of the front and in the center of the back. The blue collar and cuffs are embroidered in white. Coats have girdles of ribbon tied loosely around the waist, ending in a loose knot on the side. A little coat of two toned corduroy in brown and white is made with a flared skirt, piped at the waist line and on the collar and cuffs. Black and white and blue and white corduroy coats are also seen.

The little middy dresses, the Russian blouse, the one piece dress joined with a belt, the coat and Norfolk styles and the little suspender dresses worn with guimpes, as well as the short waisted effects, are all seen in attractive assortments. Some dresses hang in loose lines from the shoulders and are trimmed with smocking.

The majority of sleeves are made in the set in effect, but there are also sleeves with a low shoulder, the bishop sleeve and also those with a flare effect.

Ginghams, percales, linens, reps and lawns are the prominent wash materials. Plain and fancy materials are frequently combined in the making. Colored dresses are often trimmed with collars and cuffs of white. Sashes and belts of leather, self material or silk are used. White dresses, with sashes of color, with the waist line low, normal or slightly raised, are in many attractive styles. The little skirts are very full.

king's blue velvet ribbon with extension bow. Around the band is a row of green leaves set primly to give a flat effect. The result is quite charming.

Don't Rush Through Life.

How many women are there who rush through their day's and their evening engagements without a moment's relaxation? A bath before dressing for the evening is substituted for the rest which the body needs. If pallor of the face offends the ever handy cosmetic is drawn upon and the "bloom of youth" applied. But no artificial coloring ever hid successfully for any length of time baggy eyes, sunken cheeks and other marks which worn out nerves register upon the face.

The surest way for a woman to maintain her attractive appearance—to be "easy to look at," as one of our famous humorists said—is to keep the body up to its highest standard of efficiency. If this be done rosy cheeks, a clear complexion, sparkling eyes, a sweet breath, grace of carriage, will follow as surely as sunrise follows the night.

Covering the Neck.

Soon we shall be thinking about pretty ways of decorating the uncovered neck and shall no doubt revive the old time lace hemmed net ruche fastened by a rose or a ribbon bow, which in the portraits of young French beauties of the eighteenth century looks so fascinating. Devices of this and other kinds the collarless blouses which are arriving will make possible and desirable. There is a decided leaning toward the decollete blouses, with a choice of chokers.

Just A Matter of Comfortable Simplicity.

The time for this charming kimono is morning, place, the boudoir. It is fashioned from rice cloth trimmed with ribbon.

The style secret of this long Japanese kimono is its simplicity. It is fashioned of rice cloth, having the front and back cut in one. The sleeves are long and flowing. Among the latest designs in robes d'intimes, as these models are called, there is nothing that is more restful and dainty.

In medium size the kimono requires 4¾ yards 36-inch material, with 1⅝ yards constrasting material 18 or more inches wide for the trimming. If ribbon is used—and it may be with such a good effect—3⅝ yards will be needed.

A casual glance at the cutting guide will convince one of the simplicity of this part of the work. Section A is so laid on the material that the part marked by triple "TTT" perforations rests on the lengthwise fold, while the other section rests on a lengthwise thread. The piecing is placed along the selvage edge. Place the sleeve over a lengthwise thread as illustrated.

But a few hours are required for the making. Close the underarm seam as notched from large "O" perforation to lower edge. Close back seam of band (indicated by small "o" perforation), sew to neck edge of back, and to front, notches and center-backs even: fold band through center, fell remaining edge over seam.

To make the sleeve, close the seams as notched, leaving seam having 3 notches free between the 2 small "o" perforations. Sew in armhole as notched. Turn hem in sleeve on small "o" perforations and bring the 2 single large "O" perforations at hem in sleeves together and tack.

The straight belt illustrated is the smartest idea in kimono waist finishings.

BAKED CREAMED SCALLOPS.—Put one quart of scallops in a stewpan, add one small onion, cover with boiling salted water, let simmer twenty minutes, then remove the onion, drain, cut the scallops into small pieces and place in a buttered baking dish. Cook three tablespoonfuls of flour in three tablespoonfuls of butter, add gradually one pint of milk, stir until thick and smooth, season with pepper and salt and pour the sauce over the fish. Cover with crumbs moistened with melted butter and bake until brown.

Oysters With Cheese.—Take a cupful of grated breadcrumbs and brown nicely in a little butter; butter a shallow dish and sprinkle with the breadcrumbs. Drain about three dozen oysters and dry with a clean towel and then season. Place them one by one on the browned breadcrumbs, strew chopped parsley over them and grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle lightly with breadcrumbs again and place in the oven. The layer of breadcrumbs will be brown in about fifteen minutes if the oven is hot enough. Serve with drawn butter and lemon garnish. If desired a little lemon juice may be poured over the oysters before placing in the oven.

Oyster Toast Virginia.—Quickly fry in a frying pan twelve thin slices of Virginia ham, then remove from the fire and keep hot. Put three dozen large oysters in the pan and cook for four minutes. Moisten with a pint of cream, season with salt and paprika, boil for five minutes and thicken with two egg yolks mixed with a little cream. Flavor with three tablespoonfuls of sherry wine if this is approved. On each of six slices of toast place two slices of ham. Place six oysters evenly over the slices of ham, pour the sauce over and serve very hot.

Shrimps on Toast.—Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add two cupfuls of rich milk and salt and cayenne pepper to taste. When hot add two hard boiled eggs chopped or cut into small pieces and two cupfuls of canned shrimps. Heat through and serve on slices of buttered toast.

FOR SUMMER SHOWERS.

Gay Umbrellas Are Appearing Like Broken Off Bits of Rainbows.

It is not a bit too soon to get ready for summer showers. Indeed, one need not regret the gentle downpour if she is provided with one of the new umbrellas made of silk taffeta in green, blue, burgundy, prelate, orchid, dull yellow or African brown. The color choice is broad, so that the costume or the salient tone thereof may be matched.

These silks are waterproof, and the color looks no worse after its summer bath. The handles are quite short and are said to be copied from the stick of the British or French officer. There is no handle in the usual sense of the word, but instead there is a heavy cord loop run through a perforation in the handle, and this is swung over the wrist.

One advantage of the new umbrella is that it may be used for sun protection quite as well as for the rain defense. One feels less foolish starting out in the morning under a cloud, as it were, umbrella in hand or raised above the head, and finding herself equally prepared when the sun unexpectedly pierces the clouds later in the day. Moreover, the gay color seems to anticipate the appearance of the rainbow.

Kitchen Helps.

In order to keep lettuce fresh for an indefinite time put the head in a glass containing water and place it in the icebox or some other cool, dark place. The roots will absorb the water, which should be changed daily, and keep the lettuce fresh and crisp.

If you would save your hands from unsightly vegetable stains always peel or scrape potatoes, turnips, etc., under warm running water.

When your grocer sends you hard lemons and you want them for immediate use let them stand for a few hours in water, and they will soon become soft and juicy.

A home "cold storage" for eggs may be made by placing two inches of wood ashes in the bottom of a tin pail. In this stand on the small end as many fresh eggs as will fit easily without letting them touch. Over these sift a couple of inches of ashes and adjust another layer of eggs. When the pail is full cover it tightly and place in a cool place, and the eggs will keep perfectly for an indefinite time.

On Ironing Day.

One will find it a great help on ironing day to have a goodly supply of clothes hangers at hand. As soon as a garment is ironed slip it over a hanger. Each hanger will hold a number of the same kind of garments, and in putting the clothes away all that is necessary is to place the hangers in the closet. In this way many pieces do not have to be handled twice and wrinkled clothes are avoided.

TIMBALES GALORE.

APPLE TIMBALES.—Six fine flavored apples, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of water, butter the size of an egg, two eggs, one cupful of breadcrumbs, one-half cupful of milk or cream, grated lemon rind and nutmeg to taste. Cook the apples, sugar, water and lemon rind to a pulp. Stir in the butter while hot. When cool add the well beaten eggs, the breadcrumbs and the grated nutmeg. Mix and divide into buttered tins and bake for twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve with whipped cream, hard sauce or butter sauce.

Timbale of Halibut.—For a family of six purchase one and one-half pounds of fish. Wash thoroughly, chop or grind very fine. Add one teaspoonful of salt, a dash of cayenne, one-half cupful of thick cream beaten until stiff and the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Turn this into a well buttered, closely covered baking pan, stand over boiling water and cook steadily for thirty minutes. Turn out on a serving plate and pour around it the egg sauce.

Cheese Timbales For Two.—Into each mold put a heaping teaspoonful of grated or chopped cheese, pouring over it the foundation of one cupful of milk and one egg beaten together and tastily salted and peppered. Put them in a pan of boiling water, cover and place over the fire till the mixture sets. Serve at once. A little leftover macaroni may be added if liked.

Chicken Timbales.—Into as many molds as required at the meal put cold, chopped chicken, two heaping teaspoonfuls. Pour over this the base of milk and egg (one egg to one cupful of milk), salted and peppered to taste; place in a pan of boiling water, cover and boil till the mixture is firm. Chopped cold tongue, dried beef or leftover peas, with a sprinkling of parsley on top, also make tasty luncheon dishes.

FAMOUS HORSEBACK RIDERS.

Men Who Won Fame In the Days of the Old Pony Express.

Buffalo Bill Cody, it is believed, holds the record for the longest horseback ride of which there is authentic record. He was one of that gallant band of fourscore pony express riders in the sixties. On one occasion young Cody—he didn't become Buffalo Bill until some years afterward—rode without rest for 322 miles.

When the pony express was started for the purpose of carrying mail from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Cal., a distance of 1,066 miles, it was planned that each rider should cover seventy-five miles in a day on three different horses.

It was soon found that twenty-five miles was too much for the horses for a regular unbroken gallop, and the distance was reduced to from ten to twelve miles. For that distance every horse was pushed to his limit.

The shortest time in which the entire distance of 1,966 miles was covered by pony express riders was made in March, 1861. They carried Lincoln's inaugural address to the Golden State in seven days and seventeen hours, an average speed of over ten and one-half miles an hour.

A rider named Haslam dashed off 120 miles in 8 hours and 10 minutes. Another pony expressman covered one ten mile stretch in 31 minutes, which is better than most of the Rocky Mountain railroad limited trains can do.

The news that Fort Sumter had been fired upon was flashed from St. Joe to Sacramento in eight days and fourteen hours.

Jim Moore once rode 280 miles at an average speed of eighteen miles per hour. The horses were the best that could be obtained, and, as stated before, they made short runs of from ten to twelve miles.

No wonder that sometimes a letter had $27 worth of stamps upon it when carried under such extraordinary conditions!—Philadelphia Ledger.

TOLD BY THREE FIGURES.

A Sum In Arithmetic That Would Take Many Lifetimes to Work Out.

What is the highest number that can be expressed with only three figures? Such is the question put by the Journal of the Astronomical Society of England. At first glance it would seem that the number was 999. But it is nothing of the sort; 999 is far away too small. What, then, is the number? 9^{9^9}—that is to say, the ninth power of the ninth power of 9.

To ascertain what this number actually is we must refer to a table of logarithms, for it would take several lifetimes to do the multiplication. The number contains 369,693,100 figures. To write it out we should have to fill 28 volumes of 800 pages each, with 14,000 figures to a page, and the number would be greater than that of all the atoms in creation.

Henri Coupin points out in La Nature that there are stars so distant that their light, traveling at 186,300 miles a second, takes a million years to reach the earth. Astronomers have taken this as a unit and called it a "million light year." The number of atoms in a sphere of platinum that had that radius would be 225, followed by 88 zeros. Now, a sphere that contained the number of atoms expressed by the ninth power of the ninth power of 9 would have to have a radius (in million light years) of 1,289, followed by 123,231,000 zeros.

And yet this colossal number can be expressed by three figures.

Tame Silk.

There is more silk in the world than the silkworm ever knew. As a matter of fact, much of the "silk" which is worn is merely guncotton in a new dress. It is merely cotton dissolved in a bath of nitric acid, kept water free by the strongest vitriol. The jellylike result is then forced through very minute tubes, and the fine threads so produced are dropped into water and rendered innocuous by ammonium sulphide. This "tame silk" has a fine luster and has all the flexibility of the worms' work. In fact, so close is the resemblance that it needs an expert to distinguish them.—London Chronicle.

She Liked Gloom.

It is a matter for thankfulness that widows of this generation are more sensible than the dowager Countess of Buchan, who passed away in the year 1786.

On the death of her husband she dressed herself entirely in black crape, engaged two black servants to wait upon her, ate nothing but black puddings and drank for one whole year nothing but black cherry brandy. Yet she survived this gloomy diet twenty-one years before the grim reaper gathered her in.—T. P.'s London Weekly.

COURAGE WINS HER

Stand Made by Suffragists Impresses Pearl White.

ONCE SCORNED THEIR FIGHT.

Her Views Changed When She Saw How Bravely the Women Marched In a Parade In New York Despite a Cold, Miserable Day.

New York.—"You see, it was like this," said Miss Pearl White, curling her slender figure up on a corner of her couch. "I was one of those who found suffragettes funny. They handed me a laugh many a time just because I thought they were pulling a speech off to get themselves heard. But I tell you I didn't think that after their October parade. It was on an awfully cold, mean day, if you recall it, and the way those women came up the avenue beating against the wind, with their white dresses on, fairly gave one a thrill.

There they stood, hour after hour, waiting to get into line, and there weren't six of them that 'beat it for home,' I'll make my guess.

"I like to see women who dare to do things. There are hundreds of women working for their living, and most of them don't dare say what they think. But those suffragettes, they've got their courage right with them, all the time," went on the plucky, daredevil "movie" star.

She it was who took up the dare when some one said no girl could be a steeplejack, and on April 15, dressed in the part of a sign painter in overalls and cap on which "Votes For Women" gleamed across the visor, Miss White let herself down an electric sign twenty-two stories above Broadway.

Miss White is as lithe as a panther. She can twist her pliant figure into more curves than most women. Half Italian and half Irish, she comes from Missouri, and so she adds keenness to her Celt and Latin traits. "I pay taxes," said she thoughtfully. "Why shouldn't I say something about what is to be done with my tax money? I pay income tax, too, just as if I were a man. I earn money too. In my profession a woman star earns more than a man, yet I have nothing to say about the income tax law nor about any other law. Why shouldn't I vote? Women are doing every kind of work men do, and over in Europe they are suffering as much as men suffer. If war should come to America they would suffer here. I want to vote for president of this country, for I know who I think ought to govern us. But I shan't have anything to say about the president. I'll have to abide by the decision of men, who may not care half as much as I care."

WIND IMPRISONS WOMAN.

Locked In Closet and Near Collapse When Rescued.

Bridgeville, Del.—Imprisoned in a closet by the wind slamming a door shut, Mrs. Mollie Cordery, who lives near Bridgeville, had a narrow escape from death and when discovered was nearly overcome by the shock.

Mrs. Cordery was cleaning the attic, and while she was looking in an old closet a gust of wind slammed the door and locked it from the outside. There was no one but herself in the house, and it was nearly an hour before Mrs. Cordery's screams happened to be heard by a gang of men who were repairing the road. With all the doors locked downstairs, Harley Rickards climbed to the second floor and got through by a window. When Mrs. Cordery was found she was in a pitiable state. She is still seriously ill from the shock.

Sentences Himself to Jail.

Visalia, Cal.—Ernest Stevenson, a Visalia laborer, sentenced himself to a year in the county jail in Judge Knox's court after pleading guilty to a charge of drunkenness. The verdict was set aside by the judge as excessive. In passing sentence on himself after the judge had asked him to do so Stevenson said treatment in hospital did no good and perhaps he could "sober up again" in a year.

Athens—The Turkish viceroy will leave soon to make a personal appeal to the aiser for men and munitions of war for protection against an expected advance by the Russians upon Constantinople.

Berlin—The selection of a strong man as vice chancellor, who can .eal with the food problem in Germany is deemed of far more importance by the Kaiser than one who has other qualifications. Such a man is found in Dr. Karl Helferrich, the present minister of finance.

Dr. Helferrich is a man of thorough business training and was one of the strongest forces in the recent crisis in German-American relations in favor of reaching an understanding in the April debate of the Reicstag Ways and Means Committee on the submarine issue and his reports to headquarters on the latest German note contributed materially to overcoming the desires of advocates of unlimited use of the torpedo and bringing about a settlement of the controversy with the United States.

With the impending separation of the problems of food regulations from the Ministry of the Interior and the creation of a separate department of government, with plenary powers to control food prices and distribution, the Ministry of the Interior becomes slightly less important, but still remains the most influential department of he cvil administration. The new director, or directors, of food supplies— for the powers may be intrusted to a duumvirate, with one military member—apparently has not been selected, but Baron von Stein, head of the food supply department of the Ministry of the Interior is the most prominent of the candidates.

The fleet, which was outside the Gothenburg on Saturday with the object of capturing a British steamship about to clear for England, was forced to retire on Sunday by the appearance of British submarines. The German war ships, however, the dispatch adds, captured four Swedish steamships and took them to German harbors.

W. J. Youngs, of Minetto was elected clerk, and the inspectors are G. B. Wilson, of Hannibal, and M. Merriam, of Granby.

NO CHANGE TO BE MADE IN DOCTRINE

Conference Remains Divided on Amusement Issue—Minority to Submit Dissenting Report.

Saratoga Springs — Recommendation that no change be made in the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which prohibits church members from dancing, playing cards, and attending the theatre, was adopted this afternoon by the Committee on the State of the Church by a vote of 113 to 43. The sub-committee, which recommended that the prohibition against these diversions be removed, announced it would submit a minority report to the conference.

The Episcopacy Committee recommended the retention of the Episcopal residences at Washington, Boston, Philadelphia, New York, San Francisco, Denver, Portland, Ore.; Chicago, Cincinnatti, New Orleans, Chattanooga, Buffalo, Omaha, Otlanta, St. Louis, Helena, Mont., and St. Paul. The residence at Kansas City, Kan., would be transferred to Wichita, Kan.; that in Oklahoma would be discontinued and new residences established at Pittsburgh, Pa.; Detroit, Mich., and Seoul, Korea.

Foreign Episcopal areas would be continued at Zurich, Buenos Aires and Peking, and the Foochow residence would be transferred to Shanghai.

A motion to substitute Singapore for Pittsburgh was made by Rev. John H. Klans of La Crosse, Wis., who argued that foreign missionary work should not be restricted by the creation of new bishops at home.

Rev. James A. Hensey, a district superintendent stationed at Binghamton, opposed any increase in the Episcopacy on the grounds of expense.

Dr. Day Favors Singapore.

Chancellor James R. Day, of Syracuse University favored a residence at Singapore.

"Bishops are needed more in the Far East," he said, "than they are needed here. Singapore is the pivotal point of the Far East to-day. Give Singapore a general superintendent."

"Give Episcopal supervision to Mayalsia if you will, but do not do it at the expense of the home base," said Rev. W. F. Connor, a district superintendent of Pittsburgh. "If we are to give a fair trial to the area idea I believe every residence approved by the Episcopacy in the United States should be kept."

Rev. William G. Shellabar, a missionary at Singapore, moved to amend Mr. Klans' motion by establishing an area at Singapore in addition to those at Pittsburgh and Detroit.

Rev. Wallace W. Martin, a district superintendent at Fort Wayne, Ind., moved as a substitute for the Klans motion that the committee's report be adopted with the exception of the Pittsburgh and Detroit residences. He based his argument on the statement in the Methodist handbook that the sum disbursed for the support of the Episcopacy in the past four years exceeded the receipts by more than $68,000.

An amendment to the substitute motion of Mr. Martin to recommit the report to the Episcopacy Committee with instructions to eliminate two of the proposed areas, was supported by Albert J. Wallace, a layman of Pasadena, Cal., and Rev. William C. Hanson and U. C. Leazenby, district superintendents at Kansas City, Kan., and Crawfordsville, Ind.

Opposes Giving Instruction.

Rev. Thomas Nicholson, secretary of the Board of Education and chairman of the Episcopacy Committee, opposed the idea of the conference instructing the committee.

"I am willing to have the report recommitteed," he said, "but in the name of the church do not recommit with instructions."

The conference voted to recommit the report without instructing the committee.

The conference adopted another report of the Episcopacy Committee recommending that Northern Africa be associated with Europe for episcopal supervision.

Rev. E. B. Chappell of Nashville, Tenn., fraternal delegate from the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in a farewell address to the conference urged an early amalgamation of the various branches of Methodism. Bishop E. R. Hendrik of the Southern Church was introduced to the conference today and was greeted with prolonged applause.

The proposal to reunite the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which have been separated since 1845, will be made the order of special business at to-morrow's session of the conference.

The report of the special committee on federation presented to the conference to-day indorsed the proposed unification, in the belief that such union would "hasten the development of a truly world church."

The report recommends that the general conference be the supreme governing body for the reunited church and that the plan of unification be extended to any other Methodist bodies that may desire it, after the amalgamation of the North and South branches of the denomination has become effective.

The report favors the organization of special conferences for the Negro membership of the church, such Negro conferences to be represented in the general conference.

Under the plan suggested by the special committee on federation the Board of Bishops would appoint a committee of five bishops, ten ministers and ten laymen to confer with commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Methodist Protestant Church and other Methodist bodies in the United States to work out the tentative plan that has been proposed and in carrying forward such negotiations as shall result in the proposed unification, and to report to the next general conference the full details of the unification plan agreed upon by the joint commissioners.

AGENT SAID TO CONTROL SALE OF GAS IN VICINITY OF VAN EMBURGH STORE

That John W. Stevenson's famous "mailed fist" of old is still a power in Fulton politics is manifest in the objections which have been filed with members of the Board of Public Works against the granting of a permit to Edward Van Emburgh of West First street, for the installation of a curb gasoline tank in front of his property, if the stories now in circulation among the property owners and storekeepers in that district are to be believed.

Mr. Van Emburgh made application to the Board for a permit at the last meeting, which was held Monday night. At that time, some of the members of the Board made mention of certain "objections" which had been filed with them against the tank, and the application was tabled. No definite reasons for any objections were made public by any of the members of the Board, but it was intimated that the majority of the property owners in that section would fight the granting of the permit, because their insurance rates would be increased if the tank was put in.

An investigation among the neighboring store-keepers of Mr. Van Emburgh discloses an entirely different tale. It appears that Mr. Stevenson is the main, and as far as could be learned today, the only objector. Sympathizers of Br. Van Emburgh say that Mr. Stevenson's objections are mainly for the purpose of throttling competition in the sale of gasoline at that point. They allege that Mr. Stevenson is the real owner of another curb gasoline tank which is situated just around the corner from the Van Emburgh store, even though the title rests ostensibly in another name. They state that the tank in question was delivered to Mr. Stevenson and installed by men in his employ, and that he is objecting to the Van Emburgh tank because he wants a monopoly on the sale of gasoline in the lower west side.

The talk of a raise in the insurance rates proves to be pure bunco, after a conversation with property owners in the vicinity of the tank which is now in operation. They state that there has been no raise whatever in their rates because of the installation of the tank, and when asked for their opinion of the objections manifested against the Van Emburgh tank, they smile knowingly and shrug their shoulders.

With the exception of the American Woolen Company and one other owner, any objection on the part of property owners in the vicinity of the Van Emburgh store must come from David Mills, who owns several stores at that point. He is related to Mr. Van Emburgh, and does not offer any objection to the tank.

The residents of the West Side are awaiting with great interest the decision of the Board of Public Works on the Van Emburgh application, and many are of the opinion that if their every business project must first be endorsed with the "O.K." of a few individuals in that quarter, some concerted action should be taken.

Papermakers, Scouts and Campfire Girls March to Tabernacle

Preceded by the Elks' band, which furnished inspiring music for the occasion, 200 paper makers of the city marched through the streets last night to attend services at the Peacock tabernacle. Five Fulton paper companies were represented in the line of march, and each delegation carried a banner, with the name of the company inscribed on it. The Victoria Paper company employes, led by E. R. Redhead, comprised the forward ranks of the parade, and were followed by men from the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Co., the Volney Paper Co., E-Z Opener Bag Co., and the Granby Paper Co.

As the men neared the tabernacle, the band played a special arrangement of "Onward Christian Soldiers" and as the men marched in to take the place reserved for them, the entire audience arose.

Members of the Fulton Young People's Union to the number of 200, bearing a huge banner on which was written, "Fulton's Young People For Christ," followed the papermakers, and delegations representing Neahtawanta and Newitza Campfire, of the Campfire Girls, with 50 Boy Scouts, also joined the parade.

By special request of Chorister Warth, the band played two numbers in the tabernacle, and the congregation joined in the singing. It was announced that the paper-makers may have another special night next week, at which time all those who did not attend the services last night will have an opportunity to hear the evangelist.

The following men have been designated as a general committee for Boys' night, which will be held Friday night: F. E. Goodjon, chairman; Fred Vogelsang, Fred Chubb, Amos Druse, Charles Seeley, Grove Gilbert and Ensign Fitzgerald. These men will drill the boys in several songs and yells which have been written for the occasion, and all boys and young men between the ages of 12 and 24 years, are urged to meet at the First Baptist church Friday night at 6 o'clock, or as soon thereafter as they can come. A luncheon will be served to the boys, and the march for the tabernacle will begin about 7 o'clock. Music of some sort will head the march, although the committee has not yet decided which organization will furnish it.

On the same evening, a place will be reserved for the business men, who are to meet at the N. Y. Central Station, corner of Broadway and East Second street, about 7:15 o'clock. They will march to the tabernacle in a body about 7:20.

Tonight has been designated as Masonic and Eastern Star night. Tomorrow night the pupils of the High School will attend in a body, and several songs will be rendered by the High School chorus. The O. U. A. M., Daughters of Liberty and employes of the Chocolate woks and Nestle Food Company, will also attend this evening.

The statistics of the revival to date are as follows:

Previous attendance, 65,800; last night, 1,900; total 67,700.

Collections to date $3,004.82. Trail hitters to date, 2,231.

TABERNACLE IS SOLD FOR $700

The sale of the Fulton Tabernacle to the Oswego Evangelistic Association was completed last night by the Fulton committee, and the Oswego association will take possession of the structure June 1. The purchase price was $700, and includes everything in the tabernacle except the pulpit desk, chairs in the choir, electric wiring and bulbs and stoves.

The Oswego association entered a bid of $700 last week, but the favorable vote of the association was necessary to ratify the bid. The bids were opened and the Oswego bid proved to be high, but the consummation of the deal was held up, awaiting the verdict of the association. In the meantime Elmer Taylor of this city bid $710 for the structure, but the Fulton committee awarded the bid to the Oswego association.

The tabernacle will remain in this city until fall, when it will be torn down and moved to Oswego. It will be used as an auditorium this summer, and several offers have been received by the new purchaser from prospective lessees.

MRS. HAMMOND PRESENTS CASE

Judge Coville, sitting in County Court at Oswego, Monday, listened to arguments in the case of Mrs. Floyd Hammond against the city of Fulton, by which Mrs. Hammond is attempting to secure the payment of a claim of $5,000, for the death of her husband, Floyd Hammond, of this city. Floyd Hammond was a call man of the Fulton fire department and was killed by a falling wall, while fighting a fire at the store house of I. Alderman last winter. Mrs. Hammond was represented by Woods and Woods of Syracuse, and W. S. Hillick appeared for the city.

Under the municipal laws of the state, the widow or family of any volunteer fireman who is killed in the performance of his duties shall be paid the sum of $2,500. The Fulton city charter specifies that call men of the department shall be accorded the same privileges as volunteer firemen, but makes no reference to the widows or families of call men, according to the contention of Mr. Hillick. The city also contends that the charter only covers the department as the laws stood at the enaction of the charter in 1902, and further, that the charter specifies privileges and exemptions for individuals.

Counsel for Mrs. Hammond claim that he was a volunteer fireman in effect, and as such, entitled his estate to all damages under the law.

Judge Coville adjourned the case for one week in order to permit both sides to submit briefs.

CHICKENS MUST STAY AT HOME

Chickens must not run at large says Health Officer Hall. They must be coralled and collared, and kept within prescribed boundaries, or otherwise on the premises of their owners. Once more, there is to be no fooling in the matter, if the threats of the Health Officer mean anything.

Numerous complaints have reached Dr. Hall of the destruction wrought by chickens upon flower beds and freshly planted vegetable gardens, and the people making the complaints believe they suffer gross injustice. The city provides protection against the ravages of chickens, the penalty to be fixed by the City Judge. Dr. Hall declares this to be the last word of the edict against wanderong chickens.

BAND CONCERTS ARE POPULAR

Whether or not the city will enjoy the usual series of summer band concerts this year will probably be decided at the next meeting of the Common Council when Mayor Lewis, in response to countless requests, will bring the matter before the Council.

The concerts last year were made possible, after the Common Council had refused to appropriate the money necessary, by equal contributions from the Chamber of Commerce, and John W. Stevenson. The season was well advanced before the council took adverse action on the subject, and after the contributions from the Chamber of Commerce and Mr. Stevenson were received. only eight concerts could be held.

According to the charter, the Common Council is limited to the appropriation of $300 for projects of this kind, and a unanimous vote of the Council is necessary to make the appropriation.

To hold ten concerts this year, at least two of which will be held during Old Home Week, will cost in the neighborhood of $600, as the expense of the band figures about $60 a concert. Last year a great portion of the expenses was defrayed by the sale of ice-cream and other refreshments, but these sales were conducted by civic and fraternal organizations.

There has always been a strong public demand for the concerts, and it is probable that some arrangement will be made by which the city will enjoy the concerts this season as herefofore.

THE QUIRK TODAY.

During the making of the William Fox production, "The Ruling Passion," in Jamaica, a portable soda fountain was shipped from New York for the use of Claire Whitney, who is co-starred in the play with William E. Shay. Miss Whitney was affected unpleasantly by the heat of the island and developed fever from drinking the water. Following her recovery she drank goat's milk in place of water. When the fever showed signs of returning Miss Whitney became desperate.

Discontinuing the goat's milk, Miss Whitney went eleven days until a small soda fountain could be built and shipped to her from this country.

Upon the completion of a scene the trunk would be opened and Miss Whitney would regale herself with chocolate ice cream soda, every ingredient of which came from America.

WORK FOR EVERYBODY

There are people in this city having little to do. But they ought to have something to do. It is our duty to work for something. Sometimes we think we are busy as nailers in the interest of our neighbors, when in fact most all of our efforts are going for naught, simply because we have no aim.

Here in Fulton we have allowed the years to go by and in too many cases have little to show for them. We have not advanced, therefore we have fallen back. We have neglected to keep the city trimmed up and pruned up, consequently it is hard for some of us to accept and carry out the desires of people in authority.

It is good to see an advance, as it will make us stronger. It is good to learn that a citizen whose property has been an eyesore and a disgrace to any progressive community is ready to meet at least half way a body of men who want to have and have something to do for the community. Willingness such as described encourages other people who have been neglectful of their own and their neighbors' interests to work for something better and higher, so that instead of becoming weaker and of less worth, we shall have a motive in life—and then look out for the prettiest of pretty cities in the grand old Empire State.

People with little to do for their city have little satisfaction in life. Somebody has said: "Better little talent and much purpose than much talent and little purpose." This teaches us to aim for something worth while and to keep our mark steadily in view; let that mark be doing something for the people of our city. It is sufficient to add that if we follow the advice life in our little city will mean much more to us. We will be more useful to our neighbors and will find more satisfaction in living. If the doing is to give good loyal, Christian-like support to every home institution, then let that be the something to do. And please do not forget that the Chamber of Commerce is the greatest agency in the world for reversing conditions brought about by neglect.

JUMBLED LEGISLATION ON RURAL CREDITS

In a strenuous effort to "clean up" the legislative program before the national conventions the rural credits bill was yesterday rushed through the House of Representatives at Washington after a hurried debate in which members had vainly asked for five minutes' time in which to express their views or suggest amendments.

Mr. Champ Clark, of Missouri, reflected the attitude of the majority of the House when in the debate on Saturday he said: "I think we are all under obligations to pass some general bill on the subject, and as this is the only bill in sight I am heartily for it." That is to say, as the platforms of all the political parties four years ago declared for some legislation to enable farmers to get credits on reasonable terms, our Solons feel that the promise is being kept by hurriedly passing at this late day any old bill or "the only bill in sight."

It is, indeed, a severe commentary upon American legislative methods. There has been no more serious question before the country during recent years than the question of providing a safe and sane and businesslike system of rural credits, and it is an outrage upon the country that it should be treated in this hodge-podge "only-thing-in-sight" method at the eleventh hour and with an eye only to political expediency and supposed effect upon "the farmers' vote."

The bill as it passed the House yesterday differs in many details and therefore must be considered in conference. It ought to fail. Better n legislation than a measure that imposes a burden upon all the people and is fraught with the gravest dangers, for while the Senate and House bills differ in details both are based on thoroughly vicious principles. The only way to rational legislation on this vital subject has been indicated by Governor Myron T. Herrick in the columns of the Herald. It lies in enabling American farmers to organize associations for independent mutual self-help. —N. Y. Herald.

THE BURGLAR'S VALOR

Among other phenomena resulting from the war, London has discovered that crimes of violence, housebreaking and petit larceny have almost ceased. Where formerly the footpad and the burglar plied their trade in large numbers, the householders' silver and valuables are now secure, and even women may walk the street at night in perfect safety.

Scotland Yard accounts for this ideal condition by the statement that the crooks have nearly all enlisted in defense of their country. The great detective bureau has the names of nearly 300,000 criminals on its records, a large proportion of whom are defending England at the front.

Nor is this all. Scotland Yard has been investigating the army records, and it finds, with some pride, that the burglars and strong arm men are faithful, courageous, dependable soldiers, and easily tempered to the hard, clean living of soldier life.

On the west front of war a burglar has won the Victoria Cross for valor in action.

Under the circumstances, England is wondering if some means cannot be found to divert the criminal's energy and valor into lawful channels when peace comes. Evidently there are depths of patriotism and manhood in this class that the peaceful life of civilization has not been able to bring out, but rather discouraged.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

ABOUT THE TOWN

Twenty-five men over the age of seventy years were present at the meeting of the Borrowed Time Club Monday afternoon, which was addrsssed by Luther Knox Peacock. Milo S. Warner and William Ross were the 'younger element" of the meeting, as both of these men have just passed the seventy mark. The others present and their ages are as follows: J. W. Rice, 71; J. R. Humphrey, 72; Dr. G. C. Whitaker, Irving Carrier, and Thomas Coles, 74; G. S. Chandler S. D. Gardner and E. W. Coe, 76; W. W. Coe and A. B. Clark, 77; S. P. Mason and J. W. Huie, 78; J. R. The "father of them all" was Orin Henderson, who will be 93 years of age in August.

City Health Officer Hall notified the Chamber of Commerce yesterday that several piles of rubbish, which were collected during Clean-Up week by residents of West 4th and West 5th streets between Phillips and Gansevoort streets, were still lying on the curbs, and the householders are complaining because they have not been removed. Evidently some of the clean-up squad decided to call it a day too soon, and the Chamber has promised to look after the rubbish immediately.

The usual agitation and argument pro and con on the band question are due to begin in the very near future. It is fairly certain that the city will have the concerts this year, as it has before, and doubtless some arrangement can be made whereby the city treasury will stand the greater part of the expense. Meanwhile the Elks' band is practicing faithfully, and will be prepared to provide music as soon as the city, or private individuals, provide the coin of the realm. L. W. Richardson, who managed the band so successfully last year, is to act in that capacity again.

WAR AND WATER SEPARATE THEM

Salum Faris, a Syrian-American, has enlisted the aid of city officials in an attempt to secure the return of his daughter from the Province of Lebanon, Syria, to the United States.

The girl, who is eight years old, left this city three years ago, for a visit with her grand-parents in Syria. She was accompanied by her mother, who died in Syria last fall. Now her father wishes his daughter to return and bring her grand-mother with her, but although he secured the necessary passports through the State department, he was informed that no boats are sailing between American and Syrian ports because of the war.

Faris took his case before Mayor Lewis and W. S. Hillick, city attorney, Monday. The man is a naturalized American citizen and has lived in this country twenty-five years. The only way in which he can send money to his daughter and mother is through the Presbyterian Board of Missions, and he had hopes that the city might aid him in securing passage for his family. Mr. Hillick informed him that the city could do nothing in the matter, but that Mayor Lewis would take up the subject with Congressman Mott, who will return to Oswego late this week, and see what can be done.

Faris lives on the West Side and works as a weaver in the worsted mills.

Whooping Cough Cured

TOBIN HEIRS CONTEST WILL

The will of James Tobin, a retired farmer, who died in this city during the past winter, was formally contested by almost every heir Monday when it was offered for probate before Surrogate Miller in Oswego. Mr. Tobin died at the home of his nephew, Patrick Hogan, of 360 West Fourth street, and after his death a will dated, October 18, 1915, was found, by which he left his entire estate to Helena Goss, of this city, a niece.

Several of the heirs, to the number of fifteen, at once began proceedings to contest the will, and the case has been adjourned several times in order that all the heirs might pool their interests. Woods and Woods appeared for the contestants.

The estate amouns to about $1,800, most of which is cash in the bank. Undue influence, lack of a disposing mind and memory at the time the will was made, and the usual allegations are made by the contesting heirs in the action against the probate of the will. The case will now go to the Supreme Court and will be tried at the October term. James R. Somers represents James Goss, the executor.

TALKS ON THRIFT

THRIFT CAMPAIGN SERIES

No. 11.—THE STAR OF THRIFT

The world had forgotten how to be poor. It was ashamed to practice thrift. Wealth had been increasing prodigiously without saving. The advent of machinery and the increased efficiency on the part of men had been creating wealth faster than it could be consumed. The homely virtue of thrift had disintegrated. Nobody had to save. When capital was required, it was created, not by saving or by cutting out waste, but by creating more of it. The farmer did not cultivate his land better but more of it. The individual who aspired to better living did not economize, but worked harder. The miser had become but fiction.

A generation or two ago everybody carried a purse. It was a lot of bother to spend a nickel. But the old wallet has disappeared and we now have a 'change pocket," and wear it out by frequent journeys thither. We have been a race of wasters, and have justified our waste by our power to earn.

Then came the war. Everybody was so rich that the world thought it could fight on stored capital. Why save a few hundred millions to pay for a war that cost billions? It would be a brief struggle at best. Why not pay for it on borrowed money? Only recently has it dawned on the people of Europe that they have stopped creating new capital, been destroying the old in suicidal amounts and only close economy and thrifty living on the part of all can save the world from bankruptcy.

The governments first borrowed all they could; but realizing that they would soon exhaust their borrowing powers turned their attention to taxation and to thrift. This process has been sobering and heroic, and measures are now being taken everywhere in Europe to meet the rising cost of war by thrift plans. These methods involve sacrifice, huge taxes, and a willingness to do without, and involve far reaching economic changes.

Having adjusted itself to thriftless conditions the world cannot suddenly depart on a new thrift idea without doing considerable damage. For instance, if everybody should stop going to the movies it would save a lot of money, but disrupt and bankrupt thousands of firms and cut down the income of other thousands relying on this industry. We could do without many things, but the sacrifice would be costly to someone. With no surplus income, as a people, the millions of Europe cannot begin to save without destroying more than they save. They cannot, strictly speaking, save at all. They can only stop spending except for necessities and spend for war; but that is merely a conversion of wealth. Germany has been adopting extreme measures, and has been limiting the consumption of luxuries. Great Britain has a thrift campaign on, and all unnecessary imports will be curtailed. But habits are not changed in a day and the efforts of spendthrifty nations to be thrifty are pathetic.

In contrast with the plight of Europe, the United States is the only lending nation on earth, now having surplus capital. It is the only country that can really save—whose thrift is not forced. Not only because of our unique position, but because if cultivated now, thrift will make us the biggest moneyed factor in the world. Thrift was never fashionable, but ought to be always. Europe's loss must be our gain, and our gain will be lasting only as we make the habit lasting. Europe must learn how to be poor again, while we must learn how to be rich. But we cannot afford to be too rich, losing our heads for riches while Europe's poverty pays the bill. Every dollar you save now helps along in the good work. America's star of thrift is nearing its zenith.

ORNATE STREET ENTRANCE DESIGNS

These Are Especially Adapted For Suburban Districts.

VARIETY IN SIZE AND STYLE

The Designs Vary From Simple Square Stone Columns or Concrete Pillars, Set on One or Both Sides of the Street, to Regular Two Story Buildings.

It is the common experience of those engaged in home decoration and civic adornment to discover that the beautiful home and the beautiful city do not lie far apart. They perceive that the individual building of private ownership and the municipal structure are not separate architectural entities, but that each is a part of the other in a truly vital sense. They understand that anything which adds to the appearance of either enhances the beauty of both, and they know that the really beautiful city is an artistic whole to the glory of which every building therein contributes its share. Moreover, it is a frequent occurrence for some feature of home architecture that lends itself to more general treatment than is possible in a private dwelling to be seized upon by municipal architects and developed into a distinctively public structure.

An interesting example of this tendency is seen in the ornamental street entrance designs that have found favor in recent years in various parts of the country, especially in the cities of Southern California. One of the attractive features of country estates and extensive private urban grounds always has been their entrances—gateways of steel and stone of more or less elaborate design which open upon pleasant driveways, stately rows of trees or alluring vistas of flowers, shrubs and fountains. Similar gates have also added to the attractiveness of cemeteries, parks and other semipublic grounds and have lent charm to residence courts, squares and places whose streets are open to public travel although the title thereto remains vested in the owners of the abutting property. And from the use of entrance gates on these streets, where individual and collective ownerships meet, it is but a short step to the adoption of similar structures for public thoroughfares that have been dedicated to general use. Moreover, in thus evolving out of a feature of home decoration an important factor in municipal adornment the street entrance has gained in size and elaborateness and has developed along those lines that best adapt it to the purpose it is called upon to serve.

Public street entrance designs permit of considerable variety in size and style. They vary from simple square stone columns or concrete pillars set on one or both sides of the street to regular two story buildings, whose size and elaborateness are limited only by the width of the street, the amount of available funds and the architect's sense of appropriateness. The simplest designs consist of two pairs of columns, one smaller than the other, the former being set just outside the sidewalks and the latter in the parking between the sidewalks and the street. On top of these are placed ornamental stone designs, electric lights or flower urns, and sometimes connecting steel arches span the streets or both the streets and the sidewalks.

On the same theory as that an individual building is sometimes said to have a character and to create an atmosphere peculiar to itself, so tracts, dominated architecturally by ornamental street entrance designs, which were derived originally from one of the artistic features of the house beautiful, may be said to possess individuality and to contribute their own peculiar qualities to the atmosphere of a beautiful city.

Efficient Methods of Control.

Organic and efficient methods of control, of which city planning in the broadest sense of that term has become a fundamental factor, are now far more imperatively necessary for the city than ever before.

REASONS FOR CLEANUP.

Health officials in scores of cities and towns of the United States have given substantial reasons for the annual spring cleanup, and the movement has been indorsed by medical societies, organizations of sanitary officials and other scientific bodies almost without number.

Among the reasons that have been given for a general community wide cleanup each spring are these:

Removal of winter collections of rubbish decreases the summer hordes of flies by eliminating their breeding places, for flies breed only in filth. If the material is removed and properly disposed of the flies cannot propagate.

Flies are the known disseminators of typhoid and other diseases. If there are fewer flies or no flies one prolific source of infection will be done away with. Every one is familiar with the word picture of the photograph of a fly crawling over a heap of decayed filth and then flying into the house and crawling over the baby's face, so this needs no elaboration.

Taxes and Billboards.

The imposition of a tax on mural advertisements, which Mr. McKenna is reported to be considering, has produced satisfactory financial results for many years past in France. Not a bill can be displayed on any hoarding or in any window in that country without having affixed to it an inland revenue stamp costing at least a penny. Theatrical posters, cards announcing apartments to let and bills offering rewards for the recovery of lost dogs all come under the same law. On printed matter the stamps are usually attached before printing. Frequent inspection renders evasion difficult. In this connection our French neighbors put into operation, just over three years ago, another excellent idea which might well be adopted in this country. This is the plan they adopted to get rid of the hideous advertising hoardings, which then desecrated so many of the national beauty spots. A bill was brought in proposing a tax of £2 a square yard per annum on all hoardings under six yards square, £4 a yard up to ten yards, £8 up to twenty, and £16 on those above twenty. If two separate advertisements appeared on the same hoarding, the tax was doubled; if three, trebled, and so on. The bill was introduced solely on artistic grounds and was passed with the enormous majority of 500 votes to 3.—London Chronicle.

Some Queer English Names.

We may puzzle our brains over the tongue twisting names which France and Russia have given to some of their towns, but England furnishes a few quite as dazzling as that of Przemysl. Hurstmonceaux, for instance, is pronounced Her-so; Kirkcudbright, Kircoo-bree; Daventry, Dantry; Leominster, Lemster, and Evesham is called E-sham.—London Opinion.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Heinie Groh, Cincinnati's Smart Third Baseman.

Heinie Groh, who guards third base for the Cincinnati Reds, is considered one of the ablest performers at that difficult corner in the big leagues. Groh was formerly with the New York Giants, but went with Herzog to Cincinnati before the 1915 season opened in exchange for Fromme and Hans Lobert. Since joining the Reds Heinie has played gilt edged ball. Last season he finished fourth in the list of fielders in the National league, with a percentage of .969. He really headed the list, as he took part in 131 games, while of the three preceding him only one played as many as fifty-five. He also shone at the bat, finishing in twelfth position, with a mark of .290.

Billiard Prospects.

In the death of Firmin Cassignol in New York there has been lost to billiards one of the few men and perhaps the only one who could force Willie Hoppe to the supreme test. While the French expert did not come to this country ostensibly to play the present world's champion, the prospect of a match with Hoppe was the underlying motive for his making the trip. That it was futile in accomplishing the real purpose is a cause of regret. Those who saw Cassignol play were convinced of his skill, and many were confident that in him was the ability to capture the crown. Apparently the only hope for a player to match Hoppe in the course of the next year lies across the water, and there is small chance that the men considered most competent will come here. The two best billiardists in Europe are Mortier and Adorjan, the former a wealthy amateur and the latter a Hungarian now in Spain. Adorjan has expressed a desire to come to the United States, but will probably not gratify the wish until after the close of the European war.

To Test Football Officials.

At a meeting of coaches and managers of college football teams held recently at Philadelphia a plan was adopted whereby officials who are inefficient will be eliminated from the lists submitted to the central board of officials. Robert C. Folwell, head coach of the University of Pennsylvania team, suggested that the central board select officials, as it has done in the past, but have an elimination list of inefficient officials. Coach Cavanaugh of Dartmouth said that he knew of several men who officiated at big games who did not know the game. Coach Rush of Princeton suggested that new officials show their ability in preliminary games.

Bushers Always Hungry.

One Saturday afternoon during the training season the Giants' second team dropped a game to the Waco club of the Texas league. It was said later that the reason for the defeat was that the youngsters had overeaten at luncheon. This was borne out by one of the "bushers."

"We did eat too much," he said, "but there was a reason. We had breakfast at 8:30 and didn't get anything more to eat until nearly 2 o'clock. We sure were hungry."

"Do you mean to say you had to go without food for more than five hours?" he was asked.

"Yes; we did," he answered vehemently.

High Ball Hitters.

Alexander the Great, of the Philadelphia Nationals, pitcher extraordinary, declares that "high ball hitters are in the majority in the National league." Oh, no, not the kind you have in mind! The high ball hitters that Alex refers to are those who are partial to balls delivered shoulder high. Such batters experience little trouble in driving these out for safe hits. When the ball is kept low high ball hitters usually are helpless.—New York Sun.

Carrigan After College Pitcher.

Bill Carrigan, manager of the Boston Red Sox, has made a tempting offer for Bugs O'Connor, first pitcher for Manhattan college, New York city. O'Connor, who has seen four years' service with the Manhattan team, has excellent speed and control. Last year he pitched one no-hit and two one-hit games. In three games pitched this year he has struck out thirty-four men and has batted .316.

PLANNING FOR THE COUNTRY.

It Needs a Propaganda Such as Awakened Municipalities.

City planning no longer needs defense, though it sometimes needs urging, says the Times of Washington.

But rural planning, touched upon at the recent conference of the American Civic association in Washington, needs the sort of propaganda work that city planning did two decades ago. It still seems to be the idea that man should look carefully after the city, but that Providence is directing the development of the country.

It was entirely logical, if startling, to have Professor Frank A. Waugh, a pioneer in country planning, advocate that the same care be exercised in placing country roads that is expended in laying out city streets; that the same attention be given to country homes that is given to the city blocks; that the same intelligence be expended on arranging a farm as in laying out a city subdivision.

There is plenty of public land, as he pointed out, in the country where beginnings may be made. There are the roads, which constitute one of the biggest problem; the schools and the churches. These need to be studied as to location and character of construction.

But in country, as in city, planning should center about the home. It is not exaggeration to say—for health records will bear it out—that the average farmhouse is a breeding place for disease.

Poor ventilation arrangement, lighting, heating, mark the average farmhouse even of more modern construction. Provision for the agricultural employee is worse, though that for his employer is bad enough. Arrangements for social intercourse are inadequate. The movement to get full value for investment in schoolhouses and churches has only just started. Moreover, with the growing road building the country faces the same condition that cities face—having alterations made in streets at enormous cost which might have been saved by intelligence in the first place.

Country planning is going to be harder than city planning, for its needs are going to be harder to demonstrate to those who will be benefited. John Jones of the city can recognize Tom Smith's needs when Tom Smith lives jam up against his wall, but Farmer Jones will find it harder to enthuse over Farmer Smith's needs when Smith lives halfway across the state.

Country planning, therefore, must be a state problem. It is too big for communities to handle alone. It requires that wise provision and supervision which can be had only by applying the best intelligence of a state to that portion where, with few exceptions, more than half its population lives and where that part of the population lives which keeps the city man clothed and fed.

Driving It In.

The bright newspaper wit who is on the job twenty-four hours a day recently heard a lady remark on the stability of posts in a public building which had but one nail driven in each.

"That's nothing," he cut in. "Look at the magnificent physical organization which we call a human body, and yet it is all put together with only twenty nails."

The lady's expression showed it was not a point which needed to be hammered in.—Baltimore American.

Earthquake shocks travel, as a general rule, at a pace of about 16,000 feet per second.

ALFANO'S OFFENCE WAS TREATING HIS FRIENDS

Vincenzo Alfano, of North 4th street, this city, entered a plea of guilty to a violation of the excise law before Judge Coville in County Court at Oswego Monday.

Vincenzo keeps a small store on North 4th street, which is largely patronized by his countrymen. He holds a government license to sell liquor at wholesale, in quantities of not less than five gallons. The police, under Chief Dyer, raided his store about three weeks ago, and Alfano was caught dispensing liquor in small quantities and even serving individual drinks. There is little evidence to prove that he sold the liquor, and he claims he was giving it away as a treat. The liquor tax law prohibits the giving away of liquor, however, without a license.

The minimum penalty in Alfano's case is a fine of $200, which will probably be imposed upon him. He was represented by James R. Somers.

VINCENZO DENIES HE CARRIED FIRE ARMS

Vincenzo Redino, alias Johnny Ray, of North 4th street, who was arrested during the raid on the store of Vincenzo Alfano some weeks ago, pleaded guilty to a charge of carrying concealed weapons before Judge Coville in County Court Monday.

Redino denies that he ever purchased the revolver which was found in his coat pocket by the police, or ever carried any fire arm. He claims that one of the other Italians who was captured at the time, must have put the gun in his coat, or that some enemy did it.

The usual fine for carrying concealed weapons is $100, and it is very likely that an example will be made of Redino in order to impress the Italian contingent in this city. Judge Coville adjourned the case until next Monday. James R. Somers appeared in behalf of Redino.

The Confession: What It Means to Catholics

Men of the city to the number of 600 attended the mission at the Church of the Immaculate Conception last night, and conspicuous among the throng were faces which have not been seen in the interior of any church in this city in years. Father Austin, O. M. C. had charge of the ritual portion of the service, and in connection with the announcements of the evening, addressed the men on the subject of "Confession."

Father Stephen, O. M. C., delivered the sermon, which was followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, during which the men of the congregation joined with the choir in singing. The men are becoming more familiar with the hymns each evening, and the effect produced by the combination of the choir and congregation is most inspiring. Frederic Kenyon presided at the organ and the service included the singing of the 'O Saultaris Hostia," "Tantum Ergo," and the recessional hymn, "Holy God, We Praise Thy Name." The choir sang "Come, Holy Spirit" before the sermon.

Early Confessions Desired.

Father Austin urged the men to go early to the sacrament of Penance, and to make their confessions during the week in order that the crowd Saturday afternoon and night might be handled more easily by the confessors in charge.

In the course of his remarks, the priest said, "The confessional is not the invention of the priest, as some would have you believe, neither is it something which the Church has instituted. It is the direct result of the institution of the sacrament of Penance by Jesus Christ, when He said to his Apostles, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost; whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained." Such were the words of Christ in establishing the sacrament of Penance, and He intended that His sacrament should be used by the members of His Church, for He has said, "Unless you do Penance, you shall all likewise perish."

"About nine years ago, I had a conversation with a Protestant clergyman, during the course of which he remarked that he was very tired, because of the number of confessions he had heard that day. I knew that our Episcopalian friends had a form of confession, and so I asked this clergyman. "How do you confess?" He replied, "We acknowledge ourselves as sinners, and kneeling before the priest, we ask him to forgive us, as the representative of God.",

"I said to him 'Our Bibles agree on this point,—that Christ gave the power to forgive sin to His Apostles, but we do not agree on the question of authority. Now tell me, do you ever retain sin? For instance, suppose one of the members of your congregation came to you after having committed a theft, and accused himself as a sinner, and asked you to pardon him. Would you do it?' The clergyman replied that he would. 'How could you?' I asked him, 'The malice of the sin of theft lies in the fact that he has appropriated something belonging to another and persists in holding it against the owner's will. If that is true, and the sinner persists in the malice of theft, how can you forgive him?' I might say in passing, that this clergyman later became a convert to the Catholic Church, and is now a priest in the diocese of Philadelphia.

Confession Made Free

"In the Catholic Church, no man could be absolved from the sin of theft, if he still continues to hold the article he had stolen, and even the Pope himself could not absolve him unless he offered to make restitution. In cases of this kind the priest must use discretion, he must know what sins to forgive and what sins to retain. In the case of a person calumniating another, and doing damage to another's reputation, that person is not forgiven unless he retracts his false statements.

"The priest derives no pleasure and no profit from the confessional. The entire responsibility of the confessional rests with the priest. I think I can truthfully say there is no Catholic priest of my acquaintance who would not do away with the confessional, looking at it from a selfish standpoint, if it were possible. It would save him a great deal of work and worry. But the confessional was instituted by Christ and He has ordered his Apostles and their successors to continue His work. 'I shall be with you even unto the consummation of the world.'

"What kind of a confession are we to make? In the first place, we are to make a good, thorough examination of conscience. You know the moral code of the Church, and you know your sins, of the past and present. If you have not gone to confession in some time, make your examination a most searching one. Be prepared to tell, not only the sins, but the number of times, as nearly as possible, you have committed these sins. Tell whether or not your last confession was a good one, whether you lived up to the promises you made at that time. Before you go to confession, recite the "Confiteor", and when you are making your confession, don't compel the priest to do it all, even to suggesting your sins to you,—be prepared to tell him.

"Lastly, make a good fervent act of contrition, and you will be instructed along these lines in the sermon tomorrow evening."

Father Stephen Preaches

For the sermon of the evening, Father Stephen took as his text the words of Ecclesiastics,—"Man knoweth not his own end; as the birds are taken in the snare, as the fishes are taken in the nets, so also is man taken in the evil times, in his sin it shall come upon him."

The missionary said in part:

"Dear Christian men, life is dear, but life is short. We scarcely open our eyes to the light of this world, it seems, when the cold finger of death is laid upon our brow.

"What is man's life? An existence here on earth for a few years, and then it is ended. This thought comes home to every man—some day I must die. Some day I must leave this world, and my friends will carry me out to the cemetery and bury me six feet in the earth, where my body shall become the food of worms.' It is not a pleasant thought. We try to keep it from our minds, and we try to avoid all thoughts of death. But no one will deny this fact, that all men must die.

"No one will deny that we all must leave this earth, and everything on it, behind us. No matter how old we may become, the day must come for each of us, when we shall close our eyes in death.

"Shall we join with those wretched victims of infidelity who say that all ends with death, that man has no life in the hereafter? Shall we join in festive amusements, and cry, 'Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die?' Or shall we, in accordance with the warnings of reason, use rather the means we have given us to fortify us against that day of death, that we may not be taken unawares?

"When God placed us on this earth he gave to each of us an allotted time. We are here on probation, this is our time in which we prove ourselves either worthy of a reward, or deserving of a punishment. For some, the time of probation is long. Others die in their youth, as they are building air castles and planning to enjoy life in the future. Others are like flowers of the field, they blossom and live for a day, and then wither and die.

Here on Probation.

"But what is the main thought that makes us fear death? It is this: that we know not the day or the hour. When will I die, will I be prepared to die? That is a thought for every Christian. You know that sudden deaths are not uncommon. You may have experienced them in your own family circle, or among your intimate friends. You may have attributed these deaths to natural causes. But the real cause was that God had planned it, and their day had come. Is He not the Supreme Ruler? When the knock of death comes, our time of probation is ended.

"We can compare ourselves to the soldier on the battlefield. He goes forth each day into battle, and he sees his comrades dying to the right and left of him. He does not know what moment may bring death to him. So it is with us, we see our friends dying every day. When may God put his finger upon us? When He does, there is no earthly power that can resist. No power which can grant us another second of life.

"Is it not foolish for us, when we realize this, to build for earth alone? We can not take the things of the earth with us.

"We see people bury their dead,—a son, perhaps, bury a parent. He watches the last spade of earth fall upon the coffin. He sheds the last tear, and returns home. Does he derive a lesson from the loss of his parent? Not often. He returns home to take possession of the spoils, to fight perhaps in the courts of law over the disposition of the estate. He does not reflect. 'My hour will soon come.'

"Why do men act this way? Is it because the vigor of youth promises long life? Death takes most of its victims in their youth. We should use every moment that God gives us to prepare for our hour.

Make and Keep Resolves

"Think of the man who has lived thoughtlessly all his life, think of his last moments. His friends have deserted him. He is forgotten by the world. His riches he must leave behind. He realizes now, too late, that his life has been one without merit. His friends may decorate his tomb, but that is as far as they can go. What despair must be in that man's heart? What avails his regrets now? Then illusions vanish, and deceptions are no more, and then you realize what one, 'Our Father' or a half-hour at mass on Sunday might have done for you.

"Resolve, therefore, to give as much time to the service of God as you can. See how you stand with God, you know your past life.

"'But,' you say, 'I have plenty of time! I've heard all this before, and I'm still alive.' I dare you to sit down, while in mortal sin, and write, 'I have many years to live.'

"We have considered death as uncertain, it is also a divine call. The call to the wretched sinner, who is unprepared, or the summons to the just man to receive his reward. It is the stepping over place into Eternity. When God calls you, he frequently gives you time, most of us are called to death at home. God sends his priest to console you, to strengthen you, and to pray for you.

"How is it with a man who has neglected his duties, when the priest utters that beautiful prayer, 'Go forth, soul, o meet Thy Maker'? With what feelings does he listen to that prayer?

"'Go forth, soul'. Bu where? On a pilgrimage to the Promised land if he has lived aright, to render an account of his stewardship. But if he has not lived in accordanee with God's teachings, picture the feelings of this man.

"Men, I am not your judge. I am representing Almighty God and I am speaking your doom to you tonight. Prepare now that you may not be taken in your sin. If you sow in the flesh, of the flesh you shall reap corruption, and if you sow in the spirit, of the spirit you shall reap life everlasting.

"Fortify yourself. If you have taken poison, you look for the antidote. Sin is the poison, and the antidote is repentance. Let this mission be God calling to you, and let it bring about such a change in your life, that at the time of death, you may say, with all the other faithful children of the Creator, 'Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit.'"

BIT OF GALLANTRY WINS HIM $200,000

Frank H. Canning, Who Protected a Woman In Fight, Remembered In Her Will.

Philadelphia.—As a result of a bit of gallantry to a woman more than three years ago Frank H. Canning, formerly of this city and later of Clarksboro, N. J., is to receive $200,000.

Mrs. J. T. Elkins of Detroit, widow of a wealthy ranch owner, died several weeks ago, leaving an estate of $400,000. Half of the money goes to Mr. Canning, the remainder to a charitable institution in Detroit. Mrs. Elkins was formerly Miss Irene Chadley of this city.

Miss Chadley was returning to her home on a trolley car late one night. She was the only woman on the car, the other passengers being half a dozen intoxicated men and Mr. Canning. Suddenly a fight started, and one of the men brushed against Miss Chadley and threatened her. Mr. Canning placed himself in front of the woman and, with the aid of the conductor, managed to overcome the rowdies.

Miss Chadley was so upset that Mr. Canning called a cab and rode with her to her home in West Philadelphia.

LIGHTNING STRUCK HOUSE.

Russell, His Wife and Baby Have a Narrow Escape.

Brady, Tex.—Bob Russell, his wife and baby, who live six miles west of Brady, had a narrow escape recently when lightning struck their home, giving them a severe shock and setting the wall paper and bedclothing afire.

The electric bolt passed across the roof and came down the wall inside the room where the family were asleep and passed to the ground by way of a telephone wire and two shotguns standing near a bed.

Russell was rendered unconscious, and when he recovered he found the bed clothing and wall paper afire. He was able to extinguish the blaze with but little difficulty. The barrels of both guns were melted, as was also the telephone ground wire.

Physician Dips Thirty Fathoms For Pure Salt Water.

San Francisco.—To save the life of a patient in St. Winifred's hospital Dr. Winslow Anderson, accompanied by fourteen doctors and nurses, went out to sea in a Crowley launch for thirty-six gallons of the purest of pure sea water.

The ailment from which the patient is suffering will give way only to a treatment in which pure salt water from the sea forms the chief element.

The party carried twelve three-gallon jugs with heavy lead sinkers, by means of which the water was lifted from a depth of thirty fathoms. The launch went nearly to the Farallone islands, and the party did not return until late at night.

GIRL GOES FIFTEEN MILES ON SKIS TO MARRY

Travels Over Deep Snowdrifts to Become Bride of a Young Los Angeles Business Man.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Skiing fifteen miles over deep snowdrifts to be a bride, Miss Helen Skinner, eighteen-year-old daughter of F. C. Skinner of Pine Knot Lodge, Big Bear valley, arrived recently in Los Angeles and was married to Wesley P. Turner, a young business man.

Miss Skinner, who passed last summer at Big Bear valley, had intended to leave there for Los Angeles earlier in the season, but was detained until all roads down the mountain had been washed out by the rains and lost under many feet of snow. When she learned that none of the roads would be opened until nearly summer she declared her intention of walking down to Los Angeles, no matter how far the snow extended.

It was then learned that a stage could make its way to Dobble, a dead mining camp on the crest of Big Bear, hanging 6,800 feet above the Mohave desert. So the dauntless little bride elect, accompanied by her mother and father, donned skis and walked from Pine Knot Lodge to Dobble, fifteen miles, over snow that lay an average depth of three feet. At Dobble the party was met by a stage from Victorville.

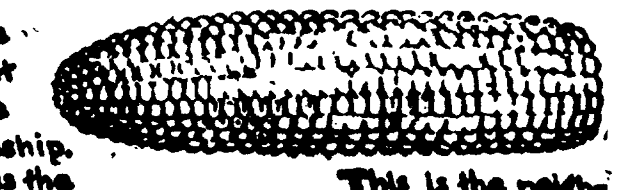
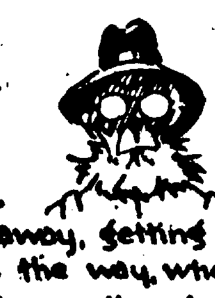
THE CORN THAT WON THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

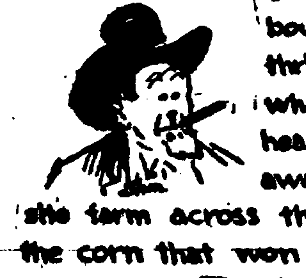


This is the corn that won the championship.

This is the boy that raised the corn that won the championship.



This is the neighbor, all forlorn, who, whenever he waked in the early morn could hear the rustling of the corn, agrowing away, getting taller each day, on the opposite farm across the way, where lived the boy, that raised the corn that won the championship.



This is the man that wanted to know, how the boy could make such large yields grow,--- thrice as much as the neighbor all forlorn, who, whenever he waked in the early morn could hear the rustling of the corn, agrowing away, getting taller each day, on the opposite farm across the way, where lived the boy that raised the corn that won the championship.

This is the way the boy replies;---

"To raise such corn, just fertilize, and plant good seed and tend it well, in fact that's all there is to tell," to the man that wanted to know, how the boy could make such large yields grow,— thrice as much as the neighbor all forlorn, who, whenever he waked in the early morn could hear the rustling of the corn, agrowing away, getting taller each day, on the opposite farm, across the way, where lived the boy that raised the corn that won the championship.

SEVEN TO ONE AT OHIO EXPERIMENT STATION.

The row of apple trees on the left was fertilized with complete applications of fertilizer and the mulch maintained. The row of trees on the right received neither fertilizer or mulch. Seven barrels of apples were picked per tree from the fertilized row and only one barrel per tree from the unfertilized row. The barrels were left in front of the trees from which the apples were picked until the above photograph was taken.

FACTORS IN FRUIT GROWING

PRUNING, FERTILIZING, SPRAYING, CULTIVATION AND THINNING ARE FIVE ESSENTIALS.

Pruning brings color—fertilizing brings size—spraying brings freedom from blemishes—cultivation brings quality—and thinning brings uniformity. These are the five factors and their special results, that are considered essential in fruit growing, by F. M. Clement, Director of Vineland Station, Canada. The five factors are all essential to the production of the best quality and quantity of fruit.

"A fertile soil produces large fruit. Size within the variety is more variable than quality within the variety and consequently, though in practice cultivation precedes fertilizing, the later—fertilizing—is more important," adds Professor Clement. "A starved tree produces little apples; a well-nourished tree, larger apples. Fertilizing also affects the vigor or health of the tree, and makes it better able to resist disease."

Parable of the Sugar Bowl

If there is just so much available fertility in an acre of soil and you use part of it in making a corn crop, part in an oat crop, part in wheat and another part in grass, and then begin the rotation over again and keep selling off the larger part of it all the time, you are like the housewife who has a bucket of sugar and dips out one day with a teacup to make a cake; another time fills the sugar bowl and another time dips out with a spoon to sweeten lemonade or make cookies, without the bucket being refilled. Some day our good woman will scrape the bottom.—Green's Fruit Grower.

As You Farm—So Shall You Reap

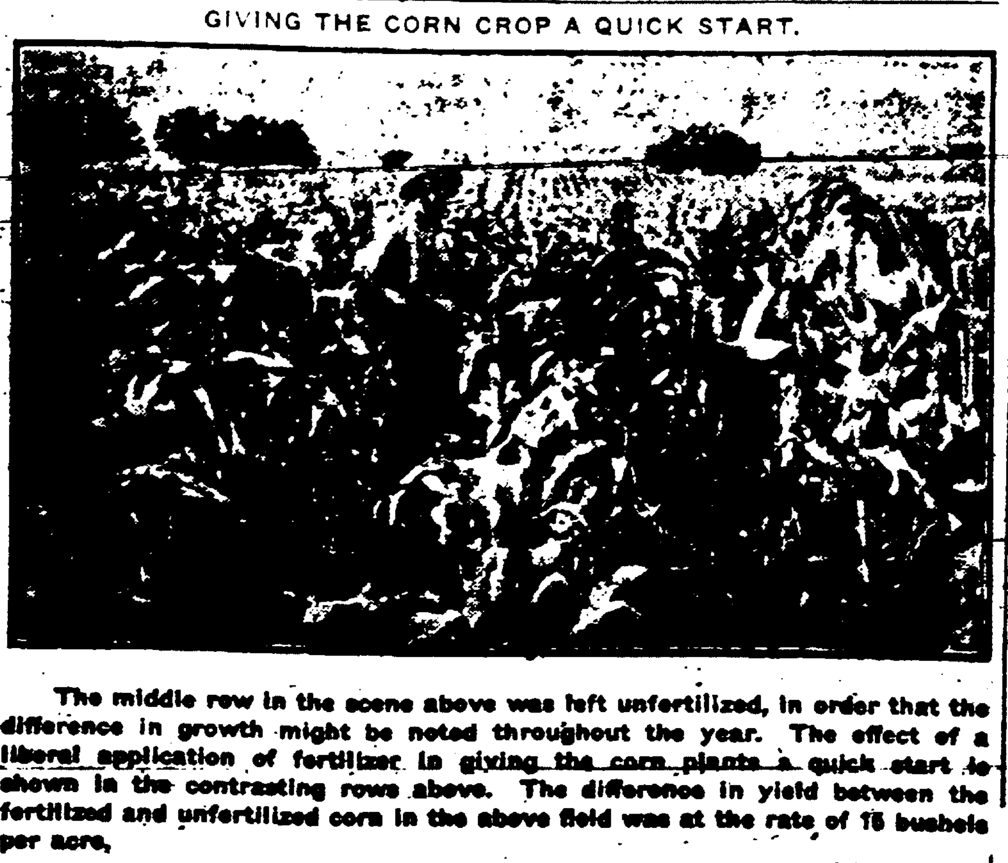
"Real farming does not consist in drawing upon the fertility of the ages and doing nothing to replace what has been taken away. Soil mining will not create permanent prosperity," says I. B. Henderson, in Farm, Stock and Home. "If the farm operations are carried on in such a way as to maintain and increase the fertility of the soil, we can naturally expect that our farms will become relatively more profitable in years to come."

Wheat Crop Reported Short

The United States Department of Agriculture, on April 1st, estimated the total production of winter wheat for 1916 at 495,000,000 bushels. The production in 1915 was 655,045,000 bushels, and in 1914 it amounted to 684,990,000 bushels.

This looks decidedly like high-priced wheat for the next harvest season. The farmer cannot increase his acreage at this time, but he can greatly increase the yield for each acre by giving his wheat fields a liberal top-dressing with a high-grade fertilizer early in the spring. The cost of the application is small when you consider that one ton of fertilizer will be sufficient for six to eight acres.

GIVING THE CORN CROP A QUICK START.



The middle row in the scene above was left unfertilized, in order that the difference in growth might be noted throughout the year. The effect of a liberal application of fertilizer in giving the corn plants a quick start is shown in the contrasting rows above. The difference in yield between the fertilized and unfertilized corn in the above field was at the rate of 15 bushels per acre.

STARTLED BY KISS

Long Distance Courtship Rounds Up With a Mishap.

WRONG FELLOW IS HUGGED.

Victim Utters Incoherent Words of Inquiry When Prospective Husband Comes Along, and After Apologies He Hurries Her Off to Minister.

Parsons, Kan.—Marcella Howland kissed the wrong man. And inasmuch as Marcella at the time of her osculatory performance was engaged to be married and the man she kissed was not her prospective husband, she found herself in an embarrassing situation when the real groom hove to and made anxious inquiry as to her affection for another man. If it had been in the good old days of rapiers and swords perhaps there would have been a duel, with much blood, but there was none of that, and only a few people at the Katy station were aware of the near tragedy.

The story of the kissing and Marcella and the man she kissed and the man she should have kissed adds another chapter to the volumes that have been written about long distance love making. This episode might have been labeled "Courtship by Mail, or Wooing by Correspondence." The story is this duly attested and sworn to by at least one of the parties concerned:

Marcella lives near Joplin and is a helper in a grocery store. A year ago she found the name of James Vandyke in a case of eggs, the said James not being a barber, as his name might indicate, but a raiser of chickens and corn near Anadarko, Okla. Marcella wrote to James, and James replied. Then followed a correspondence with each succeeding letter ripened into love. A month ago it was decided to meet in Parsons and have a minister here perform the ceremony, an elopement being considered the proper thing to do.

James arrived and spent a restless afternoon waiting for his bride, who was to come from Joplin on the evening train.

Came 7:45 o'clock, and with it the train from Joplin and Marcella. James was a bit confused in time and was not at the station. Marcella, wearing a pink carnation by prearrangement, went to the waiting room and sat down to await the arrival of her husband to be.

Now enter the other side of the triangle, whose name for the present is unknown, as he absolutely refused to divulge his identity. His name will be John Doe for this occasion. John entered the station and gazed over the crowds. Marcella saw him, and after giving him time to discover her tripped across the room and stood enraptured before the astonished man.

"Well, here I am, James," she said demurely, waiting for her fiance to take her in his arms, etc., etc.

John gasped, but made no move toward her.

"Why, you bashful thing," the girl exclaimed, and with that bounded over to the man, threw her arms about him and planted a kiss upon his lips.

John extricated himself as best he could—or would, and was mumbling some incoherent words of inquiry when in came a breathless Vandyke, who had come up just in time to behold the performance, and, convinced that some one was making away with his bride to be, rushed up to thwart him.

As he approached misgiving spread over Marcella's face. She had a faint suspicion that she had kissed the wrong man, and this suspicion grew with each step of the excited Vandyke. He stood before her. She looked at Doe and then at Vandyke. Yes, the last man was certainly the one she had come to meet. How could she have mistaken the other fellow for him, although their resemblance was quite marked?

Then apologies, explanations, assurances by Doe to Vandyke that he was an innocent party and had no intention to "cop" Marcella, and then Marcella kissed the right man, right there in the station, with a score of people watching her.

The couple decided to take the 8:22 train back to Joplin and be married there. They hurried to a telephone, made an appointment with a minister there and left.

GETS BACK HIS SIGHT.

Blinded by a Fall, a Man Is Recovering After Eight Years.

Philadelphia.—Unable to see for eight years, Edward Claycomb, a painter, of Altoona, Pa., is recovering his sight by degrees.

In 1908 he fell from a house he was painting, and in addition to his other injuries he detached the retinas of both eyes. He became blind. Specialists of a dozen cities were consulted, and they all told him his case was hopeless.

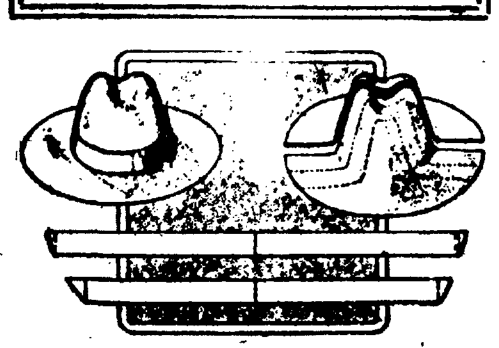
For the last several weeks his sight has been returning, and now he can see and read large letters and distinguish between colors. Physicians are puzzled. Claycomb is hopeful that his sight will become normal.

Sells Hidden Money With Potatoes.

Manton, Cal.—W. A. Cleland placed $320 in $20 gold pieces in a potato bin for safe keeping. Forgetting about the money, he sold some potatoes. Later a search for the coin proved unsuccessful. Cleland now thinks banks are a safer proposition than potato bins.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Lamp Wicks Cheaply Made From Old Felt Hats.



Lamp wicks may be made cheaply at home from an old soft felt hat, writes a correspondent of Popular Mechanics. The hat should first be brushed clean and the brim flattened by ironing it. The greatest number of wicks may be obtained if the hat is cut into halves with a pair of scissors and then cut into strips of the required size, as shown in the sketch. Soak the strips in vinegar for two hours, dry them out of doors if convenient and they are ready for use.

Casserole of Chicken and Rice.

Line a slightly greased mold with steamed rice. Fill the center with two cupfuls of cold, finely chopped chicken that has been warmed, drained from its liquor and highly seasoned with salt, pepper, cayenne, celery salt, onion juice and one-half teaspoonful of finely chopped parsley. Add one-fourth cupful of cracker crumbs and an egg slightly beaten and moisten the mixture with hot chicken stock or hot water. Cover the meat with rice and tie buttered paper firmly over the mold. Steam the meat for forty-five minutes. To serve it turn it on to a platter and surround it with tomato, white or creole sauce or chicken gravy. Veal or mutton may be used for this dish in place of chicken.

Jellied Salmon Salad.

Take one pint of canned salmon, drain and remove skin and bones, mince fine, add tablespoonful of lemon juice, dash of pepper, teaspoonful of minced parsley and salt to taste. Mix together and bind with any desired salad dressing and one tablespoonful powdered gelatin dissolved in one-fourth cupful of water. Fill small molds and set on ice to chill. Turn out on crisp lettuce leaves. Garnish with olives and serve with mayonnaise.

Dumplings With Meat.

To each cupful of flour add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a pinch of salt and just enough water to make a mixture very hard to stir with a spoon. Butter steamer and place over a kettle of boiling water. Drop tablespoonfuls of the mixture on a plate and steam twenty minutes without taking off the cover. Take out and put into meat gravy and let stand a minute or two. To be eaten immediately. These are never heavy.

Stuffed Potatoes.

Choose medium sized potatoes, one for each person; wash clean and bake. Take from oven and with a sharp knife cut off one end. Remove inside with a spoon, being careful not to break the baked shell. Mash with a potato masher, add salt, butter and pepper to taste. Cream with a potato whip till smooth. Refill the potato shells but do not put the top on, set on end in a pan, return to the oven and bake till browned.

Potatoes and Eggs.

Pare one-half dozen large sized potatoes and slice them fine. Put one tablespoonful of lard in a frying pan and put the potatoes in. Brown nicely and add one-half tablespoonful of salt. When done, beat four eggs hard and add one and one-half cupfuls of rich milk and one-half teaspoonful of salt and a very little pepper. Pour this mixture over the potatoes and put in the oven to bake until nicely brown.

Raisin Pie.

Take one pound of raisins (washed and seeded), turn over them one quart of boiling water and boil until tender. Keep adding water so there will be a quart when done. Grate the rind of one lemon into a cupful of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of flour and one egg. Mix well together, turn the raisins over the mixture, stirring all the while. This makes three pies. Bake in double crusts as other pies.

Raisin Muffins.

Sift together two cupfuls of flour, two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and two tablespoonfuls of sugar; add two tablespoonfuls of soft butter, one well beaten egg, one cupful of sweet milk and one cupful of seeded raisins. Pour into buttered muffin rings or gem pans and bake in a hot oven for twenty-five minutes.

Chocolate Cups.

Make a plain custard, using one quart of milk, three eggs, six tablespoonfuls of sugar and a pinch of salt. Flavor with a square of chocolate scraped and melted and bake in custard cups. Chill thoroughly and just before serving scoop a spoonful from the center, replacing with whipped cream.

Mint Sauce.

Nothing is more delicious to serve with lamb or mutton than mint sauce. This is made of two tablespoonfuls of very finely chopped young mint, one tablespoonful of pounded and sifted loaf sugar and six tablespoonfuls of vinegar. This mixture should be stirred until the sugar is dissolved.

MONEY IN WOODEN LEG.

Body to Be Exhumed In Search For Woman's Wealth.

St. Louis, Mo.—Charles Kroener of Detroit will have the body of Miss Elizabeth Hauck exhumed at Alton to look for money which he thinks she may have concealed in her wooden leg. When she died, Sept. 15, $700 was found in her clothing. Kroener, who was her guardian, thinks she must have had more money than that.

Kroener also doubts whether the finding of the coroner's jury that she killed herself is correct. He is making an investigation and will place evidence in the hands of the state attorney and ask him to take action.

Miss Hauck was thirty-five years old. She was formerly in the millinery business in St. Louis, at California avenue and Arsenal street. She set herself up in business with part of the $3,000 she received from a railroad company for the loss of her leg twenty years ago. On account of failing health she stored her millinery stock and went to Alton.

SHE FAINTS AT WAR NEWS.

Later Seized With Convulsions After Reading Newspaper Headlines.

New York.—A well dressed woman gazed fixedly at headlines of newspapers on a stand at Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue for a few moments and then fainted. Later she was seized with convulsions.

The hundreds attracted by her screams and struggles with two policemen heard her say she had lost two brothers in the war. Dr. Loughlin of St. Vincent's hospital diagnosed the case as acute dementia, probably caused by her bereavement, suddenly recalled by what she had read in the headlines.

At Bellevue hospital the woman said she was Mollie Fogarty, but gave no address. She is about thirty-five years old.

Three Brothers Lose Eye Apiece.

Albert Lea, Minn.—The right eye of Hugo Brenner, a young farmer, was torn from its socket the other day while he was cutting down a tree. This is the third accident of its kind in the Brenner family. While his brother William was playing mumble-the-peg recently his companion flipped the knife too high, and the sharp blade penetrated the left eye. Another brother was kicked in the right eye by a colt.

STORY OF A SEANCE.

In Which the Medium Predicted a Royal Assassination.

Eleanor Calhoun was an American actress who went to London when James Russell Lowell was United States minister. In 1903 she became by marriage the Balkan Princess Lazarovich Hrebelianovich. Recently she wrote a book which bears the title "Pleasures and Palaces."

The book contains the strange story of a spiritualistic seance held by an Englishwoman, which was attended by W. T. Stead, who afterward went down on the Titanic; the princess and her husband and some others. The prince handed to the medium some sealed envelopes. She selected one, sat for a moment pressing it in her hand, and said, "This is from a person of importance—a king."

Mr. Stead then asked her to describe him. She gave a very good description of King Alexander of Servia, though she could not tell his name or his country. Suddenly she leaped up, her eyes tight shut, her face white, and, speaking as though she were in the midst of a real scene, she described the assassination of the king and queen. Mr. Stead asked what soldiers they were and of what race, and she answered: "I don't know. I never saw such people. Their uniforms resemble the Russians, but they are not Russians." Then she uttered exclamations of horror and said, "Oh, Mr. Stead, let me not go on!"

Mr. Stead, says the writer, urged the seer, and she proceeded to describe the tragedy. This seance was held in March, 1903, and the murders did not occur until the following June.

Rodin and His Models.

It is one of the peculiarities of M. Rodin, the famous sculptor, that he never poses a model. When a model enters his studio he engages her in conversation upon a subject foreign to art and thus encourages her to forget herself. Meanwhile his attention appears to be engrossed elsewhere, but he is watching her keenly. When the model unconsciously assumes a pose or an expression which he believes would be effective he bids her hold that position, while he sets to work. By this method he believes he avoids stilted and studied poses.

Collars Make Blouses.

Do you know how to "trim up" the plain blouse and make it become your individual style? Get a collar in white chiffon or sheerest organdie which in turning back covers the nape and the sides of the neck, runs flatly across the shoulders and straight down over the bust, forming a slender "V" opening below the throat. This collar is bordered with pin tucked self material, straight on its outer edge and widely scalloped along the fine, embroidery outlined inner edge. Another blouse dominating collar has a tapering, narrow turnover coming high against all save the front of the neck and widened by an extremely broad frilling of the plaited material a-jour hemmed. In crepe de chine this second collar is extremely practical as well as dainty.

Toddler's Apron.

A charming little work or play apron is made of soft pink linen with a yoke, sleeve bands and hem of white. The little apron buttons at the back of the yoke and is cut with flaring lines, so that it spreads wide at the hem. There is a cross stitched design of Little Bo-peep and a couple of her wee lambs. The same apron could be made in blue and white, with any other Mother Goose character or animal or flower in the cross stitch.

All skill ought to be exerted for universal good.—Johnson.

An Utter Lack of Faith

It is surprising to know how many people there are, particularly women, who are utterly miserable in body and mind only because they have not enough confidence in Chamberlain's Tablets to give them a trial. Mrs. Sarah Hughes, Booneville, N. Y., was troubled with indigestion and constipation. She had bilious spells and would feel most miserable at times. She says, "Chamberlain's Tablets helped me from the first, and since using two bottles of them I have been in theb est of health."

PROTEIN FOOD VALUES.

PLEASE remember that increasing muscular activity does not mean that more protein is required, but more of the energy producing foods, as the regular amount of protein will take care of the growth of the muscle. Late experiments have shown that some proteins will support growth, others simply maintain life and still others will neither permit of growth nor maintain the bodily weight; hence the necessity of using a variety of protein foods.

If more protein food is eaten than is required there is an increased protein elimination without any beneficial and possibly with harmful effects.

Protein is found in animal foods and their products, in cereals, nuts, peas, beans and lentils and to a slight extent in other vegetables. By animal foods are meant beef, veal, mutton, pork, lamb, poultry and fish. By animal products are meant milk, cheese and eggs.

Here are the portions of some common foods which contain the same amount of protein as one pint of milk:

Walnuts 21	Lentils ......1-3 cup
Potatoes..6 medium	Beans ....¾ cup
Apples 32 or ¼ bush.	Rice ....1 cup
Beef (round) 1-5 lb.	Peanuts ....1¼ cups

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Keen Eyed Seagulls.

The remarkably keen sight of the seagull was put to an interesting test not long ago by a well known American naturalist, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. A score of gulls were following in the wake of a steamer making twenty miles an hour. The birds kept up with the boat without making any apparent effort to do so. The naturalist referred to and a friend were watching the graceful movements of the birds.

Breaking a cracker biscuit into four parts, less than an inch square each, the naturalist handed one piece to his friend and told him to drop it into the seething waters on the starboard.

Immediately the biscuit became invisible to human eyes, and yet before it had gone thirty yards astern a gull detected it and, dipping into the foam, secured it. One by one it picked up the other bits of biscuit, though neither of the two men could see them. Tearing off a postage stamp from an old envelope, the naturalist dropped it overboard. The gull detected the waif and made as if to pick it up. But when within a yard or two of it the bird saw that it was nothing in his line and glided upward again to his favorite station on a line with the topmost truck.

Siberian Snowflower.

One of the greatest curiosities of nature is the Siberian snowflower—a flower of a day. It was discovered by Count Authoskoff in the bleak marshes of the tundra, where the ground is continually covered with frost. The wonderful object shoots forth from the frozen soil only on the first day of each succeeding year. It shines but for a single day, then resolves to its original elements. The leaves are three in number and each about three inches in diameter. They are developed only on that side of the stem toward the north, and each seems covered with microscopic crystals of snow.

The flower when it opens is star shaped, its petals of the same length as the leaves and about half an inch in width. On the third day the extremities of the anthers, which are five in number, show minute glistening specks, which are the seeds of the wonderful flower. Authoskoff collected some of these seeds and carried them with him to Petrograd. They were then placed in a pot of snow, where they remained for some time. On the 1st of the following January the miraculous snowflower burst through its icy covering and displayed its beauties to the wondering Russian royalty.—American Agriculturist.

GOD NEVER MAKES ANY MISTAKES; WE MAKE THEM

Evangelist Peacock preached last night from Hebrews 9:27, the sermon in part was as follows

And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment.

One part of this text no one would dare to deny. The reason no one would dare to deny it is because it is true. It is true because it is found in the word of God. It would be true if we did not have a Bible. It would be true if we did not have a church. It would be true if we did not have a preacher. Some one might say "I do not believe in the Bible?" Another might say: "I do not believe in Hell or in Heaven, or in anything or any body." I do not care what you believe, I do not care how you fell or what you may think. You are compelled to believe the first part of this text. "It is appointed unto men once to die." Only two people have lived in this world who have not been called upon to die. Once was Enoch the other was Elijah. The Bible says: Enoch walked with God and was not, for God took him. Elijah, the old prophet of God, who stood upon Mt. Carmel and alone defeated the 450 prophets of Baal, and revealed to the world that God reigns and rules in Heaven and over the inhabitants of the earth, was taken up into Heaven in a whirlwind in a chariot of fire, there to enjoy the blessings of God forever. These are the only men who have crossed the line between time and eternity without being called upon to pass through the valley and shadow of Death. All the Apostles of Christ were compelled to die. All the people who have lived from the beginning of time down to the present time, and those who will live in the future, will be compelled to face death, until Jesus bursts upon this world in all His glory to gather His loved one home. Every funeral procession reveals to you the truthfulness of the statement that all of us will be compelled to die. Probably the experience you have had in your own home with death reveals to you that sometime or other you will be compelled to face this enemy we call death. Probably the experience your neighbors have had with death, reveals to you that some time or other you will be called upon to go the way of all the earth. You are compelled to believe the first part of this text. If the first part is true, then he second part must also be true. It is all God's word. If God lied about one part, He must have lied about the other. We know that God did not lie about the first part. Then it is natural enough to say that He did not lie about the second. God never makes mistakes. We make mistakes. We fail, we do a great many things we should not do, we say a great many things we should not say, but God never makes any mistakes in any way.

Are You Prepared?

If I could prove beyond a doubt that you would never see the light of another day, would you make any preparation to meet God? If God should call you from time into eternity, are you prepared to Go? Have you any bad debts? Is there anything in your life you haven't made right? I think the last sermon ever preached by Sam Jones was along this line. He told what he would do if he positively knew it was his last night upon earth. He said: "I would preach this sermon, give the invitation, welcome those who are willing to accept Christ as their Saviour, arrange all my affairs and be ready to meet Jesus when He would come." He preached the sermon, gave the invitation, left the meeting, stepped on board a train, retired for the night, told the porter to call him at a certain time, and when the porter went to arouse Sam Jones, he was dead. But he was not afraid to die. He had made every necessary preparation, and was not only ready to die, but he was ready for the judgment. Are you prepared to die, and are you prepared for the judgment? This is a personal matter. Every one of us shall give an account of himself to God. Some men seem to imagine they can get into heaven on their wife's religion. Some young folks seem to think God will save them because they have had Godly parents, but one thing we should remember and that is this, that all of us will be called upon personally to answer to God. Your wife cannot answer for you, your children cannot answer for you, your parents cannot answer for you, you must answer for yourself. This text should make us stop and think. Some people need to think along spiritual lines. All some of you people have ever thought about is pleasing yourself. You simply live to gratify the passions of the fish. Some live for business, some for pleasure. They shut God out of everything. They trample God' laws under their feet, they make sport of religion, they curse the ministers, they defy God and man, and become a law unto themselves. God pity such people. They need to stop and consider this thought: After death the judgment. I heard Mr. Sunday tell about a man by the name of Mr. Zackey who was a sheriff in a southern state, and who was dying. No one could talk to him about God. He despised ministers, and refused to permit any of them to talk to him about spiritual things. One day a young man whose home was in the south but who had been preaching in the north, came home to spend his vacation, and was informed by friends that Mr. Zackey was in a serious condition. This young man was a great friend of the old sheriff and the old sheriff was a great friend of his. The young minister went in to visit with his old friend. After talking with him for a time he asked him if he was prepared to die. The old man, raising up on his pillow, said: "I have walked into the cannon mouth in 46 different battles. I have faced this enemy you call death in every shape and form, and I want you to distinctly understand that I am not afraid to die." The old man sank back on his pillow exhausted. The minister said: "Probably you have faced death in every shape and form and you are not afraid to die, but what about the judgment?" The old man looked up into his face and said: "The judgment? The judgment? I hadn't thought about that. I guess I am not prepared. If the Bible is true, I am lost." This old man had not been honest with God and had not been honest with himself. And this is the case with multitudes of people. I do not mean they would steal or commit murder, but they are not honest with themselves in a spirital way. And when a man is not honest with himself, we cannot expect him to be honest with God.

If I were you I would take a stand for Christ, identify myself with the church, put on the armor of God, and make one less hypocrite. God has your record and you cannot get away from it. You may sneer at others, you may make sport of religion, you may live an impure life, you may do just as you please, but remember—for all these things God will call you to an account. What will some of you folks tell God on the great day of Judgment? You will not have a chance to tell Him anything. God has your record. Don't flatter yourself. You will meet your sin. Go on with your dishonesty. Go on with your profanity. Go on with your impurity, go on with your drunkenness, go on with your sneering at God and at Christianity, but remember—after death comes the judgment. God has done everything in His power to save you. Jsus has done everything He can. The Holy Spirit is knocking at the door of the heart asking for admittance. What are you going to do? Have you accept the invitation. If God should call you are you prepared to go? Be honest, be sincere, face the matter squarely, prepare to meet thy God. The best time is now. No one ever loses anything in following Jesus.

"Fulton First, Last and All the Time"

Educators are awakening to the fact that there is little use in drilling the school child in the three R's unless a fourth R. is added—an R that stands for Right-living.

It is self-evident that the mental development of the child cannot be secured through education unless it has sufficient physical vigor to perform the acts required by the educative process. A rather exacting process in this present day.

Nature is concerned first of all in maintaining life, and demands that the energy of the child be directed primarily to that end. The normal child is endowed with more energy of vigor than is required for nutrition and growth.

This "factor of safety" may be regarded as the margin to be utilized by the school for intellectual development.

The margin of physical vigor in excess of bodily needs is the capital which the child has to invest in education.

It is the first business of the school to see that this capital is as large as possible.

The school therefore, should give primary attention to the health of the children, not only for the sake of health itself, but also to the end that education may be more effective.

America's foremost pulpit orator, Henry Ward Beecher, years ago spoke thus of the sin of gossip and scandal: "When I think of the way in which people talk of each other, and even Christian people, there is nothing that seems to me more horrible. There may be an innocent conversation, badinage, or somthing of that kind; but I mean the low, the worse than unkind way in which we are actustomed to look at others, and pick flaws in their character, and criticise their disposition, judging them in the lowest possible court of the mind. To indulge habitually in stinging and ungenerous remarks of each other must result in lowering the Christian tone of your own minds and in degrading your own thoughts."

It would not be a bad idea if some FULTONIANS would take this at heart. There are a few individuals here who seemingly live on the kind of stuff Beecher calls attention to.

Knights Templars Numbered Among the 50 Trail Hitters

Members of Hiram Lodge, F. and A. M., and members of Fulton and Oswego Commanderies, Knights Templar, met at the Masonic temple last night, and marched in a body to the tabernacle where they attended the evangelistic services. There were about 200 men in line, all wearing Masonic insignia, and several of the Knights Templar were in full dress uniforms.

The attendance last night totaled 1,900, and fifty persons hit the trail. The entire delegation of Knights Templars were the first to accept the evangelist's invitation to come to the front, and they were followed by several from the audience. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Peacock lauded the work of the Masonic Order, and urged all its members to live God-fearing lives.

One of the features of the evening was the solo, by Chorister Warth, "The Ninety and Nine." The singer's beautiful rendition of the old hymn profoundly moved many of those present.

This afternoon, after school, Miss Speer will meet the pupils of the Seventh and Eighth grades of the schools at the tabernacle, and a short prayer service will be held. At 9:30 o'clock this morning a prayer service was held at the First Baptist Church.

Pupils of the High School will go to the tabernacle tonight in a body, and seats will also be reserved for a delegation from the Chocolate Works and Nestle Food Co., plant.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, Mr. Warth will conduct his Bible study class at the tabernacle, and a song service will follow. Tomorrow night has been designated as "Business Men's and Boys' Night." The O. U. A. M. and the Daughters of Liberty will also attend the services.

The business men will meet at the New York Central station at 7:20, o'clock and march to the tabernacle. The boys and young men between the ages of 12 and 24 years will meet at the Baptist Church, at six o'clock, where they will be guests at a luncheon. The O. U. A. M. will meet at their lodge rooms, as will the Daughters of Liberty.

Saturday night, Mr. Peacock will preach on "The Incarnation of Christ." The Sunday afternoon service, which will be for men only, will be on the topic, "A Manly Man." The cottage prayer meetings will be continued Tuesdays and Fridays, as usual, after this week, it was announced.

Ye Must Be Born Again John 3:7

Last night Evangelist Peacock took his text from John 3:7, "Ye Must Be Born Again." The sermon in part follows:

This passage of scripture is mysterious to a great many people. Very few people understand the new birth. They think of the new birth as they think of the Holy Spirit, something to be talked about by the ministers, but not to be experienced by the rank and file of church members. There is a vast difference between talking about the new birth and experiencing the new birth, and there is a vast difference between talking about the Holy Spirit and experiencing the Baptism of the Holy Spirit.

I might, after much study, and reading, be able to give you an intellectual discourse on the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but if I have not experienced the baptism of the Holy Spirit in my own life, my discourse would not create within you a desire to experience the baptism of the Holy Spirit for yourself. I might be able after much study to talk on the new birth. But if I have not experienced the new birth in my own life and in my own soul, my talk would not influence you to experience the new birth in your heart and soul.

Nicodemus was much puzzled when Jesus revealed to him that, it was necessary for a man to be born again before he could enter the Kingdom of God. He was anxious to know what to do in order to be saved. Jesus said: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." Nicodemus had never had a spiritual experience and was unable to understand the new birth. He said: "How can a man be born again when he is old?"

Actions Louder Than Words.

Jesus said: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but cans't not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the spirit." In other words it is a difficult task to tell how the Spirit of God works upon a man's heart and changes his entire life. But we know the Spirit of God does change men and women.

Jesus says it is just like the wind blowing. You know the wind is blowing, you cannot see the wind; you cannot tell where that wind has come from, you cannot tell where it is going, but you know the wind is blowing. You might not be able to tell others how God's Spirit worked upon you so as to make of you a new creature, yet you know from your own experience that you have been born again into the Kingdom of God.

A man might experience the new

Colonel Sibley did not state where nor when the fight occurred, except that it followed the rescue of Deemer and Payne. Stevenson Denies Ownership of West Broadway Gas Tank

John W. Stevenson this morning indignantly and vehmently denied the story which appeared in the Fulton Evening Times last night, under the caption, "Stevenson Would Stifle Competition." The story contained expressions and facts in regard to the protest manifested in the Board of Public Works against the issuance of a permit to Edward Van Amburg, of West 1st street to instal a curb gasoline tank in front of his store. This paper printed statements from responsible business men in that vicinity who averred that Mr. Stevenson was objecting to the Van Amburg project because he held an interest or was owner of another gasoline tank, situated just around the corner from the Van Amburg store. The story stated that this tank had been installed by men in the employ of Mr. Stevenson and had been shipped to him, transported from the railroad on wagons of the American Woolen Co. The story inferred that Mr. Stevenson's objections to the granting of a permit to Mr. Van Amburg were occasioned by the fact that he did not want competition in he sale of gasoline, either because he owned the tank now operating or because of friendship to the man who is operating the tank.

The Evening Times was in error, according to Mr. Stevenson, and was the innocent victim of false stories promulgated by business men in that section. Mr. Stevenson denied vehemently this morning that he ever owned a tank in the West Side, and while he admitted that men employed by the mill installed the tank, he said they did the work on their own time, and were paid for it by the present operator of the tank. He admitted that he was the only objector to the Van Amburg permit, but said his objections were occasioned because of the fire risk caused by the location of the proposed tank, just across the street from one of the mill buildings, about 150 feet away. He said this was absolutely the only reason he intended to object to the graning of a permit to Mr. Van Amburg.

FARIS IS STILL VERY HOPEFUL

Saloum Faris, the Syrian-American who asked the assistance of Mayor Lewis and the City Council in securing the return of his eight-year old daughter and his aged mother from Syria, to this country, is collecting signatures to petitions which will be presented to Congressman Mott and Senator O'Gorman, asking them to take action in the matter.

The little girl left this country with her mother for a visit with her grandparents in Syria three years ago. Since that time her mother has died, and now the father wishes her to come home to him. He is willing and able to pay all expenses of passage. The petition to Mr. Mott will be presented some time this week, and Mr. Faris has already secured the signature of the Mayor, members of the Common Council, and several prominent men.

CHAMBER'S OFFICIALS ATTENDED BIG DINNER

The principal speaker of the evening was Honorable F. A. Pezet, Peruvian Ambassador to the United States, who spoke on "Our Foreign Trade Opportunity." His speech was pronounced a masterpiece of instructive oratorical effort by all those present.

CLAIMS COURT BILLS VETOED

Governor Whitman has vetoed a bill introduced by Assemblyman MacHold of Jefferson County, which sought to give the Court of Claims of the State jurisdiction in the claims for damages of several local people who advanced materials and performed work for the McDermott Construction Co., bankrupt, during the construction of the Barge Canal in this city some years ago.

Several Fulton business houses sold materials to the McDermott company, and when the company went into bankruptcy they were unable to collect for the goods. The firm of George Johnston, alone, it is said, had bills against the company in the neighborhood of $4,000, for hardware and other working materials. Several of the employes of the company were unpaid, and all entered claims against the state for damages.

In refusing the allow the Court of Claims to consider the various suits, the Governor recommends that the law should be changed if there is not sufficient lattitude under it to permit persons to file claims in the ordinary manner.

HAND WORK vs. HEADWORK

It is surely one cause for regret that the city continues to lag in the matter of vocational education. Especially is this true in view of all that has been said by men and women who keep themselves posted upon the subject, and who have heard and seen what is going on in the world outside of Fulton.

This newspaper prefers to believe, however, that vocational education in the city's schools is simply a matter deferred until such time as facilities are afforded for conducting such a department in a new and modern high school building.

In the meantime the schools of the city must continue to recruit the great armies of brain workers that are sent out each year, and this, too, in spite of changed conditions all over the country. It used to be assumed that brain work was worth a good deal more than hand work. Good brain workers have been scarce in the past, and commanded high pay. In the earlier stages of history, physical strength and manual skill have usually been abundant and not well paid.

Today manual skill is commanding more money than it did, while brain workers find it difficult to secure corresponding advances. One fundamental error has been in assuming that no brains are required for good hand work. The skilled workman knows better. It takes much mental ability to run a machine and handle inert matter efficiently and get the largest production and the most useful product.

Mental capacity in executive and organizing directions is scarce and commands higher pay than ever. The man who can direct a force of work people so as to produce the largest and best results, gets more money than ever before.

But more common mental gifts are not very well paid. School teachers, ministers, newspaper workers, accountants, have not secured as many salary advances as railroad men, plumbers carpenters, or bricklayers. Wages of $5 and $6 or more a day are being earned in many factories affected by the war munition business. While this is exceptional the skilled machinist earns more today than the average teacher. Factory and railroad and building work are laborious physical tasks and take something out of a man that has to be paid for.

Modern civilization seems to train too many brain workers who fall short of the higher gifts. There are too many doctors and lawyers and bookkeepers who should be farmers, plumbers, locomotive engineers and tool makers.

THIS MAN OF MANY PREACHERS

If all preachers were like Mercer Johnston there wouldn't be any worry about small congregations.

Trinity parish in Newark is well-to-do and highly respectable and comfortably lazy. The Rev. Mercer Johnston is anything but lazy.

Parson Johnston is a mental and spiritual pentathelete, a speed-burner on the cinder track of practical religion. He found Trinity parish suffering from chronic fatty degeneration of its spiritual legs. So he prodded that parish with the sharp goad of his zealous eloquence.

[illegible] Jesus Christ was meant for everyday use in business, society and politics, and that a man who did not live his religion every day in all his relations to other men was an imitation Christian, and a skimpy imitation at that.

The vestry of Trinity parish and several other able contributors objected to Mercer Johnston's preaching and practice, and Mercer Johnston then preached his congregation a sermon good enough to run on the first page of any newspaper. His ultimatum was that he would preach practical religion as Jesus Christ preached it, without strings on him, in Trinity parish, or go somewhere else. And he went.

Mercer Johnston will find a pulpit fast enough. Lots of people want to hear a man preach. They would go to church every Sunday if there was a Mercer Johnston in their neighborhood.—N. Y. American.

THE IRISH FOLLY.

In describing the course the British government has adopted toward the Irish rebels as stupid, G. B. Shaw has pronounced the just and permanent word. But does even Shaw perceive yet how stupid, how fatally stupid, this policy has actually been? Do Englishmen yet understand with what amezement and disappointment Americans, whose sympathies from the outbreak of the war have been pro-Ally, are looking upon the revival in Dublin of the policy which when it was practised in Italy in the middle of the 19th century, stirred the heart of England, as it did the sympathy of the liberal fraction of the world?

There is nothing to be said on the legal side for the Irish rebels. But what more could be said for those associates of Mazzini, who dreamed of a free Italy, whose lives were a voluntary and a beautiful sacrifice—happily not vain—for an ideal, for the ideal of a united and independent Italy? The Sin Fein leaders were not less dreamers, not less men of vain illusions, than those who perished at Austrian hands.

But the true folly of the British course lies elsewhere. When this great war began Mr. Asquith told the world that Britain had drawn her sword on behalf of the little peoples, on behalf of the Serbians, on behalf of the Belgians. American support or the Allied cause, American sympathy which was very real and very widespread, was not predicated on affection for Great Britain or ancient love for France primarily it rests on the belief that the cause of these nations was just, was right.

Now, with all the differences that men can point out, there is one point of resemblance between the case of the Irish rebels and the Belgians, who have resisted and are resisting German tyranny. Both are loyal to an ideal of a free country, to the ideal of a people, of a race, and for this ideal the Irish rebels, like the Belgian soldiers, fought.

You cannot liberate the Belgians with one hand and subjugate the Irish with the other. You cannot enlist the sympathy of liberty-loving mankind for the human beings who are the victims of German tyranny and German firing squads and at the same moment send other men before your own firing squads because they have dreamed and striven for liberty.

Why could not the British have perceived that what they had done in South Africa a few months ago must be done again in Ireland? Why could they not perceive that the whole civilized world would look upon the British treatment of the Irish question as a test of the sincerity of the British declaration that Britain was fighting Germany on behalf of the little peoples, on behalf of liberty?.

Instead we have these executions. They are legal. They have small resemblance in detail to the German atrocity; they are orderly, regular processes. But they do to death men who, whatever their mistakes, their folly, their insanity, were moved by the same impulse that has moved men in every generation, which stirs the souls of all who love liberty the world over.—The New York Tribune.

SCIENCE—INDUSTRY.

Artesian Wells Made to Pump.

The field men of the United States geological survey in their investigations of the ground water resources of the Virginia coastal plain have observed that the flows from many artesian wells in that region are utilized to drive hydraulic rams for the purpose of lifting the water to higher levels. Along the lower courses of the Potomac and Rappahannock and along the shores of the many inlets that run back from Chesapeake bay above the James there are hundreds of artesian wells that supply a perennial flow of beautifully clear water, which is, as a rule, excellently adapted to all domestic uses and is largely utilized by the canning factories and other industrial establishments that abound in that part of the country. Though the pressure of the water from the wells is ample at the shore level, the head diminishes so quickly with increase in elevation that no flow can be obtained along the higher banks above the shores where the water is most needed. One method of obtaining it at these higher levels is to use the force developed by the artesian flow to operate hydraulic rams, which in turn raise the water to the heights desired along the bluffs above the river and inlets. Thus it may be said that the artesian wells pump themselves.

Cascara Bark Industry.

Thirty-six thousand pounds of cascara bark were cut on the Siuslaw national forest, in Oregon, during the latter half of last year, according to the government's foresters. A steady demand for this bark for medicinal purposes both in the United States and in Europe is reported to exist. Before the war most of the exported product went to England and Germany. The cascara bark industry began, it is asserted, in California about 1865, and for many years California led in the production of bark, exporting as much as 50,000 pounds in a single year. Now western Oregon and, to a lesser degree, western Washington are the chief sources of supply. The forest experts say that the destructive methods usually practiced in obtaining the bark have resulted in almost exterminating the cascara tree on privately owned land, leaving the national forests as the last source of supply.

Electric Furnace Best.

An electric furnace for the heat treatment of steel used in automobile construction has been introduced. Its method of producing uniform, dependable heat that is so urgently sought by automobile manufacturers is quite novel in electric furnace practice, although its principle is comparable to that of the well known Nernst lamp. Both the floor and the domelike covers of this furnace are of a refractory material which is practically nonconducting at ordinary temperatures. To start the furnace a current is passed through a bed of coke laid on its floor. On being sufficiently heated the floor becomes a conductor and in turn heats the walls and top, rendering them conductive, until finally the entire furnace becomes incandescent. It is stated by those who have tried the furnace that its use in the heat treatment of automobile parts promises to be extensive in the future.

Where the Mississippi Runs West.

One of the most recent additions to the great topographic atlas of the United States which the United States geological survey is constructing is the map of the area known as the Edgington quadrangle, lying west of Rock Island, in Iowa and Illinois. This area, which covers about 230 square miles, is nearly bisected by the Mississippi river and taken by itself presents the Father of Waters in a somewhat strange position, for the river flows almost due west across the area. The map shows Iowa on the north side of the river and Illinois on the south. Immediately west of this area, near Muscatine, the stream resumes its southward flow.

To Limit Lead Content in Paint.

The enactment of a law prohibiting the importation, sale or use of any paint material containing more than 5 per cent of its dry weight of a soluble lead compound is the principal recommendation of the British departmental committee appointed to investigate the danger of the use of paints containing lead to the health of persons engaged in painting buildings. This information is contained in a department of commerce report.

This held him for a minute or two and then he made another overture.

CITES U. S. GROWTH

Uncle Joe Cannon Tells of Some Changes in Forty-four Years.

SHOWS AGE IS NO HANDICAP.

Says Uncle Sam Is Two and One-half Times Bigger Than When He Broke Into Congress—Has Retained Subtleness Despite His Eighty Years.

Washington.—Reclining on the sofa in his office just off the chamber of the house of representatives, his well known cigar at the proper angle in his mouth, Uncle Joe Cannon, who recently celebrated his eightieth birthday, told a correspondent on that occasion of some of the changes which have occurred in the United States during the forty-four years he has been in public life, forty of which have been spent in congress.

Taking his cigar out of his mouth, Uncle Joe squinted at the end of it a moment, and then, replacing it most carefully at its accustomed angle, he said:

"I suppose you want to know something about the changes which have taken place since I first entered congress back in 1873. Why, my boy, the changes have been like those of an infant growing into a stalwart man or a sapling into a tree.

"Uncle Sam is two and a half times as big as he was when I broke into congress. I mean by that in physical stature as measured by population. In other ways the country has multiplied four, five and even ten times.

"We had thirty-seven states and less than 40,000,000 population when I came to congress. We now have forty-eight states and 100,000,000 population at home, with ten or fifteen millions more in Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippines. Our total wealth then was given at $24,000,000,000, gold basis, or $30,000,000,000 currency, but now it is $187,000,000,000, without any distinction as to the unit of measure.

"This enormous wealth is not in Wall street or within a thousand miles of it. It is not gathered into banks or trust companies, but is scattered over the broad land—the prairies, the plains and the mountains as well as in the factories and commercial centers. In fact, there is more of this wealth west of the Mississippi river than in New York and New England combined. So you can see that Uncle Sam has grown, and it has been something of a job for congress to keep up with the development of the country."

"What do you think has been congress' most farreaching act during this period?"

"I would hardly call it an act. I would call it a discovery," replied Uncle Joe. "It was the discovery of the general welfare clause of the constitution. We used to have long constitutional arguments against any kind of internal improvements by the federal government, but now we just read the general welfare clause of that old document and appropriate money for any scheme that may be proposed.

"This change of sentiment is pretty general, but it is marked in the delegations from the south."

The correspondent met with this answer when he mentioned legislation: "I am not going to discuss politics."

Getting up from the couch, he stretched his arms, and then, just to show he is eighty years young, Uncle Joe kicked as high as his chin.

"Can you do that, young man?" he asked. And then in reply he said:

"No, and there aren't ten other men in the house who can."

The correspondent expressed the belief that when a person reached the fourscore milestone it was time to take it easy, and Uncle Joe replied:

"Well, I do take it easy. I'm entitled to it, am I not? I have things just about as fine as any man could wish. I have lots of friends, no enemies that I know of, and lots of hope and ambition."

Although he has been mixed up in every great political fight since the election of Lincoln in 1860, Uncle Joe declined to discuss politics in the concrete.

"It would be hardly fitting," he said. "People insist I am a partisan. I am a Republican, but this isn't a time for me to talk party politics. My friends are in all of the parties."

SOME GOLF TERMS.

Taken From the Dictionary of a Disgruntled Player.

Bunker—A protuberance on the face of nature rising up out of the side of a sandy depression, designed to ruin the pleasure of golf, to test the patience of the player and to serve as an inspiration for philologists, amateur and professional, in the making of new and original contributions to the world's stores of profane speech.

Luck—The good play of your competitor and the bad play of yourself.

Driver—A contrivance consisting of a long, flexible shaft, at the end of which is affixed a wooden head of the thickness of that of a rural detective, designed to propel a golf ball into the nearest difficulty within reach at a single stroke, whereby the irritation of the player and the risibilities of the spectators may be materially enhanced.

Tee—An elevated bit of earth upon which golfers are expected to stand and make an exhibition of themselves for the delectation of passersby.

Ball—A small white object, sometimes spherical in shape, manufactured and sold in large quantities at a high price, for the purpose of being lost in long grass or on side bets at so much per hole, according to the sporting proclivities of the bettors.—Life.

ZULU ELEPHANTS ALL GONE.

Not One Left in the Land That Used to Be Their Paradise.

There is not a single elephant left in the whole of Zululand, a country that was once a veritable paradise for the ponderous animals. The last of them, once a mighty creature, was found dead some time ago on a farm on the banks of the Unfolozi river, where he had lived since the early part of the reign of the great Chief Cetewayo.

An immense herd once roamed the Dugugugu forest and along the Unfolozi, but it was diminished by incessant hunting until Cetewayo one day finally drove it away forever. The chief used to make medicine of certain portions of their bodies.

On the occasion referred to he organized a mighty drive in which two elephants were killed and many wounded. One of the latter turned and trampled one of his pursuers to a pulp. It was this animal, which was captured then, whose death marked the vanishing of the animals from the country. The remainder of the herd broke away, and thereafter none of them was seen again in Zululand.—New York Times.

Genuine Sardines.

Genuine sardines are the young of the pilchard. Their name comes from the fact that they are most numerous off the coast of Sardinia. They swim in the spring in shoals containing millions—fish shaped shoals ten miles long and a half mile wide. The sardines are netted and taken at once to the shore. There they are washed, scraped and sprinkled with salt. The salt is soon removed, the heads and gills cut off and there is another washing. Then, on beds of green brush, the fish are dried in the sun. Next they are boiled in olive oil till cooked thoroughly. The packers—women always—take them now and pack them in the tin boxes we all know, filling up each box with boiling oil, fitting on the lid and making the box air tight by soldering the joints together with a jet of hot steam.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

PLACE OF ARCHITECTS IN CITY PLANNING.

Needed in Development of Civic Ideals, Says William W. Emmart.

William W. Emmart, writing in the National Architect on "The Architect and the Community," says:

"All things seem to move in circles, yet the interval of recurrences may at times be so long that the movements are not readily seen. For centuries all social effort has been more or less pronouncedly individualistic, but today we are in a measure turning back to the principles of the times of the patriarchs. Under such conditions the government of the city must become something more than a restraining and protecting force, for cities are no longer sovereign states and do not wage war one against the other. Their functions are limited to conserving the health, morals and commercial interests of the people. City government is no longer military in spirit, but a centralized social force, and since the nation has also passed from the early constructive stages, when the lawmaker was the all important factor, so have we also come to the time when the lawyer should in great measure give way to the constructive expert.

"The architect, because of his artistic and technical training, has a greater measure of responsibility than the average citizen, and he should be a forceful factor in all movements for civic reform and advancement. That he has signally failed to recognize the obligation is too often evident. At a conference on city planning the architect is noticeable by his absence, and in most cities a public discussion of harbor improvements, railroad terminals and the like will bring out the fact that apparently the architect, with but few exceptions, has given little or no consideration to such projects. Even housing reform is passed by with much the same indifference.

"While all such matters may not be directly 'grist to the mill,' yet it is indisputable that the architect who does study such problems and takes part in their discussion is both broadening his outlook and ideals and emphasizing the importance of his profession in a way that must ultimately work to his betterment. There are still far too many people possessed of the fancy that the architect is a mere maker of pictures.

"The city needs the architect's help in the development of a right civic ideal just as much as it needs the help of the engineer, social worker or banker, and the architect must give this help even at the risk of being out of favor with the powers that be if he would secure for his profession the respect due it from his fellow citizens."

GIVING A TOWN WIDE RANGE.

Dirty Towns Are in Class With Individuals Who Don't Keep Clean.

A town or community that doesn't clean up in the spring and doesn't maintain a decent degree of cleanliness throughout the whole year is in the same class with those individuals who never clean up for Sunday and who themselves have never got on friendly terms with the cleansing power of water. Their personal appearance tells, if anything, a worse story. Everybody knows the wide range that he wants to give such people, while as far as they are concerned they are perfectly agreeable to themselves.

That's just it. Not even towns are always aware when they are disagreeable to other towns and are given the wide range by people who if they had been attracted by the town's cleanliness, healthfulness and otherwise good looks would have made desirable citizens. Towns, like people, are guilty of that weakness that makes other towns and other people's filth look more filthy than their own, that makes them tolerate their own filthy conditions, which would be nauseous to other people.

But there is one standard for a town and for individuals as well that personal relation or association cannot blind, that will stand the test whether viewed by visitors or people at home—that is, cleanliness. Clean streets and alleys, clean food shops, grocery stores and markets, clean restaurants and hotels, clean offices and public places, clean houses and back yards, clean milk and water, no breeding places for flies, no surface closets where flies are admitted—this is cleanliness which is healthfulness.—North Carolina State Board of Health.

Community Housekeeping Co-operation

Community co-operation in housekeeping is a profitable practice, in the opinion of Miss Frances L. Brown, director of home economics, division of extension, Kansas Agricultural college.

"The housekeepers of a community," says Miss Brown, "may combine as a club to buy a good vacuum cleaner, each family using it a certain time each month. The equipment of a simple laundry may be purchased. This laundry should be open to all members of the club at some time. The machine and wringer may be operated by water power, although this method is not always satisfactory. Equipment for a modern laundry is comparatively inexpensive if purchased by several families on shares. The price of power washers ranges from $25 to $125, the higher priced machine having motor attachment."

NEIGHBORHOOD CLUB OUTLINES ITS PLANS

List of Community Needs Will Be Studied by Members.

Glenside's Neighborhood club, a suburban organization recently organized in the vicinity of Philadelphia, plans departmental work covering every phase of community life, with divisional branches for literary work and music and current events, with the ultimate object of the erection of a clubhouse, a "neighborhood house," equipped with library, gymnasium and all the essentials. With nearly 200 residents of Glenside, many of whom are property owners and the major number of whom are representative of all the different businesses and professions, already interested, the initial activities will be prompt.

That the Neighborhood club plans to be an aid to the constituted government of the city's suburb is shown by the array of community topics, "all of which require the consideration of a united community."

Transportation facilities, good roads and clean streets, disposal of garbage and refuse, prevention of promiscuous throwing about of waste paper and circulars, legislation of local character, public health, pure food and home economics, tree planting, beautification of lawns and yards, care of vacant lots, protection of birds, ridding the community of mosquito and fly nuisances, clean entertainment for all and especially for children; celebration of all holidays, particularly the Fourth of July; use of school plants and good citizenship in general.

Specifically, the Glenside Neighborhood club will "get busy" immediately with community movements as applied to beautification of the lawns, the elimination of the mosquito, a fly swatting campaign and will take an active interest in all local legislation of the boards of commissioners in both Abington and Cheltenham townships, as the divisional lines of these run through Glenside. Not far distant, action is contemplated as applied to transportation facilities. One of the most important matters for consideration will be to have the different home and school associations act together in order that the best effect possible can be attained.

THE FLOWER CITY.

Rochester Committee Justifies by Popular Action the Lovely Synonym.

The Rochester chamber of commerce has a flower city committee whose purpose it is to further justify by popular action the synonym for Rochester—the Flower City. This demonstrates that the chamber of commerce is as much interested in the homes of Rochester as in its workshops. The method is described in the American City by Roland B. Woodward, secretary of the Rochester chamber of commerce.

First of all, members of the committee prepared a pamphlet containing general planting suggestions and a list of plants suitable for garden use in Rochester. This was printed by the chamber of commerce and distributed in response to requests. The demand for it was so great that the first edition was quickly exhausted, and a second edition was issued. The educational influence of these publications was undoubtedly very great.

The committee next created an advisory board, and on its recommendation the city was divided into ten districts. One of these districts included the downtown business streets, where, no yards being available for gardens, the dependence was on the window box. In each of the other ten districts a prize was offered for the best gardens on those competing lots that had less than fifty feet of frontage and another prize for the gardens on competing lots having a frontage of fifty feet or more. By this arrangement the small lot, where the work is generally done by the householder himself, was not in competition with the large place, where a trained and paid gardener is likely to be in charge. In the business district also two prizes were offered, one for the general building effect and the other for individual exhibition.

In all cases it was required that competitors must enter their premises in the competition before it began. The responses numbered between 200 and 300, representative of all parts of the city and of all classes of property.

ROBBER THANKS VICTIM.

Sends Back Keepsake and Keeps $500 He Stole From St. Louis Resident.

St. Louis.—The thief who robbed the home of L. L. Whittemore of jewelry valued at $500 mailed a letter to the family. Inclosed was a miniature pair of opera glasses, used as a watch charm. His letter reads:

To Whom It May Concern.—Very sorry to take this little keepsake. Thank you for the other articles. With best wishes. AN OUTCAST.

Fish Makes Long Swim.

London.—A salmon which had been marked and returned to the water at Kintradwel, north of Brora, Sutherlandshire, was caught fifteen days afterward on the Aberdeenshire coast. The minimum distance covered by the fish was 140 miles, and it had lost one and one-half pounds in weight between the date of marking and its recapture.

BIG ROOSTER CRIPPLES MAN.

Resents Intrusion of Angler, Who Was Crossing Barnyard.

Pendleton, Ore.—L. A. McClintock, local implement dealer, is among the wounded and helpless as a result of an encounter with an angry rooster.

While he was crossing through a barnyard near the Furish dam, en route to the river with an angling outfit, a big Buff Cochin rooster, resenting the intrusion, flew at him. Unable to pierce his rubber boots with its beak, the rooster jumped into the air and drove his spurs home just above McClintock's knee, one on each side.

The spurs struck a tendon and crippled him. He was helped to an auto and brought home.

Pushes Junk Cart Miles.

Holton, Kan.—Sherman Crawford, an industrious junk gatherer of this city, loses none of his profits to the railroads. He loads his cart with 800 pounds of material and when weather and roads are good pushes the cart to Topeka. By leaving Holton at 8 o'clock in the morning Crawford can make the thirty-two miles to the capital city by sundown.

SAVED THE DAYLIGHT IN INDIANA THIRTY YEARS AGO

Cement Mills Started at 6 A. M., and Men Got In Ten Hours a Day Even In Winter.

New Albany, Ind.—Germany, Austria and other war rent countries of Europe, which have begun to conserve daylight, are thirty years behind Indiana. A cable dispatch from Berlin recently spoke of the daylight conservation idea as having been adopted there. The tenor of the dispatch created the impression that it was something new, when, in fact, the idea was adopted thirty years ago at the Speeds Cement mills, north of this city.

It was about 1886 when David Cook, manager, who still has charge of the plant, which produces Portland cement, realized it was a sin to waste the fine daylight which permits work at 6 a. m., even on most winter days. He studied the matter, and soon the whistle for going to work sounded at 6 in the morning. It took some time for the men to get used to the change, but now they would not swap back to the old system. They begin an hour earlier and quit an hour earlier, and even during the winter the ten hour day can be made.

The Simplon Pass.

The Simplon pass was a famous highway of travel long before Napoleon constructed the highroad. Milton came home that way from his grand tour, and so did John Evelyn. The latter traveler went in fear of his life, not only expecting avalanches to fall on him, but being apprehensive lest bears and wolves should issue from the caves in the precipices and assail him. The only actual harm which happened, however, was that his companion's dog killed a goat belonging to one of the peasants and that heavy compensation had to be paid—"a pistole," says the diary, "for the goat and ten more for attempting to ride away."

To Make Delicious Date Bread.

Mix one cupful of warm wheatmush, one-fourth cupful of brown sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of butter, then add one-fourth yeast cake, broken in pieces and dissolved in one-fourth cupful of lukewarm water, and two and one-fourth cupfuls of bread flour, once sifted. Toss on a slightly floured board and knead. Return to the mixing bowl, cover and let rise overnight. In the morning cut down and add two-thirds cupful of dates stoned and cut in pieces and two-thirds cupful of chopped English walnut meats. Shape into a loaf, put in buttered bread pan, cover and again let rise. Bake in a moderate oven fifty minutes.—Woman's Home Companion.

CONSTRUCT HOUSE IN OHIO IN TWELVE HOURS

Two Hundred Workmen Complete Structure, Gift to a Bride, While Thousands Look On.

Toledo, O.—Seventy-two carpenters began to build a house from the ground up at 4:30 a. m. At 4 p. m. the same day it was completed in every detail and Mrs. Emma Plessner-McCann was serving tea in it to Mayor Milroy and others.

The house and lot were a wedding present from the Toledo Real Estate board and contractors. Mrs. McCann was Miss Emma Plessner until a few hours before the house was finished, when she became the bride of John J. McCann. She was assistant secretary of the real estate board for several years.

After the carpenter work had progressed a short time plumbers, gas fitters, painters, paper hangers, electricians and other workmen got busy and did their share of the building work within a given time. More than 200 workmen helped build the house. It is a five room house, with a bathroom, costing $4,000. Ordinarily it takes two or three months to finish such a house.

Thousands watched the construction work. Three hundred gallons of buttermilk and a cartload of sandwiches were served.

In addition to the lot and house, built in less than twelve hours, considerable furniture was presented by friends.

FAITH IN DIVINING ROD.

Treasure Hunter Says "Tip" Is Right and Keeps on Digging.

Shreveport, La.—Having discovered evidence of what he believes is buried treasure or a gold mine on a piece of ground on Fairfield avenue and owned by Dr. J. M. Comegys in the most exclusive residence district of the city, a Shreveport contractor named Farmer spent all day and part of a night digging in the plot for hidden wealth. Farmer claims he was led to the spot by a divining rod, and he further maintains that his divining rod hasn't played him false because it leads him to the exact spot every time he moves.

Farmer, with the assistance of three negro helpers, labored far into the night in search of the treasure or mine or whatever it is, and spadeful after spadeful of dirt had been removed without results. Late bulletins from the scene indicated that no treasure had been disclosed as yet, though the hole measured four feet deep and as many feet in width when the search was concluded temporarily.

Shreveport is too far inland to have been the haunt of Captain Kidd or any other of our well known pirates, and the next best guess is that it is a gold mine. Farmer won't quit until he is either convinced to his own satisfaction that his divining rod has pulled a "bone" or that there is really a treasure at the spot.

THE QUIRK TODAY.

"Passers By," a new Equitable five reel feature, starring Charles Cherry, will be shown on the screen at the Quirk Theatre today. C. Hadden Chambers, the noted author, adapted from his novel and play of the same name, the scenario for this picture, which promises to be one of the most effective productions of the year.

The story is charmingly simple, yet it holds the interest from the beginning to end, through the sheer force of its human character, and the vivid glimpses it gives of life at the flood and at its ebb. Mr. Cherry has been surrounded by a superlative cast of photoplay favorites, including Marguerite Skirvin, Mary Charleson, Kate Sarjeanston and Donald Kite. The picture was directed by S. B. V. Taylor who has turned out a remarkably effective and artistic production.

Love the Cornerstone of Real Religious Life, Catholic Men Are Told

"How to make an ideal act of Contrition" was the subject of a short instruction by Father Austin, O. M. C. before the sermon last night at the mission for men of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. This instruction is one of a series by Father Austin under the general head, "A Good Confession." The church was again filled with men and from the number that have gone to the sacraments thus far this week it is apparent that the work of the missionaries is bearing fruit.

"There are several conditions that work for a perfect act of contrition," said the missionary, "The first of these requisites is that it shall be internal, not external. You must be sorry for your sins with your heart, not with your lips. Your contrition must be supernatural,—that is, you must not be sorry for your sins for natural reasons, but because you have offended God, who is all good.

"Your contrition must be universal, it must extend itself to each and every mortal sin. You can not eliminate one single sin in your act of contrition.

"Lastly, it must be supreme. You must will that you shall undergo any other evil rather than offend God again.

"Make a firm purpose of amendment, resolve with an unwavering resolve, never to offend God in the future. Resolve also to avoid persons, places and occasions which lead you into sin. If you do this, your act of contrition will be ideal, and God will really absolve you from your sins."

Love Surpasses Everything.

Father Stephen's text was from the Book of Isais, Chapter 55, "Let the wicked forsake his ways, and the unjust man his course; let him turn to his Lord."

"During the mission thus far" he said, "our sermons have been calculated to arouse fear in your hearts. We will henceforth appeal to you through the presentation of more inviting subjects. Fear has its place, but love far surpasses fear. We have endeavored to arouse in your mind a hatred of sin, and we have pictured its hideousness to you. We now appeal to a nobler virtue.

"Love for God must be the foundation of your faith, and if your repentance is not based upon love, you will soon lapse again into evil ways. Love God as you should, realize that He is your benefactor.

"This evening I wish you to consider the great mercy of God. Let us first consider the manner in which God acts toward man. Review His actions from the beginning until the present time.

"You realize that a man who is hungry wants food more than anything else. A thirsty man is satisfied with a cooling drink of water. A man who has been offended by another seeks to satisfy himself with revenge.

God's Great Patience.

"The world admires one who does not revenge himself upon his enemies, particularly if he pardons his enemy when he is in a position to take his revenge. For example, take the life of King David. Some of us admire him for his strength. We admire his courage, because he offered to fight the giant Goliath single handed. We admire him for his humble penance for his sins. But one act, above all others, proves to us that David was a real man. That occasion was when he went into the tent of his enemy Saul, and found Saul asleep. David could have killed Saul on the spot, and according to the standards of man, he was justified in doing so. But he went away, and left Saul unharmed, and when Saul awoke and realized that David had been there, and had willingly forgiven him his offenses, he wept, bitter tears, and exclaimed, "Thou art more just than I."

"If God acted as we do, where would we be tonight? Where would I be, and you? Perhaps suffering the torments of hell. Because our offenses wound God, they grieve him, the Holy Writ tell us that.

"But how has God acted? Could He not avenge himself upon us if He wished to. But He does not. He gives the sinner time to repent. Go back to the time of the flood, when God had determined to destroy all the men upon the earth for their sins. Did He cause the flood to come sweeping over the earth wiping out everything in its path in a moment? No, he warned the people for 120 years. He sent His prophet, Noah, to preach to the people, and Noah spent 100 years in building his ark, because he preached penance to the people continually. Then when the water finally began to flow, it came gradually, and because of this mercy of God, many doubtless had time to repent before they paid the penalty of their sins.

"What are we to conclude from this? God has also warned us, His voice has been calling us for many years. God is still waiting for us to answer the summons. Let us no longer offend, let us go to Him, He is ready to receive us.

Our Inheritance.

"And how will God receive us? We can see that in the life of Our Savious and in the Holy Writ. Take the parables of the Prodigal son. The prodigal had everything that he wanted upon the earth, and still he was not satisfied. After asking his father for his share of the inheritance, he went into a strange country, and there among evil companions in sin, he squandered his substance, and was soon reduced to want. He worked as a swine-herder, with barely enough to keep him alive, until he decided to go back to his father. And how did his father greet him? He sees him coming afar off and runs to meet him, embraces him, and puts a ring upon his finger, and calls servants to put shoes upon his feet. Then he orders a feast of joy, for he said, "My son who was lost, is found again."

"This parable shows how God will receive His sons. He will put the ring of friendship once more upon your finger, and clothe you with a robe of divine grace. He will restore you once more to your rightful inheritance, in spite of your offenses, if you will only go to Him. But some will say, "My sins are too many." God will forgive them all, if you will but go to Him and ask pardon. He wants the sinner to come, for does He not say, 'There shall be more joy in Heaven over one sinner who does penance, than over the ninety-nine who need not penance.'

"Throughout his entire life Christ sought the company of sinners. He ate with them, associated with them, and conversed with them, at every opportunity. Did He not show us how His Father would receive a sinner?

The Pharisee's Lesson.

"You remember the occasion on which the Jews had caught a woman who was accused of adultery. This crime was punishable by stoning, under the Jewish law. The Pharisees came to Christ and told him of the woman's offenses, and asked Him what to do. Christ answered, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone." And when they had gone, and left Him alone with the poor woman, He said to her, "Go, and sin no more." He forgave her her sins, the law had no force against His mercy.

"Take the case of the woman who was a public scandal, Mary Magdalene. Simon the Pharisee one day invited Christ to dine with him, and Mary entered the house as the Master was seated at the table. She knelt before Him, and washed His feet with her tears, and dried them with her hair. When she anointed Him with ointment. Simon looked on with mingled feelings, thinking that if Christ was a prophet He must know what kind of a woman Mary was. Christ read his thoughts, and said, "Simon, I came into your house, and you did not wash my feet. This woman has washed them with her tears. I say to you, many sins are forgiven her because she has loved much.

"Do not despair of forgiveness. Do not say you are too old in sin for God to forgive you. Look at the last moments of Christ. The thief, who had lived a life of crime for many years, who had been a robber and murderer, asked Christ for forgiveness in his last moments. And Christ said to him, "This day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." The thief was given a full remission of all his sins, and of all the temporal punishment due for his sins, because he asked God for mercy.

"Does not this suffice to encourage us? Nothing can be added. God gives you the assurance that if you turn to Him, leave your evil ways, and love Him. He will gladly pardon you.

"Therefore, I ask you tonight, do penance, and despair not. Confess your sins to the priest, who is God's representative, be truly sorry for your past offenses, and he will pardon you. Go to confession tonight, don't let another day pass. Don't keep God waiting.

"And He will receive you as he did the prodigal. Give that joy to the angels and to God, that joy that comes from the repentance of one sinner. Let Him say again, "My son who was lost has been found again." Leave your evil ways and seek His forgiveness and He will pardon you, Amen."

GRAPPLING FOR FISH FORBIDDEN BY THE LAW.

Complaints have reached game protectors in this county of men who persist in grappling for mullet and an investigation is pursued by Game Protector Quick of Pulaski. Mr. Quick says that the practice must be stopped in his bailiwick or the offenders will be hailed before a magistrate. Grappling for mullet is done with a three-pronged hook instead of the regular single hook used for other fish. The use of such hooks is forbidden by law.

ALL HUNTERS TO PAY SAME LICENSE FEE.

Chief Game Protector Legge has issued the information that the non-resident or alien hunting and trapping license fee, which was formerly $20.50, is now the same as the non-resident taxpayers' hunting and trapping license of $10.50.

The change was accomplished by an amendment passed by the Legislature and signed by Governor Charles S. Whitman, on May 12. The amendment relating to fees is as follows:

"Fees. Said applicant if a resident of the State for over six months and a citizen, shall pay to the clerk countersigning and issuing the license the sum of $1 as a license fee, together with the sum of 10 cents as the fee of the county, city or town clerk for issuing such license, and if a non-resident of the State, or an unnaturalized person or an alien, resident or a non-resident shall pay to the clerk countersigning and issuing licenses the sum of $10 together with the sum of 50 cents to the clerk."

Hunters' licenses are issued any time during the year, but any license issued in 1915 is not good this year, even if it was obtained on December 31st.

ABOUT THE TOWN

Harry Barnhardt, the evangelist of song, who was so successful in organizing a community chorus in this city at the Chautauqua last year that there is a general demand for his return this season, is now engaged in managing the chorus for the Shakespearean pageant in New York this month. Mr. Barnhardt will have entire charge of the singing and has drilled a chorus of 1,000 voices to take part.

As a side-issue, he has organized a smaller chorus which meets every week in one of the uptown high schools in New York city for rehearsal. Last Sunday Mr. Barnhardt and his chorus made their initial appearance in Central Park, and in the New York World Monday, Mr. Barnhardt was congratulated on the performance of the singers. A crowd of about 200 people gathered after the chorus began singing in the Mall, and Barnhardt, with his engaging personality and persuasive talk, soon had the entire assemblage singing as though their lives depended on it. It was unanimously voted, after the impromptu concert, that all those present should meet in the Mall again this Sunday.

Feeling that the regular rehearsals of the band do not afford them sufficient opportunity to improve their work, several members of the Elks' organization have taken to evening practice on their own account, and comfortably seated in Claude E. Guile's large touring car, four or five of the musicians tried out some new numbers Monday night, as Mr. Guile whirled them around the town. The fact that it was raining made no appreciable difference in the harmony, which was much enjoyed by those who happened to be awake at that hour. (One a. m.) The opinions of those who were sleeping are slow in coming in.

Midshipman S. V. White recently addressed a letter to Postmaster A. E. Hoagland, of Plainfield, N. J., asking that the "prettiest girl in town" correspond with him. Only 130 coy maidens answered the summons, and the middie now fears that he will have to hire a secretary. The fact that the young man is located at present in Hong Kong, China, may have given some of the young ladies courage, but now that he has announced his intention of coming home to give some of the hundred-odd the "once-over," it is a safe bet that many of the young ladies will hang out "Not at Home" cards, realizing that perhaps they would not qualify before an uninterested judge. But, on the other hand, he may not be an Adonis, and there are some pretty girls in Plainfield.

The Retailers Association of Auburn has already taken the matter of Wednesday afternoon closing during the summer months under consideration and most of the Auburn stores will inaugurate the half-holiday about June 1 this year. Employes of the Fulton business houses are already looking forward to the summer season, and the matter of half-holidays will probably be brought to the attention of the merchants in the near future. Some of the merchants could afford, for various reasons, to close all day, but that's neither here nor over there.

YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN

birth and yet not be able to make others understand the workings of the Spirit of God on his heart. But when a man has once been born into the Kingdom of God he knows it, his neighbors know it, the community for town in which he lives will know it. It will not be necessary for him to stand upon the street corner calling out to the multitude that pass by: "I have been born again." People will know by his words, by his actions, and by his influence that he has been born again.

Every person knew Martin Luther had been converted when the Reformation began. They knew he had had a strange experience with God. Probably he could not have explained it satisfactorily to the people, but he knew from his own experience that he had had a change of heart.

Look at that poor unhappy wanderer, John Bunyan, wandering through the meadows, his feet wet with the dew, worrying about his sin. He heard two peasant women singing one of the old church hymns as they sat in the door-way of their humble home. Their song touched his heart, he found Jesus Christ, and became one of the staunchest Christians the world has ever known.

The new birth means to be born from above. Though we may not be able to explain it in a satisfactory way to others. Gypsy Smith knew that he had been born from above, although he was unable to explain it to others. He says: "Tell me, then what I wish you could tell me, how Jesus came to my Gypsy tent. Oh, it is such a mystery to me. I wish somebody would fathom the deep and scale the heights and explain it to me. When there was no Bible, when I could not spell my nahe, when I was only a little wandering gypsy boy, with my brother and three sisters and father, without God and without hope in the world—tell me how Jesus came to that old gypsy tent and opened my eyes and made me know He was my Savior and my Lord. Tell me how, for I do not know. But I know He did it."

Mel Trotter knows he has been saved from a drunkard's hell. He might not be able to explain to you in a satisfactory way how the Spirit of God took him down to the front in old Pacific Garden Mission in Chicago, he might not be able to tell you how God took away that appetite for drink, but he knows God did it.

These men have become new creatures because they have experienced the new birth. They have really had an experience with Christ. There is a vast difference between thronging Jesus Christ and having a personal touch with Christ. It is not association that saves, it is contact. I love that hymn, "The touch of His hand on mine—O, the touch of His hand on mine. There is grace and power in the trying hour, in the touch of his hand on mine." Often times we throng Jesus Christ at church suppers and bazaars. Often times we throng Him in the Sabbath school and the church, but thronging Him never saves anyone. It is the personal touch which counts. It is surrendering our wills to the will of God. It is doing what God commands us to do. It is honoring God in our daily walk and conversation. I am not asking what church you are a member of. I am asking, Have you been born again?

The Real Mark

Dr. Torrey tells of a strange experience he had with a man who had come from a saloon. He said: "O. Mr. Torrey, it is the strangest thing. I went into a saloon on Chicago Avenue awhile ago, and ordered a glass of whiskey. I took it up to dirnk, when something came on me. I began to shake; I could hardly hold the glass. I put it down, all in a tremble. Tell me what to do to be saved." Dr. Torrey told him what Jesus told Nicodemus. Probably you are here tonight and you are not a Christian. Influences have been thrown around you to turn you from sin, but you have not yielded because you do not understand everything. Probably you never will understand everything.

God has given you sufficient light and until you use the light which God has given you. He will never give you any more.

Sometimes we hear people make the remark: I am just as good as so-and-so and they belong to the church. There is a vast difference between church membership and Christ-likeness. To belong to the church should be an unmistakable mark that we belong to Jesus Christ, but this is not always true. Some of the best servants the devil has belong to church, but this is no excuse for the rest of us not doing our duty. Your business is to honor God and follow Christ no matter what others do. Some people seem to imagine that they can get along without experiencing the new birth. This is contrary to the teaching of Jesus. In John 10:1 Jesus says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you. He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep." Jesus says: "I am the door of the sheep. All that came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them. I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." Does this teach that we can do just as we please in regard to accepting Christ and experiencing the new birth? What did Jesus tell Nicodemus? He said to him, ye must be born again. Sometimes we get the idea into our heads that only those who have lived impure lives need to accept Jesus Christ as their Savior and experience the new birth. This is a mistaken idea. To whom did Jesus address these words?

God the Only Salvation.
